THE PREFACE.

Ow consit, and how conworthy a choice I have made of my felf, to condertake a worke of this mixture; mine owne reason, though exceeding weake, hath sufficiently resolved me. For had it beene begotten then with my first dawne of day, when the light of common knowledge began to open it selfe to my yonger yeares: and before any wound received, either from Fortune or Time : I might yet well have doubted, that the darke resse of Age and Death would have covered over both It and Mee, long before the performance. For, beginning with the Creation: I have proceeded with the History of the World; and lastly purposed (some few sallies excepted ) to confine my discourse, within this our renowned Hand of Great Brittaine. I confesse that it had better sorted with my dissability, the better part of whose times are runne out in other travailes; to have set together ( as I could) the conjoynted and scattered frame of our English affaires, than of the runiversall: in whome had there beene no other defect, (who am all defect) then the time of the day, it were enough; the day of a tempestuous life, drawne on to the very evening ere I began. But those inmost, and soulepeircing wounds, which are ever aking while vncured with the defire to fatisfiethole few friends, which I have tried by the fire of advertise; the former enforcing, the latter per swading; have caused mee to make my thoughts legible, and my felfe the Subject of every opinion wife or weake.

To the world I prefent them, to which I am nothing indebted: neither baue others that were, (Fortune changing) sped much better in any age. For, Prosperity and Adversity have ever-more tied and contied coulgar affections. And as we see it in experience, That dogs doe alwaies barke at those they know not, and that it is in their nature to accompany one another inthose clamours: so is twich the inconsiderate multitude. Who, wanting that vertue which we call Honesty in all men, and that especially if to GOD which we call Christy in Christian men; condemne, without hearing; and wound, without offence given: led there-onto by vncertaine report only, venocoby, twhich his Maiesty truly acknowledgeth for the Author of all lies. Blame 3000.

No man (saith Siracides) before thou have inquired the matter: Vn-Ecclesived derstand sirst, and then reforme righteously. Rumor, res sine teste, fine indice, maligna, fallax; Rumor is without witnesse, without iudge, malicious and decenueable. This vanity of vulgar opinion it was, that Landridonni gaue St. Augustine Argument to affirme, That he feared the praise of good time, of and men, and detisted that of the enill. And heereinno manhath given a better rule, thenthis of Seneca; Conscientia satisfaciamus, nihil infamam sen de ira. 13 laboremus; sequatur vel mala, dum bene merearis. Let vs satissie our owne consciences, and not trouble our selues with same : be it neuer foill, it is to be despised so we deserue well.

For my selfe, if I have in any thing served my Country, and prised it before my private: the generall acceptation can yeeld me no other profit at this time, than doth a faire Junshine day to a Sea-man after shipwrack, and the contrary. no other harme than an outragious tempest after the port attained. I know that I loft the love of many, for my fidelity towardes Her, whom I must fill bonor in the dust; though further than the defence of Her excellent p.rson, I neuer persequited any man. Of those that did it, and by subat device they did it : He that is the Supreame Judge of all the morld, hath taken the accompt, fo as for this kind of fuffering, I must fay with Seneca Mala opinio, bene

As for other men, if there be any that have made themselves Fathers of thie fame, which bath beene begotten for them. I canneither enuy at such their purchased glory, nor much lament mine owne mishap in that kind; but content my selfeto say with Virgil, Sic, vos non vobis, in many particulars.

To labour other satisfaction, were an effect of phrenaie, not of hope: seeing it is not Truth, but Opinion, that can traualle the world without apaffeport. For were it otherwise; and were there not as many internall formes of the minde, as there are externall figures of men; there were then some possibility, to persuade by the mouth of one Aduocate, euen Equity alone.

But such is the multiplying and extensive vertue of dead Earth, and of that breath giving life which GOD hath cast woon Slime and Dust : as that among those that were, of whom we roade and heare, and among those that are, whom we see and converse with severy one hathreceived a severall picture of face, and eueric one a diverse picture of minde; every one a forme apart, enery one a fancy and cogitation differing there being nothing where in Nature somuch triumpheth, as in dissimilitude. From whence it commeth, that there is found so great diversity of opinions; so strong a contrariety of inclinations; so many natural and connaturall; wife, foolish; manly, and childifh aff Etions, and passions in Mortall Men. For it is not the visible fa-Sbion and shape of plants, and of reasonable Creatures, that makes the differene, of working in the one, and of condition in the other; but the forme in-outward workes of men ( so farre as their cogitations are acted ) give ws whereof to quesse at the rest. Nay, it were not hard to expresse the one by the other, very neare the life: did not craft in many, feare in the most, and the worlds love in all, teach every capacity, according to the compasse it hath, to qualifie and maske over their inward deformities for a time. Though it be allo true, Nemo potest diu personam ferre sicam: cito in naturam suam recidunt, quibus veritas non subest. No man can long continue masked in a counterfeit behauiour; the thinges that are forced for pretences, having no ground of truth, cannot long dissemble their owne natures. Neither can any man ( faith Plutarch ) so change himselfe, but that his heart may be sometime seene at his tongues end.

In this great discord and dissimilitude of reasonable creatures, if wee direct our selves to the Multitude; Omnis honestæ rei malus iudex est vulgus, The common people are cuill Judges of honest things, and whose wisdome ( saith Ecclehastes ) is to bee despised; if to the better fort; euery vnderstanding hath a peculiar indgment, by which it both censureth other men, and valueth it selfe. And therefore vonto mee it will not seeme strange, though I finde these my worthlesse papers torne with Rats: feeing the flouthfull Censurers of all ages, baue not spared to taxe the Reuerend Fathers of the Church, with Ambition; the seuerest men to themselues, with Hypocrifie; the greatest louers of Iustice, with Popularity; and those of the truest valour and fortitude, with vaine-glorie. But of these na- Eccl.c. 11. tures, which lie in wayt to finde fault, and to turne good into euill, seeing with failing, Salomon complained long fince: and that the very age of the world ren-quamrepre ders it every day after other more malitious; I must leave the professors to their easie waies of reprehension, than which there is nothing of more facility.

To me it belongs in the first part of this praface, following the common and approved custome of those who have left the memories of time past to after ages; to give, as neare as I can, the same right to History which they baue done. Yet feeing therein I should but borrow other mens wordes; I will not trouble the Reader with the repetition. True it is, that among many other benefits, for which it hath beene honored; in this one it triumphethouer all humane knowledge, That it hath given vs life in our conderstanding, fince the world it selfe had life and beginning, even to this day yea it bath triumphed ouer time, which besides it nothing but eternity hath trium-Phed over for it hath carried our knowledge over the vast & devouring space of so many thousands of yeares, and given so faire and peircing eies to our minde; that we plainely behould living now, as if we had lived then, that great World, Magni Dei sapiens opus, the wise worke (faith Hermes) of a great GOD, as it was then, when but new to it selfe. By it I say it is, that we live in the very time when it was created: we behold how it was gouerned: how it was covered with waters, and againe repeopled: How Kings and Kingdomes have florished and fallen; and for what vertue and piety GOD made prosperous; and for what vice and deformity he made wretched, both the one and the other. And it is not the least debt which we owe out o History, that it hath made vs acquainted with our dead Ancestors; and, out of the depth and darkenesse of the earth, deliuered os their memory and fame. In a word, wee may gather out of History a policy no lesse wife than eternall; by the comparison and application of other mens fore-passed miseries, with our owne like errours and ill deseruings.

But it is neither of Examples the most lively instructions, nor the words of the wijest men, nor the terror of future torments, that hat he thyet so wrought in our blind and stupisted mindes; as to make vs remember, That the instnite eye and wildome of GOD doth peirce through all our pretences; as to make vs remember, That the instice of GOD doth require none other accuser, than our owne consciences: which neither the faile beauty of our apparent actions, nor all the formallitie, which (to pacific the opinions of men) we put on; can in any, or the least kind, couer from his knowledge. And so much did that Heathen wildome confesse, no way as yet qualified by the knowledge of atrue GOD. If any (suith Eurypides) hauingin his life committed wickednelle, thinke he can hide it from the euerlasting gods,

Torepeat GODS indgements in particular, opon those of all degrees, which have plaied with his mercies; would require a volume apart: for the Sea of examples hath no bottome. The markes, set on private men, are with their bodies cast into the earth; and their fortunes, written onely in the memories of those that lived with them : so as they who succeed, and have not seene the fall of others, doe not feare their owne faults. GODS indgments opporthe greater and greatest, have beene left to posterity; first, by those happy hands which the Holy Ghost hath guided; and secondly, by their vertue, who have guthered the acts and ends of men, mighty and remarkeable in the world. Now to poynt farre off, and to speake of the conversion of Angells in o Deuills, for Ambition: Or of the greatest and most glorious Kings, who have gnamme the grasse of the earth with beasts, for pride and ingratitude towards GOD: Or of that wife working of Pharao, when be flue the Infants of Itrael, ere they had recovered their Cradles. Or of the policy of lezabel, in covering the Murder of Naboth by a triall of the Elders, according to the Law: with many thou fands of the like: what were it other, than to make an hopelesse proofe, that farre-off examples would not be left to the same farr-off respects, as heretofore? For who hath not observed, what labour, practise, perill, bloudshed, and truelty, the Kings and Princes of the world have undergone, exerciled. taken on them, and committed; to make them-selues and their issues maisters of the world? And yet hath Babylon, Persia, Egypt, Syria, Macedon, Carthage, Rome, and the rest, no fruit, flower, grasse, nor leafe, fringing vpon the face of the Earth, of those seedes: No; their every roots and ruines doe hardly remaine. Omnia quæ manu hominum facta funt, vel manu hominum euertuntur, vel stando & durando deficiunt : All that the hand of man can make, is either ouerturnd by the hand of man, or at length by standing and continuing confumed. Thereasons of whose ruines, are diversly given by those that ground their opinions on second causes. All Kingdomes and States have fallen (lay the Politicians) by outward and forraine force, or by inward negligence and dissension, or by a third cause arising from both: Others obferue, That the greatest have sunck downe under their owne weight; of which Liuie hath a touch : co creuit, vt magnitudine laboret fua : Others, That the divine providence (which Cratippus obiected to Pompey ) bath (et do sone the date and period of every estate, before their first foundation and erection. But hereof I will give my selfe a day over to resolue.

For seeing the first bookes of the stollowing story, have undertaken the discourse of the first Kings and Kingdomes: and that it is impossible for the sbort life of a Preface, to trauaile after and over-take farr-off Antiquity, and to iudge of it; I will, for the present, examine what profit bath beene gathered by our owne Kings , and their Neighbour Princes : soho having beheld, both in divine and humane letters, the successe of infidelitie, iniustice, and crueltie; have (not withstanding) planted af-

True it is that the judgements of all men are not agreeable; nor (which is more strange) the affection of any one man stirred cupp a-like with examples of like nature: But every one is touched most, with that which most neerely seemeth to touch his owne private; Or otherwise best suteth with his apprehension. But the indgements of GOD are for ever conchangeable; neither is he wearied by the long processe of time, and won to give his ble sing in one age, to that which he hath curfed in another. Wherefore those that are wise, or whose wisdome, if it be not great, vet is true and well grounded; will bee able to discerne the bitter fruites of irreligious policie, as well among those examples that are found in ages remoued farre from the present, as in those of latter times. And that it may no lesse appeare by euident proofe, than by asseueration, That ill doing hath alwaies beene attended with ill successe; I will here, by way of preface, runne over some examples, which the worke ensuing hath not reached.

Among our Kings of the Norman race, we have no sooner passed over the violence of the Norman Conquest, than we encounter with a fingular and most remarkeable example of Gods instice, upon the children of Henry the first. For that King, when both by force, craft, and crueltie, hee had disposeft, ouer-reacht, and lastly made blind and destroyed his elder Brother Robert Duke of Normandy, to make his owne some Somes Lords of this Land: GOD cast them all, Male and Female, Nephewes and Neeces (Maud excepted) into the bottome of the Sea, with aboue a hundred and fiftie others that attended them; whereof a great many were Noble, and of the King dearely beloued.

To passe ouer the rest, till we come to Edward the Second; it is certain, that after the Murder of that King, the isue of bloud then made, though it had some times of stay and stopping, did againe breake out; and that so often, and in such aboundance, as all our Princes of the Masculine race (very few excepted ) died of the same disease. And although the young yeares of Edward the I hird, made his knowledge of that horrible fact no more then suspitious : yet in that hee afterwards caused his owne Vncle the Earle of Kent to die, for no other offence than the defire of his Brothers redemption, whome the Earle as then supposed to beeliving; (the King making that to be treason in his Vncle, which was indeed treason in him-selfe, had his Uncles intelligence beene true ) this I say made it manifest, that hee was not ignorant of what had past, nor greatly desirous to have had it otherwise;

though he caused Mortimer to die for the same.

This cruelty the secret and onsearchable judgement of GOD revenged, on the Grand-child of Edward the Third: and so it fell out, even to the last of that Line, that in the second or third descent they were all buried under the ruines of those buildings, of which the Mortar had beene tempered with innocent bloud. For Richard the second, who saw, both his Treasurers, his Chancellor, and his Steward, with divers others of his Counsailours, some of them slaughtered by the people, others in his absence executed by his enemies; yet hee aiwaies tooke him-felfe for ouer-wife, to bee taught by examples. The Earles of Huntington and Kent, Montague and Spencer, who thought them-selues as great polititians in those daies, as others have done in these: hoping to please the King, and to secure themfelues, by the Murder of Gloucester; died soone after, with many other their adherents, by the like violent hands; and farre more shamefully then did that Duke. And as for the King him-felfe ( who in regard of many deedes, unsworthy of his Greatnesse, cannot bee execused, as the disauowing him-selfe by breach of Faith, Charters, Pardons, and Patents ) He was in the Prime of his youth deposed; and murdered by his Cofen-germane and wasfall, Henry of Lancaster; afterwards Henry the fourth.

The Preface.

This King, whose Ticle was weake, and his obtaining the Crowne trais terous: who brake Faith with the Lordes at his landing, procesting to intend only the recoverie of his proper Inheritance; brake faith with Richard himselfe; and brake Faith with all the Kingdome in Parliament, to whom he swore shat the deposed King Should live . After that he had enjoyed this Realme some fero yeares, and in that time had beene set opon on all sides by his Subjects, and neuer free from conspiracies and rebellions: he law (if Soules immortall see and discerne any thinges after the bodies death) his Grand-thilde Henrie the first, and his Sonne the Prince, Suddenly, and without mercy, murdered; the possession of the Crowne (for which he had caused (o much blood to be powed out) transferred from his race; and by the Iffues of his Enemies worne and enioyed; Enemies, whom by his owne pra-Etise hee supposed, that he had left no lessa powerlesse, than the successi fion of the Kingdome questionlesse; by entailing the same opon his owne Issues by Parliamene. And out of doubtes humane reason could have judged no other wife, but that these cautious provisions of the Father, seconded by the valour and fignall coeffories of his Sonne Henry the fift, had buried the hopes of every Competitor, under the despaire of al reconquest and recovery. I fay, that humane reason mighes so have judged: were not this passage of Casaubon also true; Dies, hora, momentum, enertendis dominationibus sufficit, que adamantinis credebantur radicibus esse fundata; A day, an houre, a moment, is enough to ouerturne the things, that seemed to have beene founded and rooted in Adamant.

Now for Henrie the fixt, opon whom the great storme of his Grandfathers greenous faults fell, as it formerly had done ropon Richard the Grand-childe of Edward ; although he was generally esteemed for a gentle and innocent Prince; yet as he refused the daughter of Armaignac, of the House of Navarre, the greatest of the Princes of France, to whom hee was affianced (by which match hee might have defended his Inheritance in France) and married the Daughter of Aniou, (by which he loft all that hee had in France) so as in condiscending to the conworthy death of his Vnckle of Glocester, the maine and strong pillar of the house of Lancaster; Hee drew on himselfe and this kingdome the greatest iount-losse & dishonor that euer it sustained since the Norman Conquest. Of whom it may truly be said, which a Counsellor of his owne fpake of Henriethe Third of France, Q'uil estoit vne fort gentil. Prince; mais son reigne est aduenu en vne fort mauuois temps, That he was a very gentle Prince; but his reign happened in a very vnfortunate season. It is true, that Buckingham and Suffolke were the practifers and contrivers of the Dukes death: Buckingham and Suffolke, because the Duke gaue instructions to their authority, which other wife onder the Queen had bin absolute ; the Queene, in respect of her personal wound, spretæque iniuria forma, because Gloucester dissonaded her marriage. But the fruit was answerable to the seed; the successe to the Counsaile. For after the cutting downe of Gloucester, Yorke grew vp fo fast, as hee dared to dispute his right, both by arguments and armes; in which quarrell, Suffolke and Buckingham, with the greatest number of their adherents, were dissolved. And although for his breach of Oath by Sacrament, it pleased God to strike down Yorke: yethis somethe Earle of March, following the plaine path which his Father had troden out, despoyled Henry the Father, and Edward, the Jone, both of their lines and Kingdomes. And what was the end now of that politique Lady the Queene, other then this, That fies lived to behold the wretched ends of all her partakers: that she lived to looke on, while her Husband the King, and her onely sonne the Prince, were he wen in sunder: while the Crowne was fet on his head that did it. Shee lived to fee her selfe despoiled of her Estate, and of her moneables and lastly, her Father, by rendring up to the Crowne of France the Earledome of Prouence and other places, for the payment of Fifty thousand crownes for her ransome, to become a starke beggar. And this was the end of that Sina: 1.19. Sina: 1.19. Sinacides calleth fine, but vnrighteous : for other fruit hath it never yeelded fince the world was.

And now casse ic to Edward the fourthsturne (though after many difficulties) to triumph. For all the Plants of Lancaster pererooted wpp: One onely Earle of Richmond excepted: whome also hee had once bought of the Duke of Britaine, but could not hold him. And yet was not this of Edward such a plantation, as could any many promise it selfe stability. For this Edward the King ( to omit more than many of his other cruelties ) beheld and allowed the flaughter, which Gloucester, Dorset, Haftings, and others, made of Edward the Prince in his owne presence: of which tragicall Actors, there was not one that escaped the judgement of GOD in the same kinde. And He, which ( besides the execution of his brother of Clarence, for none other offence then hee him selfe had formed in his owne imagination ) instructed Gloucester to kill Henry the fixt, his predecessour; taught him also by the same Art to kill his owne sonnes and Successors Edward and Richard. Forthose Kings, which have fold the bloud of others at a low rate; have but made the Market for their owne enemies, to buy of theirs at the fame price. To Edward the fourth succeeded Richard the Third, the greatest Maister in mischeife of all that fore-went him : who although, for the necessity of his Tragedie, hee had more parts to play, and more to performe in his owne person, then all the rest; yet hee so well fitted every affection that playd with him, as if each of them had but acted his owne interest. For he wrought so cumingly wpon the affections of Hastings, and Buckingham, enemies to the Queene and to all her kindred : as hee easily allured them to condiscend, that Rivers and Grey, the Kings Matern Il v ncle and halfe brother, should (for the first ) bee sewered from him : secondly, hee wrought their confent to have them imprisoned, and lastly (for the avoyding of future inconvenience ) to have their heads (evered from their bodies. And having now brought those his chiefe instruments to exercilethat common precept, which the Deuill hath written on every post, rious wends namely, To depresse those whome they had grieved, and to destroy those whom sen: de dem. they had deprest; Hee orged that argument so farre and so forcibly; as nothing but the death of the yong king him/elfe, and of his brother, could fashion the conclusion. For hee caused it to he hammered into Buckinghams head, That, when sower the king, or his brother, should have able yeares to exercise their power; they would take a most seuere revenge of that curelesse wrong, offered to their uncle and brother, Rivers and Grey.

But this was not his manner of reasoning with Hastings, whose fidelity to his Maisters sonnes was without suspect and yet the Diuell, who never dil wades by impossibility, taught him to try him. And so hee did. But when hee found by Caresby, who founded him, that he was not fordable; He first resolved to kill him sitting in councell: wherein having fayled with his (word; He fet the Hangman opon him, with a weapon of more weight. And because nothing eise could move his appetite; He caused his head to be stricken off, before he eate his dinner. A greater judgement of GOD, than this wpon Haitings, I have never observed in any storie. For the selfe same due that the Earle Rivers, Grey, and others, were ( without triall of _ Law, or offence given ) by Hastings advice executed at Pomfret : I fay Hallings him-felfe in the same daie, and (as Itakeit) in the same houre, in the same law lesse manner had his head stricken off in the Tower of London. But Buckingham lived a while longer; and with an eloquent oration per waded the Londoners to elect Richard for their king. And having received the Earldome of Hereford for reward, befides the high hope of marrying his daughter to the Kings onely sonne; after many grieuous vexations of minde, and unfortunate attempts, being in the end betrayed and delivered cop by his trustiest servant; He had his head sewered from his body at Salisbury, without the trouble of any of his Peeres. And what successe had Richard himselfe after all these mischefes and Murders, policies, and counter-policies to Christian religion: and after such time, as with a most mercilesse hand hee had pressed out the breath of his Nephews and Naturall Lords; other than the prosperity of so short a life, as it tooke end, ere himselfe could well looke ouer and discerne it the great outcrie of innocent bloud, obtayning at GODS hands the effusion of his; who became a spectacle of shame and disbonor, both to his friends and enemeis.

This cruell King, Henry the seauenth cut off; and was therein(no doubt) the immediate instrument of GODS instice. Apoliticke Prince hee was if ever there were any, and who by the ingine of his wildome, beat downe and ouerturned as many strong oppositions both before and after hee ware the crowne as ever King of England did: I say by his wisdome, because as he ever left the raines of his affections in the hands of his profit, so he alwaies wayed his condertakings by his abillities, leaving nothing more to hazard than so much as cannot be denied it in all humane actions. Hee had well observed the proceedings of Loys the eleventh, whome hee followed in all that was royall or royal-like, but hee was farre more iust, and begun not their processes whome hee hated or feared by the execution, as Loys did.

Hee could never indure any mediation in rewarding his fervants, and therein exceeding wife, for what so ever him-selfe gave, hee him-selfe receiued backe the thanks and the love, knowing it well that the affections of men (purchased by nothing so reddely as by benefits ) were traynes that better became great Kings, than great subjects. On the contrary, in what so ever hee greeued his subjects, he wisely put it off on those, that he found fit ministers for fuch actions. How-so-euer, the taking off, of Stanles head, who set the Crowne on his, and the death of the young Earle of Warwick, sonne to George D. of Clarence, the was, as the successe also did, that he held somesohat of the errors of his Amesters, for his possession in the first line ended in his grand children, as that of Edward the third and Henry the fourth

Now for King Henry the eight: if all the pictures and Patternes of a mercilesse Prince were lost in the World, they might all againe be painted to the life, out of the story of this King. For how many servants did hee aduance in hast (but for what vertue no man could suspect) and with the change of his fancy ruined againe; no man knowing for what offence? To how many others of more defert gave hee aboundant flowres from whence to gather hony, and in the end of Haruest burnt them in the Hiue? How many wives did hee cut off, and cast off, as his fancy and affection changed ? How many Princes of the bloud (whereof some of them for age could hardly crawle towards the block) with a world of others of all degrees (of whome our common Chronicles have kept the accompt did he execute? Yea, in his very deathbed, and when he was at the point to have given his accompt to GOD for the aboundance of bloud already spilt: He imprisoned the Duke of Norfolke the Father; and executed the Earle of Surrey the sonne; the one; whose desernings he knew not how to value, having never omitted any thing that concerned his owne honour, and the Kings service; the other, never having committed anything worthy of his least displeasure: the one exceeding valiant and aduised; the other, no lese valiant than learned, and of excellent hope. But besides the sorrowes which hee heaped upon the Fatherlese, and widdowes at home: and besides the vaine enterprises abroade, wherein it * thought that bee confumed more Treasure, than all our victorious Kings Kings did in their severall Conquests: what causele se and cruell warres did he make upon his owne Nephero King lames the fift & What Lawes and Wills did he deuile, to establish this Kingdome in his owne is ues ? whing his barpest weapons to cut off, and cut do wne those branches, which sprang from the same roote that him-selfe did. And in the end (not withstanding these his (o many irreligious provisions) it pleased GOD to take away all his orone, without increase; though, for themselves in their severall kindes, all Princes of eminent vertue. For these wordes of Samuel to Agag King of the Amalekites, have beene verified upon many others: As thy sword hath made other women childlesse: so shall thy mother be childlesse among other women. And that bloud, which the same King Henry affirmed, that the cold aire of Scotland had frozen whin the North, GOD bath diffused by the sunshine of his grace; from whence His Maiesty now living, and long to live, is descended. Of whome I may say it truely, That if all the malice of the world were infused into one eie: yet could it not discerne in His life, even to this daie, any one of those foule (puts, by sphich the Consciences of all the forenamed Princes ( in effect ) have beene defiled; nor any droppe of that innocent bloud on the foord of his justice, with which the most that fore-went him , have stayned both their hands and fame. And for this Crowne of England; it may truely be a wowed, That he hatbreceived it even from the hand of GOD, and hath stayed the time of putting it on , how soeuer he were prouoked to hasten it : That Hee neuer tooke reuenge of any man, that fought to put him befide it. That Heerefused the assistance of Herenemies, that wore it long, with as great glory as ever Princesse did, That His Maiesty entred not by a breach, nor by bloud; but by the Ordinary gate, which his owne right (et open; and into which, by a generall lone and Obedience, Hee was received. And how soever His Maiesties praceding title to this Kingdome, was preferred by many Princes ( witnesse the Treaty at Cambray in the yeare, 1559 ) yet hee neuer pleased to dispute it, during the life of that reno woned Lady, his Pradeceffor; no, notwithstanding the intury of not being declared Heire, in all the time of Her long reigne.

Neither ought wee to forget, or neglect our thankefulnesse to GOD for the coniting of the Northerne parts of Brittany to the South, to wit of Scotland to England, which though they were seuered but by small brookes and bancks, yet by reason of the long contine wed warre, and the cruelties exercifed phoneach other, in the affection of the Nations, they were infinitly seuered. This I say is not the least of Gods blessings which His Maichty bath brought with him conto this Land: No, put all our petty greeuances together, and heap them op to their hight, they wil appeare but as a Mole-bil, compared with the Mountaine of this concord, And if all the Historiens fince Verdivel A.S.

then; have acknowledged the oniting of the Red-Rose, and the White, for the greatest happinesse, (Christian Religion excepted) that ever this Kingdome received from GOD, certainely the peace betweene the two Lions of gold and gules, and the making them one, doth by many degrees exceed the former for by it, besides the sparing of our british bloud, heretofore and during the difference so often & aboundantly shed, the state of England is more assured; the Kingdom more inabled to recover her auntient bonor and rights, and by it made more invincible, than by all our former alliances, practices, policies and conquests: It is true that hereof we do not yet finde the effect. But had the Duke of Parma in the yeare 1588, joyned the army which hee commanded with that of Spaine, and landed it on the south coast; and had his Maiefly at the same time declared himselfe against rus in the north: it is eafie to divine what had become of the liberty of England, certainely we would then without murmur have bought this conion at a farre greater prife than it hath fince cost vs.

It is true, that there was never any Common weale or Kingdome in the world, wherein no man had cause to lament. Kings live in the world and not about it. They are not infinite to examine every mans cause, or to releiue every mans wanes . And yet in the latter, (though to his owne preiudice ) His Maielly hath had more compassion of other mens necessiones, than of his owne Coffers. Of whome it may be said, as of Salomon, Dedit Deus Pineimment, Salomoni latitudinem Cordis : Which if other men doenot conderstand insal. 1. K. 4. with Pineda, to be meant by Liberality, but by Latitude of knowledge; yet may it bee better spoken of His Maiesty, than of any King that ever England had; who as well in Divine, as Humane conderstanding, hath exceeded all that fore-went him, by many degrees.

I could fay much more of the Kings Maiesty, without flatterie: did I not feare the imputation of presumption, and withall suspect, that it might befall these papers of mine, (though the losse were little) as it did the Pictures of Queene Elizabeth, made by vonskilfull and common Painters; which by her owne Commandement, were knockt in peeces and cast into the fire. For ill Artists, in setting out the beauty of the externall: and weake writers, in describing the vertues of the internall; doe often leave to posterity, of well-formed faces a deformed memory; and of the most perfect and Princely mindes, amost defective representation. It may suffice, and there needes no other discourse; if the honest Reader but compare the cruell and turbulent passages of our former Kings, and of other their Neighbour-Princes (of whome for that purpose I have inserted this breife discourse) with His Maiesties temperate, revengelesse, and liberall disposition: I say, that if the hone it Reader weigh them iustly, and with an even hand : and withall, but bestow every deformed child on his true Parent; He shall find, that there is no man which hath so iust cause to complaine, as the King him selfe hath.

The Preface.

Now as we have told the successe of the trumperies and cruelties of our owne Kings, and other great personages: so we finde, that GOD is every sphere the same GOD. And as it pleased him to punish the vesurpation. and connaturall cruelty of Henry the first, and of our third Edward . in their Children for many generations : so dealt He with the sonnes of Loys Debonaire, the sonne of Charles the great, or Charlemain. For after suchtime as Debonaire of France, had torne out the eies of Bernard his Nephawithe some of Pepin , the eldest some of Charlemain, and heire of the Empire, and then caused him to die in prison, as did our Henry to Robert his elder brother : there followed nothing but murders vponmurders, poylonings, imprisonments, and civil warre; till the whole race of that famous Emperour was extinguished.

And though Debonaire, after he had rid himselfe of his Nephero by a violent death; and of his Bastard Brothers by aciuill death (hauing inclosed them with sure gard, all the daies of their lives, within a Monasterie) held him selfe secure from all opposition : Yet GOD raised up against him ( which hee suspected not ) his owne sonnes, to vexe him, to inuade him, to take him prisoner, and to depose him; his owne sonnes, with pohome (to satisfie their ambition) hee had shared his estate, and given them Crownesto weare, and Kingdomesto gouerne, during his ownelife. Yeahis eldeft some Lothaire (for hee had foure, three by his first wife. and one by his second; to witt, Lothaire, Pepin, Loys, and Charles) made it the cause of his deposition, That he had vsed violence towards his Brothers and Kinsmen; and that he had suffered his Nephero ( whome hee might have delivered) to be flaine, co quod, faith the Text, fratri-sign Pefquine bus et propinquis violentiam intulerit, et nepotem suum, quem ipse liberare poterat, interfici permiserit. Because hee vsed violence to his Brothers and Kinsmen, and suffred his Nephew to be slain whom he might have delivered.

Yet did hee that which few Kings doe; namely, repent him of his crueltie. For among many other things, which hee performed in the Generall Assemblie of the States, it followes, Post hac autem palam se errasse confellus, & imitatus Imperatoris Theodo/y exemplum, panitentiam Pafa, Widon spontaneam suscepit, tam de his, quam qua in Bernardum proprium nepotem gellerat. After this hee did openly confelle him-selfe to haucerred, and following the example of the Emperour Theodofius hee under-went voluntary penance as, well for his other offences, as forthat which hee had done against Bernard his owne Nephew.

This hee did : and it was praise-worthie. But the bloud that is vniustlyspilt, is not againe gathered up from the ground by repentance. These Medicines, ministred to the dead, haue but dead rewards. I solon a make a

This King, as I have faid, had foure Sonnes. To Lothaire his eldest be gauethe Kingdome of Italy; as Charlemain, his Father, had done to Pepin the Father of Bernard, who was to succeed him in the Empire. To Pepin the second some he gave the Kingdome of Aquitaine: to Loys, the Kingdome of Buier : and to Charles, whome hee had by a second wife, called ludith, the remainder of the Kingdome of France. But this fecond wife, being a Mother-in law to the rest, perswaded Debonaire to cast his Some Pepin out of Aquitaine; thereby to greaten Charles: which, after the death of his some Pepin, he prosequuted to effect, against his Grandchild bearing the same name. In the meane while, being inuaded by his sonne Loys of Bauier, he dies for greife.

Debonaire dead : Loys of Bauier, and Charles afterwards called the bald, and their Nephero Pepin of Aquitaine, ioyne in league against the Emperour Lothaire their eldest Brother. They fight neare to Auxerre the most bloudy battaile that ever was stroken in France: in which, the maruelous losse of Nobility, and men of warre, gaue courage to the Saracens to inuade Italie; to the Hunnes, to fall woon Almaine; and the Danes, to enter woon Normandy. Charles the Bald by treason seizeth woon his Nephew Pepin, kills him in a Cloyster, Carloman rebells against his Father Charles the Bald, the Father burnes out the eies of his some Carloman; Bauire inuades the Emperour Lothaire his Brother, Lothairequits the Empire, Hee is affailed and wounded to the heart by his owne conscience, for his rebellion against his Father and for his other cruelties, and dies in a Monestarie. Charles the Bald the Vncle oppresseth his Nephewes the somes of Lothaire, hee cosurpeth the Empire to the prejudice of Loys of Bauire his elder Brother, Bauiers armies and his sonne Carloman are beaten, hee dies of greife, and the V/urper Charles is poy/oned by Zedechias a lew his Phistian, his sonne Loys le Beque dies of the same drinke. Beque had Charles the simple, and two Bastards, Loys and Carloman, they rebell against their Brother, but the eldest breakes his Neck, the younger is flaine by a wild Bore; the sonne of Bauiere had the same ill desting and brake his neck by a fall out of a Window in (porting with his companions. Charles the grotle becomes Lord of all that the somes of Debonaire held in Germanie, where with not contented, hee inuades Charles the simple, but being for saken of his Nobility, of his wife, and of his onderstanding, hee dies a distracted begger. Charles the simple is held in Wardship by Eudes Maior of the Pallace, then by Robert the Brother of Eudes, and lastly being taken by the Earle of Vermandois, hee is forced to die in the prison of Peron: Loys the some of Charles the simple breakes his Neck in Chafing a Wolfe, and of the two formes of this Loys, the one dies of poyfor, the other dies in the prison of Orleans, after whome Hugh Capet, of anotherrace, and a stranger to the French, makes him-selfe. King.

The Preface.

These miserable ends had the issues of Debonaire: who after hee had once apparrelled iniuftice with authority, his somes and successours tooke op the fashion; and wore that Garment so long without other provision, as when the same was torne from their shoulders, every man despised them as miserable and naked beggers. The wretched successe they had, (sath a learned French-man ) the wes, què en ceste mort il y avoit plus du fait des hommes que de Dieu, ou de la iustice: that in the death of that Prince, to wit of Bernard the sonne of Pepin, the true heire of Charlemaine, men had more medling, than either GOD, or Inflice had.

Butto come nearer home; it is certainethat Francis the first, One of the worthiest Kings (except for that fact) that ever the French-men had, did neuer enion him-selfe; after hee had commended the destruction of the Protestants of Mirandol and Cabrieres, to the Parliament of Prouence, which poore people were there-upon burnt, and murdered; men, weemen, and children. It is true, that the faid King Francis repented him-felfe of thefact, and gaue charge to Henry his sonne, to doe instice - vponthe Murderers; threatning his some with GODS indements, if hee neglected it. But this unseasonable care of his, GOD was not pleased to accept for payment. For after Henry him-felfe was flaine in sport by Montgomerie; we all may remember what became of his foure somes, Francis Charles, Henry, and Hercules. Of which although three of them became Kings!, and were married to beautifull and vertuous Ladies: Yet were they, one after another, cast out of the world, without stock or seed. And not-with-standing their subtility, and breach of faith; with all their Masacres, rupon those of the religion, and great effusion of bloud; the Crowne was fet on his head, whome they all laboured to disolue; the Protestants remaine more in number than euer they were ; and hold to this day more strong cittles than euer they had.

Let vs now fee if GOD be not the same GOD in Spaine, as in England and France. Towards whome we wil looke no further backe than to Don Pedro of Castile: in respect of which Prince, all the Tyrants of Sicil, our Richard the third, and the great Euan Vasilowich of Moscouia, were but pettie ones : this Castilian, of all Christian and Heathen Kings, having beene the most mercilesse. For besides those of his owne bloud and Nobility which hee caused to bee slaine in his owne Court and Chamber, as Sancho Ruis the great Maister of Calatraua, Ruis Gonsales, Alphonso Tello, and Don Iohn of Arragon, whome he cutt in peeces and cast into the streets, denying him Christian buriall: I say besides these, and the saughter of Gomes Manriques, Diego Peres, Alphonio Gomes, and the great commander of Castile; Hee made away the two Infants of Arragon his Cosen-germans, his brother Don Frederick, Don John de la Cerde, Albuquerques, Nugnes de Guzman, Cornel, Cabrera, Tenorio, Mendes de Toledo, Guttiere bis great Treasurer, and all bis Kindred; and a world of others. Neither did he spare his two youngest brothers, innocent Princes: whome after hee had kept in close prison from their Cradles, till one of them had lived fixteene yeares, and the other, four etcene; bee murdered them there. Nay hee spared not his Mother, nor his wife the Lady Blanch of Bourbon. Lastly as he caused the Arch bishop of Toledo, and the Deane, to bee killed of purpose to enion their treasures: so did he put to death Maho-Hife. of Spaine met Aben Alhamar King of Barbarie, with feauen and thirty of his Nobilitie; that came onto him for succour, with a great summe of mony, to levy (by his favour) some companies of souldiers to return withall. Yea he would needs afift the Hangman with his wae hand, in the execution of the old King; in so much as Pope Vrban declared h m an enemie both to GOD and Man. But what was his end? Having beene formerly beaten out of his Kingdome, and re-established by the valour of the English Nation, led by the famous Duke of Lancaster : He was stabbed to death by his younger Brother the Earle of Astramara, who disposses that this Children of their inheritance; sohich, but for the Fathers iniustice and cruelty, had neuer beene in danger of any such thing.

If wee can parallell any man with this King, it must bee Duke Iohn of Burnoigne: who, after his traiterous murder of the Duke of Orleans, caused the Constable of Armagnac, the Chancelour of France, the Bishops of Constance, Bayeux, Eureux, Senlis, Saintes, and other religious and reverend Church-men, the Earle of gran Pre Hector of Chartres, and ( in effect \all the Officers of inflice, of the Chamber of Accompts, Treasurie, and Request, (with fixteene hundred others to accompany them) to bee suddenly and violently staine. Hereby, while hee hoped to governe, and to have mailtred France: Hee was soone after strucken with an axe in the face, French in unit. in the presence of the Dauphin; and, without any leisure to repent his misdeeds, presently slaine. These were the Louers of other mens miseties: and miserie found them out.

Now for the Kings of Spaine, which lived both with Henry the feuenth, Henry the eighth, Queene Mary, and Queene Elizabeth; Ferdinand of Arragon was the first; and the first that layd the foundation of the present Austrian greatnesse. For this King did not content him-selfe to hold Arragon by the cosurpation of his Ancestor; and to fasten thererunto the Kingdome of Castile and Leon, which Isabel his wife held by strong hand, and his assistance, from her own Neece the Daughter of the last Henry: but most cruelly and craftily, without all colour or pretence of right, Hee also cast his owne Neece out of the Kingdome of Nauarre; and, contrarie to faith, and the promise that bee made to restore it, fortified the best places, and so wasted the rest, as there was no meanes left for any army to inuade it. This King I fay, that betrayed also Ferdinand and Frederick Kings of Naples, Princes of bis owne bloud, and by double alliance tied onto him; fold them to the French: and with the same Army, sent for their succour runder Gonsaluo, cast them out; and shared their Kindgome with the French, whome afterwards he most shamefully betrayed.

This wife and politique King, who fold Heauen and his owne Honour, to make bis sonne, the Prince of Spaine, the greatest Monarch of the world: law him die in the flower of his yeares; and his wife great with child, with her pontimely birth, at once and together buried. His eldest daughter married runto Don Alphonso Prince of Portugali, beheld her first husband breake his neck in her presence; and being with child by her second, died with it. A iust indgement of GOD repontherace of John, father to Alphonso, now sobolly extinguished: who had not onely left many disconsolate Mothers in Portugall, by the flaughter of their children; but had formerly flaine, with his owne hand, the some and onely comforte of his Aunt the Lady Beatrix, Duchesse of Visco. The second Daughter of Ferdinand, married to the Arch-Duke Philip, turned foole; and died mad and deprined. His third daughter, bestowed on King Henry the eight, Hee saw cast off by the King: the mother of many troubles in England; and the mother of a Daughter, that in her with apply zeale shed a world of innocent bloud; lost Gallice to the French; and died heart-broken without increase. To conclude : all those Kingdomes of Ferdinand have maisters of a new name; and, by a strange familie are gouerned and possest.

Charles the fift, sonne to the Arch-duke Philip, in whose paine enterprises wpon the French, wpon the Almans, and other Princes and States. To many multitudes of Christian Souldiers, and renowned Captaines, were_ confumed: who gave the while a most perilous entrance to the Turkes, and suffered Rhodes, the Key of Christendome, to bee taken; was in concluhon chaced out of France, and in a fort out of Germany; and left to the French, Metz, Toule, and Verdun, places belonging to the Empire; stole away from Inspurg; and scaled the Alpes by torch-light, pursued by Duke Maurice; having hoped to [wallow vp all those dominions, wherein hee concocted nothing faue his owne disgraces. And having, after the flaughter of so many Millions of men, no one foote of ground in either: Hee crept into a Cloyster, and made himselfe a Pensioner of an hundred Nebel Hill. thousand Duckets by the yeare to his some Philip; from whom he very slow-1.7, fol. 313.

His Sonne againe King Philip the second not satisfied to hold Holland and Zeland (wrested by his Ancestors from laqueline their lawfull Princesse) and to possesse in peace manie other Provinces of the Netherlands: perswaded by that mischeiuous Cardinall of Granuile, and other Romish Tyrants; not onely forgot the most remarkable seruices, done to his Father the Emperor by the Nobility of these countries; not onely forgot the present, made him ropon his entrie, of forty millions of Florens, called the Nouale aide; nor onely forgot, that hee had twice most Hillo: of the Solemnly sworne to the Generall states, to maintaine and preserve their auncient rights, priviledges, and customes, which they had enjoyed conder their thirty and five Earles before him, Conditionall Princes of those Provinces: but beginning first to constraine them, and enthrall them by the Spanish Inquisition, and then to impouerish them by many new deuised and intollerable Impositions; He lastly, by strong hand and maine force, attempted to make him-selfe not onely an absolute Monarch over them, like onto the Kings and Soueraignes of England and France; but Turke-like, to tread runder his feete all their Nationall and fundamentall Lawes, priviledges, and ancient Rights. To effect which, after he had eafily obtained from the Pope a dispensation of his former Oathes (which dispensation was the true cause of all the warre and bloudshed since then and after he had tried what hee could performe, by dividing of their owne Nobility, conder the government of his base fister Margaret of Austria, and the Cardinall Granuile; Hee employed that most mercilesse Spaniard Don Ferdinand Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua, followed with a powerfull army of strange Nations: by whom he first slaughtered that renowned Captaine the Earle of Egmont, Prince of Gauare; and Philip Montmorency Earle of Horn: made away Montigue, and the Marquis of Bergues; and cut off in those have yeares (that Alua gouerned ) of Gentlemen and others, eighteene thousand and fixe hundred, by the hands of the Hangman, befides all his other barbarous murders and massacres. By whose ministery when he could not yet bring his affaires to their wished endes, having it in his hope to worke that by subtlety, which he had failed to perfourme by force: Hee sent for gouernour his bastard brother Don Iohn of Austria; a Prince of great hope, and very gracious to those people. But hee, whing the same papall advantage that his predecessors had done: made no scruple to take Oath whon the Holy Euangelists, to observe the treaty made with the generall states; and to discharge the Low Countries of all Spaniards, and other strangers, therein garrifond. Towards whose Pay and Pasport, the Netherlands strained them-selues to make payment of fixe hundred thousand pounds. Which monies received, He suddenly surprised the Citadells of Antwerp and Nemeures: not doubting (being vnsuspected by the States) to have possess him-selfe of all the maistring places of those Provinces. For whatsoever hee ouertly pretended: Hee held in secret a contrary councell with the Secretarie Escouedo, Rhodus, Barlemont, and others, Ministers of the Spanish tyranny; formerly practifed, and now againe intended. But let us now see the effect and end of this periurie, and of all other the Dukes cruelties. First for him-selfe; after hee had murdered so many of the Nobilitie; executed (as a foresaid) eighteene thousand fine hundred in fixe yeares; and most cruelly slaine Man, Woman, and Childe, in Mecklin, Zurphen, Naerden, and other places : and after hee had confumed fixe and thirtie millions of treasure in sixe yeares: notwithstanding his Spanish want, That hee would suffocate the Hollanders in their owne butter-barrells, and milke-tubbs: Hee departed the country no otherwise accompanied, than with the curse and detestation of the whole Nation; leaving his maisters affaires in a tenfold worse estate, than hee found them at his first arriwell. For Don John, whose haughty conceipt of him selfe over-came the greatest difficulties; though his judgement were our-weake to mannage the least: what wonders did his fearefull breach of faith bring forth, other than the King his brothers iealouse and distrust; with the continely death that seized him, even in the flowre of his youth. And for Escovedo his (harpe-witted Secretarie, who in his owne imagination had conquered for bis Maister both England and the Netherlands; being sent into Spaine eupon some new proiect, He was at the first arrivall, and before any accesse to the King, by certaine Ruffians appointed by Anthony Peres (though by better warrant than his ) rudely murdered in his owne lodging. Lastly, if wee consider the King of Spaines carriage, his counsaile, and successe in this businesse; there is nothing left to the memorie of man more remarkeable. For hee bath paid aboue an hundred Millions, and the lines of aboue foure bundred thousand Christians, for the losse of all those countries; which, for beauty, gaue place to none; and for revenue, didequalibis West Indies: for the loffe of a Nation, which most willingly obeyed him; and who at this day, after forty yeares warre, are in despight of all his forces become free Estates, and farre more rich and powerfull, than they were, when hee first be: gan to impouer ish and oppresse them.

Oh by what plots, by what for swearings, betrayings, oppressions, imprisomments, tortures, poy sonings, and under what reasons of State, and politique subteltie, have these forenamed Kings, both strangers, and of our owne Nation, pulled the vengeance of GOD vponthem selues, vpontheirs, and copon their prudent ministers! and in the end have brought those things to talle for their enemies, and seene an effect so directly contrarie to all their owne counsailes and cruelties; as the one could never have hoped for themselues; and the other neuer have succeeded; if no such opposition had ever beene made. GOD bath faid it and performed it ever : Perdam sapientiam sapientum, I will destroy the wisdome of the wise.

But what of all this? and to what end doe we lay before the eies of the liuing the fal and fortunes of the dead feeing the world is the same that it hath bin; and the children of the present time, wil stil obey their parents? It is in the present time, that all the wits of the world are exercised. To hold the times soe have, we hold all things lawfull; and either we bope to hold them for ever; or at least we hope , that there is nothing after them to bee hoped for.

For as wee are content to forget our owne experience, and to counterfeit the ignorance of our owne knowledge, in all things that concerne our selues; or preswade our selves, that GOD hath given we letters patents to pursue all our irreligious affections, with a non obstante: so wee neither looke behind us what hath beene, nor before us what shall bee. It is true, that the quantitie which wee have, is of the body: wee are by it in med to the earth: we are compounded of earth; and wee inhabit it. The Heavens are high, farr off and on learcheable: wee have lense and feeling of corporal things; and of eternall grace, but by revelation. No meruaile then that our thoughts are also earthlie: and it is lese to bee wondred at, that the words of worthlese men cannot cleanse them; seeing their doctrine and instruction, whose understanding the Holy Ghost wouchsafed to inhabite, haue not performed it. For as the Prophet Esai cryed out long agone, Lord, who hath beleeved our reports? And out of doubt, as Efai complained then for him (elfe and others: so are they lesse beleened, every day after other. For although Religion, and the truth thereof, bee in every mans mouth, yea in the discourse of every woman, who for the greatest num-Paulesofilm ber are but Idolls of vanitie: What is it other than an oniuer (all dissimuchieve, 10. lation? Wee professe that weeknow GOD: but by workes we deny him. For Beatitude doth not confift in the knowledge of divine things, but in a divine life: for the Devills know them better than men. Beatitudo non est divinorum cognitio, sed vita divina. And certainly there is nothing more to bee admired, and more to bee lamented, than the privat contention, the passionate dispute, the personall hatred, and the perpetual warre, masfacres, and murders, for Religion among Christians: the discourse whereof bath fo occupied the World, as it bath well neare driven the practife thereof out of the world. Who would not soone resolve, that tooke knowledge but of the religious disputations among men, and not of their lives which dispute, that there were no other thing in their desires, than the purchase of Heauen; and that the World it selfe were but vsed as it ought, and as an Inne or place, wherein to repose our selves in passing on towards our celestiall habitation? when on the contrary, befides the discourse & outward profession. the foule bath nothing but hypocrifie. Wee are all (in effect) become Comedians in religion: and while we act in gesture and voice, divine vertues, in > Philosophers Materia prima. Neither is it that wisdome, which Salomon defineth to be the Schoole-Mistresse of the knowledge of God, that hath valuation in the world; it is enough that we give it our good word; but the same which is altogether exercised in the service of the World, as the gathering of riches cheifly; by which we purchase and obtaine honour, with the many respects which attend it.

> all the course of our lines wee renounce our Persons, and the parts wee play.

For Charitie, Iustice, and Truth, have but their being in termes, like the

The Preface.

These indeed bee the markes, which (when wee have bent our consciences to the highest ) wee all shoote at. For the obtaining whereof it is true, that the care is our owne; the care our owne in this life, the perill our owne in the future: and yet when we have gathered the greatest aboundance, wee our selues enioy no more thereof, than so much as belongs to one man. For the rest; Hee that had the greatest wisdome, and the greatest ability that euer man had, hath told ous that this is the rule: When goods increase (laith Salomon) they also increase that eat them; and what good com- Failed 5.10. meth to the Owners, but the beholding thereof with their eyes? As for those that denour the rest, and follow ws in faire weather: they againe for sake us in the first tempest of misfortune, and steere away before the Sea and Winde; leaving vs to the malice of our destinies. Of these, among a thousand examples, I will take but one out of Maister Dannet, and wile his owne words: Whilest the Emperour Charles the fift, after the resign nation of his Estates, stayed at Vlushing for winde, to carrie him his last iournie into Spaine; Hee conferred on a time with Seldius, his brother Ferdinands Embatladour, till the deepe of the night. And when Seldius should depart: the Emperour calling for some of his feruants, and no bodie answering him (for those that attended your him, were some gone to their lodgings, and all the rest a sleepe the Emperour tooke vp the candle him-felfe, and went before Seldius to light him downe the staires; and so did, notwithstanding all the refiftance that Seldius could make. And when Hee was come to the staires foot, He said thus vnto him: Seldius, remember this of Charles the Emperour, when hee shalbe dead and gone, That Him, whome thou hast knowne in thy time enuironed with so many mighty Armies, and Guards of fouldiors, thou hast also seene alone, abandoned, and forfaken, yea euen of his owne domesticall servants. &c. 1 acknowledge this change of Fortune to proceed from the mighty hand of GOD; which I will by no meanes goe about to withstand.

But you will say that there are some things else, and of greater regard than the former. The first, is the reverend respect that is held of great men, and the Honour done unto them by all forts of people. And it is true indeed: provided, that an inward love for their instice and piety, accompany the outward worship given to their places and power; without which what is the applanse of the Multitude, but as the outcrie of an Heard of Animals, poho without the knowledge of any true cause, please them-selues with the noyse they make? For seeing it is a thing exceeding rare, to distinguish Vertue and Fortune: the most impious (if prosperous) have ever beene applauded; the most vertuous (if conprosperous) have ever beene despised. For as Fortunes manrides the Horse, so Fortune her-seife rides the Man. Who, when hee is descended and on foote: the Man taken from his Beast, and

The second, is the greatning of our posterity, and the contemplation of their glory whome wee leave behind rs. Certainly, of those which conceive that their foules departed take any comfort therein, it may truly be faid of them, which Lactantius spake of certaine Heathen Philosophers, quod sapientes sunt in re stulta. For when our spirits immortall shalbe once seperate from our more all bodies, and disposed by GOD: there remaineth in them no other ion of their posterity which succeed, than there doth of pride in that stone, which sleepeth in the Wall of a Kings Palace; nor any other forrow for their pouertie, than there doth of shame in that, which beareth up a Beggars cotage. Nesciunt mortui, etiam sancti, quid agunt viui etiam s. Ang decura eorum filij quia animæ mortuorum rebus viuentium non interfunt. The dead though holy, know nothing of the liuing, no, not of their owne children: for the foules of those departed, are not conversant with their affaires that remaine. And if wee doubt of Saint Augustine, wee cannot of lob; who tells is, That wee know not if our fonnes shalbe honorable: neither shall wee vinderstand concerning them, whether they shalbe of low degree. Which Ecclesiastes also confermeth: Man walketh in a shadow, and disquiereth him-selfe in vaine : hee heapeth vp riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them. The liuing (faith hee) know that they shall die, but the dead know nothing at all . for who can shew vnto man, what shalbe after him vnder the Ballo, S. et ... Sunne? Hee therefore accompted it among the rest of worldly vanities, to labour and trauaile in the world; not knowing after death, whether a foole or a wife manshould enjoy the fruits thereof: which made mec ( saith bee) endeauour euen to abhorre mine owne labour. And what can other men hope, whose blessed or sorrowfull estates after death GOD hathreserued? mans knowledge lying but in his hope; seeing the Prophet Esai confesfeth of the elect, That Abraham is ignorant of vs, and Ifrael knowes vs not. But hereof wee are affured, that the long and darke night of death: ( of whose following day we shall never behold the dawne, till his returne that hath triumphed over it ) shall cover vs over, till the world bee no more. After which, and when wee shall againe receive Organs glorified and incorruptible, the feats of Angelicall affections: in so great admirations ball the soules of the bleffed bee exercifed, as they cannot admit the mixture of any second or leffe ion, nor any returne of foregone and mortall affection, towards friends, kindred, or children. Of whome whether wee shall retaine any particular knowledge, or in any fort distinguish them: no man can affure rus; and the wisest men doubt. But on the contrary, If a dinine life retaine any of those faculties, which the foule exercised in a mortall body; wee shall not at that time so divide the loyes of Heaven, as to cast any part thereof on the memory of their felicities which remaine in the World. No; bee their estates greater than ever the World gave, wee shall (by the difference knowne onto rus \euen detest their consideration. And whatsoever comfore shall remaine of all forepast, the same will consist in the charitie, which we exercised living: and in that Pietie, Instice, and firme Faith, for which it pleased the insinite mercy of GOD to accept of vs, and receive vs. Shall we therefore value honour and riches at nothing? and neglect them, as connecessarie and vaine? certainlieno. For that infinite wildome of GOD, which hath distinguished his Angells by degrees: which hath given greater and lesse light, and beautie, to Heavenly bodies: which hath made differences betweene beasts and birds: created the Eagle and the slie, the Cedar and the Shrub: and among stones, given the fairest tincture to the Rubie, and the quickest light to the Diamond; hath also ordained Kings, Dukes or Leaders of the people, Magistrates, Iudges, and other degrees among men. And as honour is left to posteritie, for a marke and enfigne of the vertue and vnderstanding of their Ancestors: so, seeing Siracides preferreth Death be-Sirac.40,v.18 fore Beggerie: and that titles, without proportionable estates, fall under the miserable succour of other mens pittle; I accompt it foolishnesse to condemne such a care: Provided, that worldly goods bee well gotten, and that wee raise not our owne buildings out of other mens ruines. For as Plato doth first preferre the perfection of bodilie health; secondly, the forme and Plu. deleg. 1.2. beautie; and thirdly, Divitias nulla fraude quæfitas : fo Hieremie cries, Woe vnto them that erect their houses by vnrighteousnesse, and Iteras, 13. their chambers without equitie: and Esai the same, Woe to those that spoyle and were not spoyled. And it was out of the true wildome of Salomon, that hee commandethers, not to drinke the wine of vio-Proud 1822. lence; not to lie in wait for bloud; and not to swallow them vp aliue, 20,3789. whose riches wee couet: for such are the wages ( faith her ) of every one that is greedy of gaine.

And if wee could affoord our felues but so much leisure as to consider, That hee which hath most in the world, hath, in respect of the world, nothing in it: and that he which hath the longest time lent him to line in it, hath yet no proportion at all therein, setting it either by that which is past when wee were not, or by that time which is to come in which wee shall abide for euer: Is any, if both, to wit our proportion in the world, and our time in the world, differ not much from that which is nothing it is not our of any excellency of conderstanding, that wee so much prise the one, which hath (in effect ) no being: and so much neglect the other, which bath no ending: coueting those mortall things of the world, as if our solues were therein immortall, and neglecting those things which are immortall, as if our selves after the world were but mortall.

But let every man value his owne wisdome, as hee pleaseth. Let the

ger esteeme all negligent, that have not troden downe their opposites; the Politician, all groffe, that cannot merchandize their faith: Tet when wee

once come in light of the Port of death, to which all winds drive vs; and when by letting fall that fatall Anchor, which can never be weighed againe, the Nauigation of this life takes end : Then it is I say, that our owne cogitations (those and and seuere cogitations, formerly beaten from us by our Health and Felicitie) returne againe, and pay vs to the ottermost for all the pleasing passages of our lines past. It is then that wee crie out to GOD for mercie; then, when our selues can no longer exercise cruelty towards others : and it is onely then, that wee are Aruckenthrough the foule with this terrible fentence, That GOD will not be mockt. For if according to Saint Peter, The righteous scarcely bee saued: and that GOD spared not his Angells: where shall those appeare, who, having ferued their appetites all their lines, presume to thinke, that the seuere commandements of the All-powerfull GOD were given but in sport; and that the short breath, which wee draw when death presseth os, if wee can but fashion it to the found of Mercy ( without any kinde of satisfaction or amends) is sufficient? O quam multi, saith a reuerend Father, Cum hac spe ad eternos labores & bella descendunt : I confesse that it is a great comfort to our friends, to have it said, that wee ended well: for wee all defire (as Balaam did) to die the death of the righteous. But what shall wee call a disesteeming, an apposing, or (indeed) a mocking of GOD; if those men doe not appose him, disesteeme him, and mocke him, that thinke it enough for GOD, to aske him for givenesse at leisure, with the remainder and last drawing of a malitious breath? For what doe they other wife, that die this kinde of well dying, but say onto GOD as followeth? Wee befeech thee O GOD, that all the fallboods, for swearings, and treacheries of our lives past, may be pleasing onto thee; that thou wilt for our sakes ( that have hadno leisure to doe any thing for thine) change thy nature (though imposfible) and forget to bee a just GOD; that thou wilt love injuries and oppresions, call ambition wildome, and charity foolishnesse. For I shall prajudice my sonne (which I am resolved not to doe) if I make restitution; and confesse my selfe to have beene uniust (which I am too proud to doe ) if I deliver the of pressed. Certainly, these wise worldlings have either found out a new GOD; or have made One: and in all likelihood such a Leaden One, as Lewis the eleuenth ware in his Cappe; which, when he had caused any that

euer-living GOD. But of this composition are all the devout lovers of the world, that they feare all that is dweless and ridiculous: they feare the plots and practises of their opposites, and their very whisperings: they feare the opinions of men which beat but woon shadowes: they slatter and for sake the prosperous and comprosperous, be they friends or Kings: yeathey dive conder water, like Ducks, at every pebble slone, that's but throwne towards them by a powerfull hand: and on the contrary, they shew an obstinate and Giant-like valour, against the terrible indgements of the All-powerfull GOD: yeathey shew themselves gods against GOD, and shues towards men whose bodies and consciences are alike rotten.

Now for the rest : If wee truly examine the difference of both conditions; to wit of the rich and mighty, whome wee call fortunate; and of the poore and oppressed, whome we account wretched: wee shall finde the happinesse of the one, and the miserable estate of the other, so tied by GOD to the very instant, and both to subject to interchange (witnesse the suddaine downefall of the greatest Princes, and the speedy oprising of the meanest persons) as the one hath nothing so certaine, whereof to boast; nor the other so uncertaine, whereof to bewaile it selfe. For there is no man so assured of his bonour, of his riches, hearth, or life; but that hee may be deprived of either or all, the very next houre or day to come. Quid vesper vehat, incertum est, What the euening will bring with it, it is vncertaine. And yet yee cannot tell (faith Saint Iames ) what shalbe to morrow. Fama.14. To day he is set vp, and to morrow hee shall not bee found for hee is turned into dust, and his purpose perisheth. And although the aire sobich compasser haduer stie, be very obscure : yet therein wee better difcerne GOD, than in that shinning light which environeth worldly glorie; through which, for the clearenesse thereof, there is no vanitie which efcapeth our fight. And let aduer fitie seeme what it will; to happie men, ridiculous, who make them-selves merrie at other mens misfortunes; and to those under the crosse, greiuous: yet this is true, That for all that is past, to the very instant, the portion remainning are equall to either. For bee it that wee have lived many yeares, and (according to Salomon) in them all wee have reloyced; or bee it that wee baue measured the same length of daies, and therein have ever-more forrowed: yet looking backe from our prefent being, we find both the one and the other, to wit, the ioy and the woe, sayled out of fight; and death, which doth pur fue vs and hold vs in chace, from our infancie, hath gathered it. Quicquid atatis retro eft, mors tenet : What-so-euer of our age is past, death holds it. So as whoso-euer hee bee, to whome Fortune hath beene a seruant, and the Time a friend: let him but take the accompt of his memory (for wee have no other keeper of our pleasures past) and truelie examine what it hath reserved, either of beauty and youth, or foregone delights; what it hath saved, that it might last, of his dearest affections, or of what ever else the amorous Spring-time gaue his thoughts of contentment, then unualuable; and hee shall finde that all the art which his elder yeares have, can draw no other vapour out of these dissolutions, than heavie, secret, and sad highes. Hee Shall finde nothing remaining, but those sorrowes, which grow up after our fust-(pringing youth; over-take it, when it is at a stand; and over-topit cutterly, when it beginnes to wither : in o much as looking backe from the very instant time, and from our now being; the poore, diseased, and captiue creature, hath as little sence of all his former miseries and paines; as hee, that is most blest in common opinion, hath of his fore-passed pleasures and delights. For what-fo-ever is cast behind ous, is inst nothing; and what is to come, deceiptfull hope hath it.. Omnia quæ euentura sunt, incerto iacent. Onely those few black Swannes I must except: who hauing had the grace to value worldly vanities at no more than their owns price; doe, by retayning the comfortable memorie of a well-acted life, behold death without dread, and the grave without feare; and embrace both, as necessary guides to endlesse glorie.

For my felfe, this is my consolation, and all that I can offer to others, that the forrewes of this life, are but of two forts: whereof the one hath respect to GOD; the other, to the World. In the first wee complaine to GOD against our selves, for our offences against bim; and confesse, Ettu iustus es in omnibus quæ venerunt super nos, And thou OLord art iust in all that hath befallen vs. In the second wee complaine to our selves against GOD: as if hee had done ws wrong, either in not giving vs worldly 200ds and honours, answering our appetites: or for taking them againe from vs , having had them ; forgetting that humble and iust acknowledgment of lob, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken. To the first of which Saint Paul hath promised blessednesse; to the second, death. And out of doubt hee is either a foole or rungratefull to GOD, or both, that doth not acknowledge, how meane so-euer his estate bee, that the same is yet farre greater, than that which GOD oweth him : or doth not acknowledge, how sharpe so-ever his afflictions bee, that the same are yet farre lese, than those which are due vnto him. And if an Heathen wife man call the adversities of the world but tributa vivendi, the tributes of living: a wife Christian man ought to know them, and beare them, but as the tributes of offending. He ought to beare them man-like, and resolvedly. not as those whining souldiors doe, qui gementes sequentur imperatore.

For seeing God, who is the Author of all our tragedies, hath written out for vs, and appointed vs all the parts we are to play; and hath not, in their distribution, beene partiall to the most mighty Princes of the world; That gaue winto Darius the part of the greatest Emperour, and the part of the most miserable begger, a begger begging water of an Enemie, to quench the great drought of death ; That appointed Baiazet to play the Gran Signior of the Turkes in the morning, and in the same day shaffoots stoole of Tamerlane ( both which parts Valerian had alfoplayd, beering taken by Sapores) that made Bellilarius play the most victorious Captaine, and lastly the part of a blinde beggar; of which examples many thousands may be produced: why bould other men, who are but of the least wormes, complaine of sorongs? Certainly there is no other account to be made of this ridiculous world, than to resolve, That the change of fortune on the great Theater is but as the change of garments on the leffe. For when on the one and the other, every man weares but his owne skin; the Players are all alike. Now if any man, out of weaknes, prifethe passages of this world other wife (for faieb Petrarch, Magni ingenij est reuocare mentem a fenlibus ) it is by reason of that conhappie fantase of ours, which forgeth in the braines of Man all the miseries (the corporall excepted) whereunto bee is subject: Therein it is, that Misfortune and Adversitie worke all that they porke. For feeing Death, in the end of the Play, takes from all, what seems Fortune or Force takes from any one: it were a foolish madnes in the shipporacke of worldly things, where all finkes but the Sorrow, to faue it. That were, as Seneca (aith, Fortuna fuccumbere, quod triftius elt omnifato, to fall vnder Fortune, of all other the most miserable destinie,

But it is now time to found a retrait; and to defire to be excused of this long pursuit: and withall, that the good intent, which hath moved me to draw the picture of time pass which we call Historic) in so large a table, may also be accepted in place of a better reason.

The examples of divine providence, every where found (the first divine.) Histories being nothing else hus a continuation of such examples) have personaded me to setch my beginning from the beginning of all things; so wit; Creation. For though these two glorious actions of the Almightie be loniare, and las it were linked together, that the one necessary implyes the other: Creation, inferring Providence: (for what Father for saket the child that he hath begotten?) and Providence presupposing Creation) Tet many of those that have seemed to excell in worldly miscome, have gone about to discove this coherence; the Epicure denying both Creation & Providence, but granting that the world had a beginning; the Aristoclian granting Providence, but denying both the Creation and the Beginning.

Now although this doltrine of Faith, touching the Creation in time (for by Faith we understand, that the world was made by the word of God) be too weighty a work for Aristotles rotten ground to beare exp, spon which he bath so the produced the Defences of Fortresses of all his Verball Dostrine: Yet that the necessitie of inspire power, and the worlds beginning, and the impossibility of the contrary even in the indegenent of Naturall reason, wherein hee beleeved, had not better insormed him; it is greatly to bee margailed at. And it is no leffe strange, that those men which are desirous of knowledge (seing Aristotle hath fayled in this maine point; and taught litle other than termes in the rest.) have so retrenche their mindes from the following and overtaking of truth, and so absolutely subjected them-selves to the law of those Philosophicall principles; as all contrary kinde of teaching, in the fearch of causes, they have condemned either for phantasticall, or curious. But doth it follow, that the positions of Heathen Philosophers, are condoubted grounds and principles indeed, because so called ? Or that ipfi dixerunt, doth make them to bee such ? certainly no. But this is true, That where naturall reason bath built anything so strong against it selfe, as the same reason can hardly assaile it, much lesse batter it downe : the same in every question of Nature, and finite power, may bee approved for a fundamentall law of humane knowledg. For faith Charron in his Booke of wisdome, Tout proposition humaine a autant d'authorite que l'autre, fi la railon n' on fait la difference; Euery humane propolition hath equall authoritie, if reason make not the difference, the rest being but the fables of principles. But hereof hope shall the opright and conpartiall judgment of man give a sentence, where opposition and examination are not admitted to give in evidence? And to this purpose it was well said of Lactantius, Sapientiam sibi adimunt, qui sine vllo iudicio inuenta maiorum probant, & ab aliis pecudum more ducuntur: They neglect their owne wisdome, who without any judgment approue the inuention of those that fore-went them; and suffer them-selves, after the manner of Beafts, to beeled by them. By the advantage of which

> But for my selfe, I shall never bee perswaded, that GOD hath shut out all light of Learning within the lanthorne of Aristotles braines : or that it was ever said conto him, as conto Esdras, Accendam in Corde tuo Lucernam intellectus: that GOD hath given invention but to the Heathen; and that they onely have invaded Nature, and found the strength and bottome thereof; the same nature having consumed all her store, and left nothing of price to after-ages. That these and these bee the causes of these and these effects, Time hath taught vs; and not reason: and so hath experience, without Art. The Cheefe-wife knoweth it as well as the Philosopher, that sowre Runnet doth coagulate her milke into a curde. But if wee aske a reason of this cause, why the sowrenesse dothit? whereby it dothit? and the manner how? I thinke that there is nothing to bee found in vulgar Philosophie, to satisfie this and many other like vulgar questions. But

flouth and dullnesse, ignorance is now become so powerfull a Tyrant; as it hath set true Philosophie, Phisick, and Divinity, in a Pillory; and written ouer the first, Contra negantem Principia; ouer the second, Vertus specifica; and ouer the third, Ecclefia Romana.

The Preface.

for the Graffe under his feete, why it should bee greenerather then red, or of any other colour; that could never yet discover the way and reason of Natures working, in those which are farre lesse noble creatures than himlelfe; who is farre more Noble than the Heauens them selues: Man ( faith Salomon) that can hardly differne the things that are upon the salomon, t.g. Earth, and with great labour finde out the things that are before ys; that hack so short a time in the world; as hee no sooner beginnes to learne. than to die; that hath in his memory but borrowed knowledge; in his onderstanding nothing trulie; that is ignorant of the Essence of his owne soule, and which the wifest of the Naturalists ( if Aristotle bee hee ) could never so much as define, but by the Action and effect, telling vs what it workes ( which all men know as well as hee ) but not what it is, which neither hee. nor any else, doth know, but GOD that created it; (for though I were perfect, yet I know not my foule, faith lob. ) Man I fay, that is but an Idiot in the next cause of his owne life, and in the cause of all the actions of his life: will (notwithstanding) examine the art of GOD in creating the World; of GOD who (faith Iob) is so excellent as weeknowe him not; and examine the beginning of the worke, which had end before Job. 26. Man kind had a beginning of being. Hee will disable GODS power to make a world, without matter to make it of. He will rather give the mothes of the Aire for a cause; cast the worke on necessity or chance; bestow the honour thereof on Nature; make two powers, the one to be the Author of the Matter, the other of the Forme; and lastly, for want of a worke-man, haue it Eternall: which latter opinion Aristotle, to make him-selfe the Author of a new Doctrine, brought into the World: and his Sectatours have mainetained it; parati ac coniurati, quos sequuntur, Philosophorum animis inuicus opiniones tueri. For Hermes, who lived at once with, or soone after, Moses, Zoroaster, Musaus, Orpheus, Linus, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, Empedocles, Melitlus, Pherecydes, Thales, Cle-Laft, anthes, Pythagoras, Plato, and many others (whose opinions are exquisiteby gathered by Steuchius Eugubinus ) found in the necessitie of invincible reason, One eternal and infinite Being, to be the Parent of the vniversall. Horum omnium sententia quamuis sit incerta, eodem tamen spectat, vt Prouidentiam vnam esse consentiant : siue enim Natura, siue Ather, fine Ratio, fine mens, fine fatalis necessitas, fine dinina Lex; idem elle quod a nobis dicitur Deus: All these mens opinions ( saith Lastantius ) though vncertaine, come to this; That they agree vpon one Prouidence; whether the same bee Nature, or light, or Reason, or vnderstanding, or destinie, or divine ordinance; that it is the same which we call GOD. Certainely, as all the Rivers in the world, though they have divers rifings, and divers runnings; though they some times bide them-selues for a while -under ground, and seeme to be lost in Sea-like

Lakes; dooks last finder and fall into the great Occan: so after all the searobes that humaine capacitie hath; and after all Philosophicall contemplation and cariositie; in the necessitie of this infinite power; all the reason of man ends and dissolues it selfe.

As for others, and first touching those, which conceive the matter of the World to these been eternall, and that God did not create the world ex nihilo, but ex material præxistente; the Supposition is so weake, as is hardly worth the answering. For (saith Eusebius) Mish videntur qui hoc discippe, cunt, fortunam quoque Deo annectere. They seeme vnto me, which affirme this, to give part of the work to God, and part to Fortune: infomuch as if God had nor sound this first matter by chance, He had neither been Author, nor Farber, nor Creator, nor Lord of the Pniversall. For were the Matter or Chaos, eternall; it thin follows, That either this supposed Matter did se is selfe to God; or God, accommodate himselfe to the matter. For the sirst; it is impossible, that things without sense could proportion themselves to the Workmans will. For the second; it were horrible to conceive of God, That as an Artiscer he applied himselfe, according to the proportion on of Matter which he lighted copon.

But let it be supposed, That this matter had been made by any Power, not Omnipotent, and institutely wise: I would gladly learne bow it came to passe, that the same was proportionable to his intention, that was Omnipotent and infinitely wise; and no more, nor no lesse, than served or see use the forme of the Vnivarsalt. For, had it wanted any thing of what was sufficient; then must it be granted, That God created out of nothing so much of new matter, as served to suise the worke of the World: Or had there beene more of this matter, than sufficed; then did God dissolve & annihilate what socure remained and was superstuois. And this must every easonable some confesse, that is it he same worke of God alone, to create any thing out of nothing, And by the same are and power, and by none other, can those things, or any part of that eternall matter, bee againe changed into Nothing; by which those things, that once were nothing, obtained a beginning of being.

Againe, to say that this matter was the cause of it selfe; this, of allother, were the greatest idiotisme. For, if it were the cause of it selfe at any time; then there was also a time when it selfe was not: at which time of not being, it is easie enough to conceive, that it could neither produce it selfe, nor anything else. For to be, and not to be, at once, is impossible. Nichil autém seiglum precedit, neg; seplum componit corpus. There is nothing that doth pracede it selfe, neither doe bodies compound themselves.

For the rest; Those that saine this matter to be eternall, must of necessitie confesse, that Infinite cannot be separate from Eternitie. And then had infinite cannot be separate from Eternitie.

The Preface.

nite matter left no place for infinite forme, but that the first matter was finite, the forme which it received proves it.. For conclusion of this part; who fo ever will make choyce, rather to beleeve in eternall deformitie, or in eternall dead matter, than in eternall light and eternall life: let eternall death be his reward. For it is a madnesse of that kind, as wanteth tearmes to expresse it. For what reason of man (whome the curse of presumption hath not stupified) hath doubted, That infinite power (of which weekan comprehend but a kind of shadow, quia comprehensio est intra terminos, qui infinito repugnant) bath any thing warting in it selfe, either for matter or forme; yea for as mony worlds (if & b had beene GODS will) as the Sea hath sands? For where the power is without limitation; the porke hath no other limitation, than the workmans will. Yea Reasonit selfe findes it more easie for infinite power, to deliver from it selfe a finite world, without the helpe of matter prepared; than for a finite man, a foole and dust, to change the forme of matter made to his hands. They are Dionyfius his words, Deus in vna existentia omnia præhaber: and againe Esse omnium est ipsa Diuinitas, omne quod vides, & quod non vides; to wit, causaliter, or in better tearmes, non tamquam forma, sed tanquam causa vniuersalis. Neither hath the world vniuersall closed op all of GOD. For the most parts of his workes ( faith Stracides ) are hid. Neither can the depth of his wisdome be opened, by the glorious work of the world: which never brought to knowledge all it can; for then were his infinite power bounded, and made finite. And hereof it comes, I hat we feldome entitle GOD the all-shewing, or the all-willing; but the all-mighty, that is, infinitely able.

But now for shole, who from that ground, That out of nothing nothing is made, inferre the Worlds eternity, and yet not so salinage therein, as those are, which give an eternall being to dead matter: It is true, if the word (nothing) beet aken in the assirance; and the making, imposed evpon Naturall Agents and sinite power; That out of nothing, nothing is made. But seeing their great Doctour Aristotle hims selfe consessed, quod omnes antiqui decreverunt quasi quoddam rerum principium, ipsum infinitum, That all the ancient decree a kind of beginning, and the same to bee infinite: and a little after, more largely and plainely, Principium eius est nullum, sed ipsum omnium cernitur este princi-stua, and in plum, ac omnia complectia cregere: it is strange that this Philosopher, see, as soft with his followers, sould at there make choice out of fallbood, to conclude truely bee said of them all, which him-selfe affirmeth of his imaginary Materia prima, That they are naither quid, quale, nor quantum, and there-fally; than out of truth, to resolue truely. For if wee compare the world I minersall, and all the commeasurable Orbes of Heaven; and those merueisous bodies of the Sunne, Moone, and Statres, with insuring infinitum: it may fore to bring finite (which hath no proportion with infinite) out of infinite ( qui destruit omnem proportionem ) is no wonder in GODS power. And therefore Anaximander, Melissus, and Empedocles, call the world coniuer all, but particulam Vniuer sitatis and infinitatis, aparcell of that which is the universalitie and the infinitie it selfe; and Plato, but a shadow of GOD. But the other, to proue the worlds eternitie, rurgeth this Maxime, That, A futbrient and effectuall cause being granted, an answerable effect thereof is also granted: inferring, that, GOD being for ever a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, the effect of the cause should also have beene for ever; to wit, the world vniversall. But what a strang mockerie is this in so great a Maister, to confesse a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, (to wit an almighty GOD) in bis Antecedent; and the same GOD to be aGOD restrained in his conclusion; to make GOD free in power, and bound in will; able to effect, vnable to determine; able to make all things, and yet mable to make choyce of the time. when? For this were impiously to resolve of GOD, as of naturall neces. htie; which hath neither choice nor will nor onder standing; which can-

Againe he thus disputeth, That every Agent which can worke, and doth not worke: if it after-ward worke, it is either thereto moved by it selfe, or by some-what else; and so it passeth from power to Act. But GOD ( (aith he ) is immouable, and is neither moved by him (elfe, nor by any other; but being alwaies the same doth alwaies worke. Whence he concludeth, if the morld were caused by GOD, that he was for ever the cause thereof; and therefore eternall. The answer to this is very easie, For that GODS perfourming in due time that, which hee euer determined at length to performe, doth not argue any alteration or change, but rather constancie in him. For the same action of his will, which made the world for ever, did also with-hold the effect to the time ordained. To this answere, init selfe fufficient_others adde further, that the patterne or Image of the World may be faid to be eternall: which the Platonick's call, spiritualem mundum; and doe in this fort distinguish the Idaa, and Creation in time. Spiritu. Mar. Fich. de, alis ille mundus, mundi huius exemplar, primumque Dei opus, vita immori. Ani. æquali est Architecto; suit semper cum illo, eritque sumper. Mundus autem corporalis, quod secundum opus est Dei, decedir ian ab opifice ex parte vna, quia non fuit semper; retinet alteram, quia fit femper futurus. That representative, or the intentionall world ((ay they) the sampler of this visible world, the first worke of GOD, was aqually ancient with the Architect; for it was for euer with him, and euer shalbe. This materiall world, the second worke or creature of GOD, doth differ from the worker in this, That it was not from The Preface.

The first point, That it was not for ever, all Christians confesse: The other they understand no other-wise, than that after the consummation of this World, there shalbe a new Heauen and a new Earth; without any new creation of matter. But of the ethings we need not here stand to as gue: though such opinions bee not conworthy the propounding; in this consider ation, of an eternall and onchangeable cause, producing a changeable and temporall effect. Touching which point Proclus the Platonist disputeth, That the compounded effence of the World (and because compounded, therefore distipable ) is continued, and knit to the Diuine Being, by an individuall and inseperable power, flowing from divine unitie; and that the Worlds naturall appetite of GOD sheweth, that the same proceedeth from a goodnesse and understanding divine, and that this vertue, by which the World is continued and knit together, must be infinite, that it may infinitely and euerlastingly continue and preserve the same. Which infinite Vertue, the finite World (faith hee ) is not capable of, but receiveth it from the divine infinite, according to the temporall Nature it hath, successively every moment by little and little; even as the whole Materiall World is not altogether; but the abolished parts are departed by small degrees, and the parts yet to come, due by the fame small degrees succeed; as the shadow of a tree in a River, seemeth to have continued the same a long time in the mater, but it is perpetually renewed, in the continual ebbing and flowing thereof.

But to returne to them, which denying that ever the World had any beginning, withall denie that euer it shall have any end; and to this purpose affirme, That it was never heard, never read, never feene, no not by any reason perceived, that the Heavens have ever suffered corruption; or that they appeare any way the Elder by continuance; or in any fort other-wife than they were; which had they beene subject to finall corruption, some change would have beene discerned in so long a time: To this it is answered, That the little change as yet perceived, doth rather prove their newneffe, and that they have not continued so long; than that they will continue for ever as they are. And if coniecturall arguments may receive an wer by coniectures: it then seemeth, that some alteration may be found. For either Aristotle, Plinie, Strabo, Beda, Aquinas, and others, were groffely Arist. Met. 2. mistaken: or else those parts of the world, lying within the burnt Zone, s rab. 1.3. Beda were not in elder times habitable, by reason of the Sunnes he it; neither is 2.2.700m were the Seas, under the Equinoctiall, nauigable. But weeknow by 1.9.9.102. experience, that those Regions, so situate, are filled with poople, and exceeding temperate; and the Sea, over which were Navigate, passable enough. Wee read also many Histories of deluges: and how that in the time of Phaeton, divers places in the world were burnt up, by the Sunnes violent heat.

euerlasting, and in this it doth agree, that it shall be for euer to come.

But in a Word, this observation is exceeding feeble. For we know it for certaine. That stone-walls, of matter moldring and friable, have stood two, or three ethousand yeares: that many things have beene digged out of the earth, of that depth, as supposed to have beene buried by the generall sloud; without any alteration either of substance or sigure, yea it is believed, and it is very probable, that the gold which is daily found in Mynes, and Rocks, onder ground, was created together with the Earth.

And if bodies elementarie, and compounded, the eldelt times have not invaded and corrupted: what great alteration should wee looke for in Calesiall and quintessential bodies? And yet wee have reason to thinke, that the Sunne, by whose helpe all Creatures are generate, doth not in the leater Ages assist Nature, as here to-fore. We have neither Gyants, such as the eldest world had: nor mighty men, such as the elder world had; but all things in generall are reputed of lesse evertue, which from the Heavens receive evertue. Whence, if the nature of a Preface would permit a larger discourse; wee might easily fetch store of proose; as that this world shall at length have end, as that once it had beginning.

And I see no good aunswer that can bee made to this obiection: If the World were eternall; why not all thinges in the World Eternall? If there were no first, no cause, no Father, no Creator, no incomprehensible wisdome, but that every Nature had been a-like eternall; and Man more rationall than every other Nature: Why had not the eternall reason of Man, provided for his eternal beeing in the World? For if all were equall: why not equall conditions to all? why should beauenly bodies sine for ever; and the bodies of Menrotte and die?

Againe., who was it that appointed the Earth to keepe the center, and gave Order that it should hang in the Aire.: that the Sunne should travaile betweene the Tropick, and never exceed those boundes, nor faile to performe that Progresse one in every yeare. the Moone to live by borrowed light. the strift starres (according to common opinion) to be fashned like Nailes in a Carte-wheele.; and the Planets to wander at their pleasure? Or is none of these had power over other: was is out of Charies and Love, that the Sunne by his perpetuall travaile within those two Circles, hath wished, given light cunto, and releived all parts of the Earth, and the Creatures therein, by turnes and times? Out of doubt, if the Sunne have of his owne accord kept this course in all eternitie. He may justly be called eternal charity, and everlasting Love. The same may be saide of all the Stars: who being all of them most large and cleare fountains of vertue and operation, may also bee called eternall vertues: the Earth may be called eternall patience; the Moone, an eternall borrower and begger; and Man of all other the most miserable, eternally mortall. And what were this, but to beleiue againe in the old Play of the gods? Tea in more gods by Millions, than euer Hestodus dreampt of. But in steed of this mad follie, wee see it well enough with our feeble and mortall eyes: and the eyes of our reason descerne it better; That the Sunne, Moone, Starres, and the Earth, are limited, bounded, and constrained: themselues they have not constrained, nor could. Omne determinatum causam habet aliquam efficientem, quæillud determinauerit, Euery thing bounded hath some efficient cause, by which it is bounded.

Now for Nature; As by the ambiguity of this name, the schoole of Aristotle hath both commended many errours onto vs, and sought also thereby to obscure the glory of the high Moderator of all things, shining in the Creation, and in the governing of the World: so if the best definition bee taken out of the second of Aristotles phisicks, or primo de Calo, or out of the fifth of his Metaphyficks; I (ay that the best is but nominal, and seruing onely to difference the beginning of Naturall motion, from Artificiall: which yet the Academicks open better, when they call it A Seminary strength, infused into matter by the Soule of the World: who give the first place to Prouidence, the second to Fate, and but the third to Nature. Prouidentia (by which they understand GOD) dux & caput; Fatum, medium ex prouidentia prodiens; Natura postremum. But bee it what hee will, or bee it any of these (GOD excepted) or participating of all : yet that it hath choice or onder striding ( both which are necessarily in the cause of all things) no man hath avowed. For this is wnans werable of Lactantius: Is autemfacit aliquid, qui aut voluntatem faciendi habet, aut scientiam; Hee onely can bee said to bee the door of a thing, that hath either will or knowledge in the doing it.

But the will and science of Nature, are in these words truely express by Ficia: in Ficinus. Potest vbique Natura, vel per diuersa media, vel ex diuersis Plat. materijs, diuersa facere: sublara vero mediorum materiarumque diuersitate, vel vnicum vel similimum operatur, neque potest quando adest materia non operati; it is the power of Nature by diuersity of meanes, or out of diuersity of matter, to produce diuers things: but taking away the diuersity of meanes, and the diuersity of matter, it then workes but one or the like worke; neither can it but worke, matter beeing present. Now if Nature made choyee of duersity of matter, to worke all these variable workes of Heaten and Earth; it had then both onderstanding and will; it had counsaile to beginne; teason of sipole; vertue and knowledge to sinish; and power to gouerne: without which, all things had beene but one and the same: all of the matter of Heauen, or all of the matter of Earth. And if we grant Nature Lad, define this will, and this winderstanding, this counsaile, reason, and power: Cur Natura potius, quā Deus nominetut? Why should we then call such a cause rather Nature, than God? God, of whom all men haue notion, and give the Lad, 1.1 de first and highest place to Divine power: Omnes homines notionem dec-

rum habent, omnelq; fummum locum diuino cuidam numini aflignant. And this I fay in flort; that it is a true_effect of true reason in man (were there_no authority more binding thin reason) to acknowledge and adore the first and most jublime power. Vera Philosophia, est a scensus ab his quæ stuunt, & oriuntur, & occidunt, ad ea quæ vere sunt, & semper cadem: True Philosophy, is an ascending from the things which slow,

For the rest; I do also account it not the meanest, but an impiety monstrous, to confound God and Nature . be it but in tearmes. For it is God, that only disposeth of all things according to his owne will; and maketh of one Earth, Vetlels of honor and dishonor. It is Nazure that can dispose of nothing, but according to the will of the matter wherein it worketh. It is God, that commandeth all: It is Nature that is obedient to all. It is God that doth good onto all, knowing and louing the good he doth: It is Nature, that secondarily doth alfo good, but it neither knoweth nor loueth the good it doth. It is God, that bath all things in himselfe: Nature, nothing init selfe. It is God, which is the Father, and hath begotten all things: It is Nature, which is begotten by all thinges; in which it liveth and laboureth; for by it (elfe it existeth not. For Iball we say, that it is out of affection to the earth, that heawy things fall towards it Shall we call it Reason, which doth conduct every River into the salt Sea? Shall we tearme it knowledge in fire, that makes it to consume combustible matter? If it be Affection, Reason, and Knowledge in these: by the same Affection, Reason, and knowledge it is, that Nature worketh. And therfore seeing all things work as they do, (call it by form, by Nature, or by what you please) yet because they work by an impulsion, which they cannot refift; or by a faculty, in fused by the supremest power: we are neither to wonder at, nor to worship, the faculty that worketh, nor the Creature wherein it worketh. But herein lies the wonder. I to him is the worship due, who hath created such a Nature in things, & such a faculty, as neither knowing it selfe, the matter wherein it worketh, nor the vertue and power which it hath ; doth yet work all things to their last and outtermost perfection. And therefore every reasonable man, taking to himselfe for a ground that sobich is granted by all Antiquity, and by al men truly learned that ever the world had; to wit; That there is a power infinit, and eternall, (which also necessity doth prove vonto vs, without the helpe of Faith; and Reason, without the force of Authoritie) all things doe as eafily follow which have beene delivered by divine letters, as the waters of arunning River doe successively pursue each other from the first fountaines.

The Preface.

This much I say it is, that Reasonit selfe hath taught vs: and this is tall 1404 selections the beginning of knowledge. Sapientia pracedit, Religio sequitur: quia rienus. prius est Deum scire, consequens colere, Sapience goes before, Religion followes: because it is first to know God, and then to worship bim. This Sapipience Plato calleth, absoluti boni scientiam, The science of the absolute line de dela good: and another, scientiam retum primarum, sempiternarum, perpetuarum. For Faith (faith Isidore) is not extorted by violence; but by reafon and examples per soaded: fides nequaquam viextorquetur; fed ratione & exemplis fuadetur. I confesse it, That to inquire further, as of the essence of God, of his power, of his Art, and by what meane He created the world: Or of his secret indement, and the causes; is not an effect of Reason: Sed cum ratione infaniunt, but they grow mad with reason, that inquire after it. For as it is no (hame nor dishonor (faith a French Author) de faire arrest au but qu'on nasceu surpatter, For a man to rest himselfe there, where he finds it impossible to passe on further : so what soeuer is beyond, and out of the reach of true reason, It acknowledgeth it to be so; as conderstanding it (elfe not to be infinite, but according to the Name and Nature it hath, finite or non to be a Teacher, that best knowes the end of his own Art. For seeing both Rea-secundum na fon and Necessity teach vs (Reason, which is pars divini spiritus in corpus natu, non cohumanu mersi ) that the world was made by a power infinite; and yet how entil Arif. it was made, it cannot teach us : and feeing the fame Reason and Necessity poster. make vs know, that the same infinit power is every wher in the world; and yet how every where it canot informe os our beleefe hereof is not weakned, but greatly strengthned, by our ignorance; because it is the same Reason that tels vs, That such a Nature cannot be said to be God, that can be in all conceived by man.

I have beene already over long, to make any large discourse either of the parts of the following Story, or in mine owne excuse: especially in the excuse of this or that passage; seeing the whole is exceeding weake and defective. Among the grofest, the vusuable division of the bookes, I could not know how to excuse, had I not been directed to inlarge the building after the foundation was laid, and the first part finished. All menknow that there is no great Art in the deuiding evenly of those things, which are subject to number and measure. For the rest, it sutes well enough with a great many Bookes of this age, which speake to much, and yet say little; Ipfi nobis furto subducimur, We are stollen away from our selues, setting a high price on all that. is our owne. But hereof, though a late good Writer, make complaint, yet shall it not lay hold on me, because I beleeve as he doth ; that who so thinkes himselfe the wisest man, is but a poore and miserable ignorant. Those that are the best men of war, against all the vanities and fooleries of the World, doe alwaies keepe the strongest guards against themselues, to defend them from themselues, from selfe lone, selfe estimation, and selfe opinion.

Generally

Generally concerning the order of the worke, I have onely taken counfaile from the Argument. For of the Allyrians, which after the downefull of Babel take up the first par , and were the first great Kings of the World, there came listle to the wiew of posservity: Jone few enterprises, greater in same than faith, of Ninus and Semiratuis excepted.

It was the flory of the Hebrewes, of all before the Olympiads, that ouercame the confuming difesse of time; and preserved it selfe, from the very cradle and beginning to this day: and yet not so entire, but that the large discourses thereof (to which in many Scriptures wee are referred) are no where found. The Fragments of other Stories, with the actions of those Kings and Princes which shot up bere and there in the same time. I am driven to relate by way of digression: of which we may say with Virg. I.

Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto;
They appeare here and there floring in the great gulfe of time.

To the same first Ages do belong the report of many Inventions therein found, and from them derived to \(\pi\); though most of the Authors Names, have perished in so long a Navigation. For those Ages had their Lawes; they had dwerstip of Government; they had Kingly rule.; Nobilitie., Pollicie in warre; Navigation; and all, or the most of needfull Trades. To speake therefore of these (seing in a generall Historie weshould have left a great deale of Nakednesse, by their omission) it cannot properly bee called a digression. True it is that I have also made many others: which if they shall be layd to my charge. I must east the fault into the great heape of humane error. For seeing wee digresse in all the wayes of our lives: yea seeing the life of man is nothing else but digression; I may the better bee excused, in writing their lives and actions. I am not altogether ignorant in the Lawes of Historic, and of the Kindes.

The same hath beene sught by many; but by no man better, and with greater breuity, than by that excellent learned Gentleman Six Francis Bacon. Christian Lawes are also taught we by the Prophets and Apossels; and every day preacht with order. But wee still make large digressions: yea the teachers themselses do not (in all) keepe the path which they point out to others.

For the rest; after such time as the Persians bid wrested the Empire from the Chaldwans, and had raised a great Monarchie, producing Astions of more importance than were essewhere to be found: it was agreeable to the Order of Story, to attend this Empire; whilest it so shorished, that the affaires of the nations adiogning had reference there—unto. The like observance was to be cused towards the sortiums of Greece, when they againe began to get ground upon the Persians, as also towards the affaires of

The Preface.

Rome, when the Romans grew more mighty than the Greekes.

As for the Medes, the Macedonians, the Sicilians, the Carthaginians, and other Nations, who refifted the beginnings of the former Empires, and afterwards became but parts of their composition and enlargement it seemed best to remember what was knowne of them from ther severall beginnings, in such times and places, as they in their flourishing estates opposed those Monarchies; which in the end swallowed them op. And berein I have followedthe best Geographers: who seldome give names to those small brookes, whereof many, loyned together, make great Rivers; till such time as they become united, and runne in a maine streame to the Ocean Sea. If the Phrase be weake, and the Stile not every-where like it selfe: the first shewes their legitimation and true Parent; the second, will excuse it selfe ropon the Variety of Matter. For Virgill, who worte his Eclogues, gracili auena, evled stronger pipes when he sounded the warres of Aeneas. It may also bee layd to my charge that I we divers Hebrew words in my first bookes and else where: in which language others may thinke, and I my-selfe acknowledge it, that I am altogether ignorant: but it is true, that some of them I finde in Montanus; others in lattaine Carecter in S. Senensis, and of the rest I have borrowed the interpretation of some of my learned friends. But fay I had beene beholding to neither, yet were it not to bee wondred at hauing had a eleven yeares leafure, to attaine the knowledge of that, or of any other | tongue, how-fo-euer, I know that it will bee faid by many, That I might have beene more pleasing to the Reader, if I had written the Story of mine owne times; having beene permitted to draw water as neare the Well-head as another. To this I answere, that who so ever in writing a moderne Historie, shall follow truth too neare the heeles, it may happily strike out bis teeth. There is no Mistresse or Guide, that hath led her followers and seruants into greater miseries. Hethat goes after her too farre off, looseth her fight, and loofeth him-felfe: and hee that walkes after her at a midle diftance; I know not whether I should call that kind of course Temper or Basenesse. It is true . that I never travailed after mens opinions , when I might have made the best ruse of them: and I have now too few daies remayning, to imitate those, that either out of extreame ambition, or extreame cowardise, or both, doe yet, (when death hath them on his shoulders) flatter the world, betweene the bed and the grave. It is enough for me(being in that state I am) to write of the eldest times: wherein also why may it not be said, that in speaking of the past, I point at the present, and taxe the vices of those that are yet lyting, in their persons that are long fince dead; and haus it laid to my charge. But this I cannot helpe, though innocent. And certainely if there be any, that finding themselues spotted like the Tigers of old time, shall finde fault with me for painting them over a new; they shall therein accuse themselves instly, and me fally.

The Preface.

For I protest before the Maiesty of GOD, That I malice no man onder the Sunne. Impossible I know it is to please all : seeing few or none are so pleased with themselves, or so assured of themselves, by reason of their subiection to their private passions; but that they seeme diverse persons in one and the same day. Seneca hath said it, and so doe I: Vnus mihi pro populo erat: and to the same effect Epicurus, Hoc ego non multis sed tibi; or (as it hath fince lamentably fallen out) I may borrow the resolution of an ancient Philosopher , Satis est vnus , Satis est nullus. For it was for the service of that mestimable Prince Henry, the successive hope, and one of the greatest of the Christian World, that I undertooke this Worke. It pleased him to per've some part thereof, and to pardon what was amisse. It is now left to the world without a Maister from which all that is presented, hath received both blows of thanks. Eadem probamus, eadem reprehendimus: hic exitus est omnis iudicij, in quo lis secundum plures datur. But these discourses are idle. I know that as the charitable will judge charitably: so against those, qui gloriantur in malitia, my present aduerfitie hath disarmed mee. I am on the ground already; and therefore have not farre to fall: and for ryling againe, as in the Naturall privation their is no recession to habit; so is it seldome seene in the privation politique. I doe therefore for-beare to stile my Readers Gentle, Courteous, and Friendly, thereby to beg their good opinions, or to promife a second and third volume (which I also intended) if the first receive grace and good acceptance. For that which is already done, may be thought enough; and too much: and it is certaine, let vs claw the Reader with never fo many courteous phrases; yet shall we ever-more be thought fooles, that write foolishly. For conclusion; all the hope I have lies in this, That I have already found more congentle and concurteous Readers of my Louetowards them, and well-descruing of them, than ever I shall doe againe. For had it beene otherwise, I should hardly have had this leisure, to have made my selfe a foole in print.

 That the inuifible God is feene in his Creatures.

O D, whome the wifest men acknowledge to be a power vnessable, and vertue infinite, a light by abundant claritie inussible, an understanding which it selfe can onely comprehend, an essence eternall and spiritual, of absolute purenesse and simplicitie, was and is pleased to make himselfe knowneby the worke of the World: in the wonderfull magnitude whereof, (all which he imbraceth, filleth, and sustained) we behold the image of that glorie, which cannot be meassired, and withall that one, and yet vniuerfall nature, which cannot be defined. In the glorious lights of heauen, we perceive a shadow of his divine counter.

nance, in his mercifull prouifion for all that lue, his manifold goodneffe: and laftly, in creating and making exiftent the world vniuerfall by the abfolute art of his ownered, his power and almightineffe, which power, light, vertue, wifedome, and goodneffe, being all but attributes of one fimple effence, and one God, weein all admire, and in part differnce per fixeulum resaturarum, that is, in the difpolition, order, and varietie of celefiall and terreftriall bodies: terreftriall, in their ftrange and manifold diuerfities; celefiall, in their beautic and magnitude; which in their continuall and con-

In these more then wonderfull workes, God (faith Hugo) speaketh vnto man, and it is true, that these be those discourses of God, whose effects all that line wintesse in themselues; the sensible, in their sensible natures; the reasonable, in their reasonable foules: for according to S. Gregorie, Omnis homo co ipfo quod rationalis condituse ft, ex ip-Sa ratione, illum qui se condidit, Deum effe colligere debet : Eucry man, in that he is reasonable, out of the same reason may know, that he which made him is God. This God all men behold (faith Iob ) which is according to the Fathers, Dominationem illius 10 conspicere in creaturis, to discerne him in his prouidence by his creatures. That God apparet, & in hath beene otherwise seene, to wit, with corporall eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my vnderstanding, grounded on these places of S. Iohn, and S. Paul, Yee haue not heard his voice at any time, neither have yee seene his shape. And againe, Whom neuer man faw, nor can fee. · And this I am fure agreeth with the nature of Gods simplicitie, of which S. Ju-

Therefore faid that learned Cusanus, Mundus vninersus nihil alindest, quam Deus explicatus, The world vniuerfall is nothing else but God exprest. His work, and creation of the world, did most of the ancient and learned 50 Philosophers acknowledge, though by divers termes, and in a different mancrexprest, I meane all those who are entitled by S. Augustine, Summi Philosophi, Philosophers of highest judgement and vnderstanding. Mercurius Trismegislus calleth God, Principium universorum, The originall

And wherein he truly, with St. Paul, casteth vpon God all power; confeshing also, that the world was made by Gods almighty word, and not by hands : verbo, non manibus, fabricatus est mundus. ZOROASTER (whom Heraclitus followed in opinion) tooke the word fire to expresse God by (as in Deuteronomy Deut.4. 24. and in St. Paul it is vied) Omnia ex uno igne genita funt, All things (faith he) are can- Hebr. 12.19. sed or produced out of one fire.

So did Orpheus plainely teach, that the world had beginning in time, from the will of the most high God; whose remarkeable wordes are thus converted. Pindarus the Poet, and one of the wifest, acknowledged also one God, the most high, to be the Father and Creator of all things; Vnus Deus Pater Creator Jummus. Plato calleth God the cause and originall, the nature and reason of the vinuersall, totius rerum natura, caufa, & origo Deus. But hercof more at large hereafter.

Now although the curiofity of some men haue found it superfluous, to remember the opinions of Philosophers, in matters of Dininity: (it being true that the Scrip-20 ture hath not want of any forraine testimony) yet as the Fathers with others excellently learned are my examples herein; so St. Paul himselfe did not despise, but thought it lawfull, and profitable to remember what sever he found agreable to the word of God, among the Heathen, that he might thereby take from them all escape by way of ignorance, God rendring vengeance to them, that know him not as in his Epiftle to Titus he citeth Epimenides against the Cretians, and to the Corinthians, Menander, and in the feuenteenth of the Alts, Aratus, Gr. for Truth (faith St. Ambrofe) by whomsocuer vttered, is of the holy Ghost; Verstas à quocang, dicatur , à spirita fancto est : and lastly let those kinde of men learne this rule, Que facris servicions, prophana non funt, IN othing is prophane that serueth to the wie of holy things.

> ð. III. Of the meaning of In Principio. Genef. I. I.

His visible world of which Moses writeth, God created in the beginning, or first of all: in which (faith Tertulian) tungs beganize to be ning, or first of all: in which the Hebrewes seeke some hidden my-strie, and which in the Iewes Targum is connected by the word Sapiene tia) cannot be referred to succession of time, nor to order, as some men to be the striet of blossoment: but only to creation then. For before that beginning, there was neither primary matter to bee informed, nor forme to informe, nor any being, but the eternall. Nature was not, nor the next parent of time begotten, time properly and naturally taken; for if God had but disposed of matter already in being, then as the word beginning could not bee referred to all things, for must it follow, that the institution of matter proceeded from a greater power then that of God. And by what name shall we then call such a one (faith Lastantine) as exceedeth God in potency: for it is an act of more excellency to make, then to dif-50 pose of things made: whereupon it may be concluded, that matter could not be before this beginning: except we faine a double creation, or allow of two powers, and both infinite, the impossibility whereof scorneth defence. little other then nothing.

But this potentiall and imaginary materia prima cannot exist without forme. Peter Lombard, the Schoole-men, Beda, Lyranus, Comeflor, Toftatus and others, affirme, that it pleased God first of all to create the Empyrean Heauen: which at the succeeding Beds.Hex.Stra- instant (faith Beds and Strabo) hee filled with Ingels. This Empyrean Heauen to Super Genes. Steuchius Eugubinus calleth Dinine claritie, and uncreated: an errour, for which he is sharply charged by Pererius, though (as I conceive) herather failed in the subsequent, 20 when he made it to be a place and the feate of Angels, and iust Soules, then in the former affirmation : for of the first, That God liucth in eternall light, it is written; Mr claritas dinina foule praife thou the Lord, that concreth himselfe with light: and in the Revelation. And non eff lux facta, the City hath no neede of Sunne, neither of the Moone to Shine in it : for the glory of God noncreata, sed did light it. And herein also Iohn Mercer vpon Genesis differeth not in opinion from Eugubinus: for as by heaven created in the beginning, was not meant the inuifible or Appr. 21.23.

But leaving multiplicity of opinion, it is more probable and allowed, that by the wordes, Heaven and Earth, was meant the folid matter and fubstance, aswell of all the Heauens, and Orbes Supernall, as of the Globe of the Earth and Waters, which couered it ouer, (to wit) that very matter of all things, materia, Chaos, possibilitas, sine poffe fieri: Which matter (faith Caluin) was so called, quod totius mundi femen fuerit; Because it was the seede of the Vninersall, an opinion of ancient Philosophers long

That the substance of the waters, as mixt in the body of the earth, is by Moses underflood in the word Earth : and that the Earth, by the attributes of unformed and voide, is described as the Chaos of the ancient Heathen.

O s E s first nameth Heauen and Earth (putting waters but in the third place) as comprehending waters in the word Earth, but afterwards hee nameth them apart, when God by his spirit beganne to distinguish the confused Masse, and (as Basil faith) preparare naturam aque ad facunditatem vitalem; to prepare the nature of water to a vitall fruitfulnesse.

For ynder the word Heanen, was the matter of all heauenly bodies, and natures exprest: and by the name of Earth and Waters, all was meant, what soeuer is vnder the Moone, and subject to alteration. And the word which the Hebrewes call Maim, is not to be understood according to the Latine translation simply, and as specificall water; but the farme more properly fignifieth liquor. For (according to Montanue) Eft anten 4. Mont, denne, Maim liquor ceminus, & huic nomen propter verborum penuriam, Latina lingua plurale numero aquas fecit. For Maim (faith he) is a double liquor, (that is, of divers natures) and this name or word the Latines wanting a voice to expresse it call it in the Plural Aquas. 40 Waters.

This Maffe, or indigested matter, or Chaos created in the beginning was without forme, that is, without the proper forme, which it afterwards acquired, when the Spirit of God had separated the Earth, and digested it from the waters: And the earth Genes. 2. was voide: that is, not producing any creatures, or adorned with any plants, fruits, or flowers. But after the Spirit of God had moved upon the waters, and wrought this indigested matter into that forme, which it now retayneth, then did the earth budde forth the hearbe, which feedeth feede, & the fruitfull tree according to his kinde, and God faw that it was good; which attribute was not given to the Earth, while it was confused, nor to the Heauens, before they had motion, and adornement. God faw that it was 50 good; that is, made perfect; for perfection is that, to which nothing is wanting. Es perfecti Dei perfecta sunt opera, The workes of the perfect God, are perfect.

From this lumpe of imperfect matter had the ancient Poets their invention of Demogorgon: HESIODVS and ANAXAGORAS the knowledge of that Chaos, of which Ouid:

How it is to be understood that the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, and that this is not to be fearched curiously.

Fter the creation of Heauen and Earth, then voide and without forme, the Spirit of God moued vpon the waters. The Seuenty Interpreters vie the word [aper-ferebatur, moued vpon or ouer: incubabat, or fauebat ((aith Hierome) out of Basil, and Basil out of a Syrian Doctor, Equidem non meam tibi , sed viri cuiusdam Syri sententiam recensebo ( faith Basil)

then the Spirit of God moued vpon the waters, and created in them their spirituality, and naturall motion; motion brought forth heat; and heat rarifaction, and subtility of parts. By this Spirit, (which gaue heat and motion, and thereby, operation to energynature, while it moued upon the waters, which were in one indigested lumpe, and Chaos, disposed to all formes alike) was begotten aire: an element, superior, as lighter then the waters, through whose vast, open, subtile, diaphanicke, or transparent body, the light afterwards created might easily transpierce: light, for the excellency thereof, being the first creature which God called good, whose creation immediately followed. This Spirit Chrysoftome calletha vitall Operation, aquis à Deo insitam, ex qua aque non solum motionem, sed & vim procreandi animalia ha- 10 buerint. Hefe waters were afterwards congregated, and called the Sea : and this 20 light afterwards (in the fourth day) gathered and vnited, and called the Sunne, the Organ, and inftrument of created light. For this first and dispersed light did not (as I conceiue) distinguish the night from the dispersed light did not (as I conceive) distinguish the night from the day, but, with a reference to the Sunnes creation, and the vniting of the difperfed light therein. This is proued by these wordes, Let there be lights in the firment, to separate the day from the night; which lights in the firmament of heaven were also made for signes, and for seasons, and for dayes, and for yeares, implying a mozion instantly to follow, by which dayes and yeares are distinguished; after which fucceeded Time, or together with which, that Time (which was the measure of motion) began. For that space of the first three dayes which preceded the Suns crea- 30 tion, or formall perfection, when as yet there was not any motion to be measured, and the day named in the fift verse, was but such a space, as afterwards by the Sunnes motion made a civill or naturall day. And as Waters were the matter of aire, of the firmament, and of the lower and upper waters, and of the feas, and creatures therein: Earth, the matter of Beafts, plants, minerals, and mans body : fo may light (for expression sake) be called the Chaos, or material substance of the Sunne, and other lights of heaven. Howbeit neither the Sunne, nor any thing fenfible, is that light it Lux dicitur, que selfe, que causa est luci dorum, which is the cause that things are light some (though it make se, & omnia viit selfe and all things else visible) but a body most illightned, which illuminate th the fan. in Compend. Moone, by whom the neighbouring Region (which the Greekes call Lether, the 49 sepand exactive place of the supposed Element of fire) is affected and qualified, and by it all bodies liuing in this our aire. For this light Auicenna calleth vehiculum & fomentum omnium caleflium virtutum, & impressionum: the conducter, and preserver, or nourisher of all celeftiall vertues and impressions, nothing descending of heavenly influences, but by the medium, or meanes of light. Ariflotle calleth light, a quality, inherent, or cleaning to a Diaphanous body, Lumen est qualitas inharens Diaphano: but this may be better auouched of the heat, which it transporteth and bringeth with it, or conducteth: Ficin, lib. de Lu- which heat (fay the Platonicks) abeunte lumine residet in subietto, the light being departed doth reside in the subject, as warmth in the aire, though the same be deprived of light. heaven to the earth, nor is it refifted by any hardnesse, because it pierceth through the folid body of glaffe, or other Cristalline matter; and whereas it is withstood by vncleane and vnpure earthy substances, lesse hard and more case to inuade then the former, the same is, Quod obstaculum natura terreum atg, fordidum, non capit candidam Plotin. luminis puritatem: Because an obstacle, by nature, earthy and foule, doth not receive the pure clear nelle of light: alluding to that most divine light, which onely shineth on those mindes, which are purged from all worldly droffe, and humane vncleannesse.

But of this created light, there is no agreement in opinion: neither doe I maruaile to at it, for it cannot be found either in the Fathers, Philosophers, or Schoole-men, or other ancient or latter Writers, that any of them vnderstood either it or themselues therein: all men (to cast off ignorance) have disputed hereof, but there is no man that hath beene taught thereby. Thomas Aquinas (not inferiour to any in wit) as he hath shewed little strength of argument in refuting the opinions of Beda, Hugo, Lom. bard, Lyranus, and others: so is his owne judgement herein; as weake as any mans; and most of the Schoole-men were rather curious in the nature of termes, and more fubtile in distinguishing upon the parts of doctrine already laid downe, then discouerers of any thing hidden, either in Philosophie or Dininity: of whome it may be truly faid, M ihil saptentie odiosius acumine nimio: Nothing u more odious to true wis dome. 20 then too acute fharpneffe. Neither hath the length of time, and the fearch of many learned men, (which the same time hath brought forth and deuoured) resoluted vs, whether this light be fubftantiall, corporall, or incorporall: Corporall they fay it cannot be, because then it could neither pierce the aire, nor those hard, solid, and Diaphanous bodies, which it doth, and yet enery day we see the aire illightened: incorporall it cannot be, because it is sensible : sensible it is, because it sometime affecteth the sight of the eye with offence, and therefore by most of the Fathers so esteemed : others say (as Patricius) that it cannot be matter, because no forme so excellent as it selfe to informe it: neither can it be any accident, which is not separable without the destruction of the subject: for light being taken from the Sunne, the Sunne is no more the Lucida corpora

30 Sunne in existence. Secondly, if light were proceeding from matter and forme, then funt plans for either, or both must be one of these, Lucide or bright, darke or opake, Diaphanous nebris imperuis. or transparent; but darkenesse cannot be parent of light; and things Diaphanous Opaca sunt ple-(being neither light, nordarkeneffe, but capable of either) cannot be the cause of either, and therefore must the matter, or forme, or both, be Lucide and shining. Lucide Transparentia and thining obtayne their to being of the light, and therefore, if we derive this being few Diaphana and thining obtayne their fo being of the light, and therefore, if we derive this being few Diaphana of light from a former, then would the progresse goe on infinitely, and against na- mine of tenebris: ture; and therefore he conclude that light in the Sunne hath his being primarily, dienis & lumiand immediately of it felfe, and is therefore the Sunnes forme, and the forme of all permeanur.

Lucide and shining bodies: but what is taught hereby, let others judge.

But in my understanding, lumen, (which may be Englished by the word Shine) is Scal, Subt. ex. 71. an intentionall Species of that, which may be Englished by Light, and so, this shining which proceedeth from the Sunne, or other lights of heauen, or from any other light, is an image, or intentionall Species thereof; and an intentionall Species may be vnderstood by the example of a redde, or greene colour, occasioned by the shining of the Sunne through redde or greene glasse: for then wee perceive the same colour cast vpon any thing opposite; which reducise or other colour we call the intentional Species of the colour in that glaffe. And againe, as this light, touching his simple nature, is no way yet understood: so it is disputed, whether this light first created be the fame, which the Sunne inholdeth and caffeth forth, or whether it had continuance 50 any longer, then till the Sunnes creation.

But by the most wise and vnchanged order, which God observed in the worke of Genel. i. the world, I gather, that the light, in the first day created, was the substance of the Sunne: for Mofes repeateth twife the maine parts of the vniuerfall; first, as they were vers. 12. created in matter; secondly, as they were adorned with forme: first, naming the Heanens, Heauens, the Earth, the Waters, all confused, and afterward, the Waters congregated, the Earth made dry land, and the Heauens distinguished from both, and beautified. And therefore the Earth, as it was earth, before it was vncouered, and before it was called, Arida, or dry land; and the Waters were waters, before they were congregated and called the Sea, though neither of them perfect, or inriched with their vertuall formes: fo the Sunne, although it had not his formall perfection, his circle, beauty, and bounded magnitude, till the fourth day, yet was the fubstance thereof in the first day (vnder the name of Light) created; and this light formerly dispersed, was in the same fourth day united and set in the sirmament of Heauen : for to Light created in the first day God gaue no proper place or fixation, and therefore the ef- 10 fects named by Anticipation, (which was to separate day from night) were precisely performed, after this light was congregated and had obtained life and motion. Neither did the wisedome of God finde cause why it should moue (by which motion dayes and nights are distinguished) till then: because there was not yet any creature produced, to which, by mouing, the Sunne might give light, heat, and ope-

But after the Earth (distinguished from waters) beganne to budde forth the budde of the hearbe, &c. God caused the Sunne to moue, and (by interchange of time) to visite enery part of the inferiour world; by his heate to stirre vp the fire of generati-Symadmodum on, and to gine activity to the feedes of all natures: For as a King, which comman-20 Rev alpute 6th. deth fome goodly building to bee erected, doth accommodate the fame to that view and end, to which it was ordayned; fo it pleased God (saith Procopius) to command the light to be; which by his all-powerfull word he approved, and approving it difposed thereof, to the vse and comfort of his future creatures.

For it ministreth to men and other creatures all celestiall influences; it diffipateth those sadde thoughts and forrowes, which the darkenesse both begetteth and maintaineth; it discouereth vnto vs the glorious workes of God, and carrieth vp with an Angelicall swiftnesse our eyes vnto heauen, that by the sight thereof, our mindes being informed of his visible meruailes, may continually trauaile to fur- 40 mount these perceived heavens, and to finde out their omnipotent cause and Creatour. Cognitio non quiescit in rebus creatu; Our knowledge doth not quiet it selse in things created. Et ipfa lux facit, vt cetera mundi membre digna fint laudibus, cum fuam bonitatem & decorem omnibus communicet, It is the light, (laith St. AMBROSE) that maketh the other part of the world so worthy of praise, seeing that it selfe communicateth its goodnesse and beauty unto all : of which Ouid out of Orpheus :

Ille ego fum, qui longum metior annum, Omnia qui video, per quem videt omnia mundus, Mundi oculus.

The world discernes it selfe, while I the world behold By me the longest yeares, and other times are told, I the worlds eye.

Lastly, if we may behold in any creature any one sparke of that eternall fire, or any farre-off-dawning of Gods glorious brightnesse, the same in the beauty, motion, and vertue of this light may be perceived. Therefore was God called lux ipfa, and the light by Hermes named lux fancta, and Christ our Saujour faid to bee that light 1011. 1.9. 5 140 which lighteneth enery man that commeth into the world. Yet in respect of Gods incom- 46. prehenlible fublimitie, and puritie, this is also true, that God is neither a minde, nor a Spirit of the nature of other Spirits, nor a light, fuch as can be differred. Deus profe-Elò non mens est, at verò vt sit mens causa est; nec spiritus, sed causa qua spiritus extat; nec lumen, sed causa qua lumen existit. God (faith HERMES in POEMANDRO) certaine-10 ly is not a minde, but the cause, that the minde hath his being; nor spirit, but the cause by which enery (pirit is ; nor light, but the cause by which the light existeth.

So then the Masse and Chaos being first created, void, darke, and imformed, was by the operative Spirit of God pierced and quickned, and the Waters having now received Spirit and motion, refolued their thinner parts into aire, which God illightned the Earth also by being contignat, and mixt with waters (participating the same Gon, 1, 10. diuine vertue) brought forth the budde of the hearbe that feedeth feede, &c. and for a meane and organ, by which this operative vertue might be continued, God appointed the light to be vnited, and gaue it also motion and heat, which heat caused a continuance of those severall species, which the Earth (being made fruitfull by the Spi-20 rit) produced, and with motion begat the time, and times succeeding.

> Fter that the Spirit of God had moved upon the waters, and light was created . God faid . Let there be a firmament in the middeft of the waters, andlet it separate the waters from the waters: that is, those waters which by rarifaction and enaporation were ascended, and those of the Earth

But these waters separate aboue this extension, which the Latine translation calleth firmamentum, for expansum (for so Vatablus, Pagninus, and Iunius turne it) are not the cristalline Heavens, created in the imaginations of men, which opinion Basilius Magnus calleth a childish supposition, making in the same place many learned arguments against this fancie. For the waters aboue the firmament, are the waters in the aire aboue vs, where the same is more solid and condense, which God separated 40 from the neather waters by a firmament, that is, by an extended distance and vast space: the wordes Raquia, which Montanus writeth Raktagh, and Shamaym, being indifferently taken for the heaven and for aire, and more properly for the aire and ether then for the Heauens, as the best Hebricians understand them, quo suprema ac tenuia Mont. nat. bist. ab infimis crasses diducta interfectage distarent, for that whereby the supreme and thinne bo. foliss. dies were placed in distance being seuered and cut off from low and grosse matters : and the waters about the firmament express in the word Maym, are in that tongue taken properly for the waters about the aire, or in the vppermost Region of the same.

And that the word Heauen is vied for the aire, the Scriptures enery where witnesse, as in the bleffings of Toseph, and in the 104. Gen. $1.4.

So as in all the Scriptures of the old Testament throughout, is the word Heauen very often vsed for aire, and taken also hyperbolically for any great heighth, as, Let vs build us a Tower, whose toppe may reach to heaven, &c. and in this very place Basil anoucheth that this appellation of heauen for the firmament, is but by way of similitude : his owne wordes be these, Et vocauit Deus sirmament um calum. Hec appellatio alij quidem proprie accommodatur, buic autem nunc ad similitudinem; And God called the firmament heaven: This appellation (faith Basil) is properly applyed to another (that is, to the Starry Heauen) but to this (that is, to the Firmament deciding the waters) it is imposed by similitude: and if there were no other proofe, that by the firmament was meant the aire, and not the Heauen, the wordes of Moses 10 in the eighth Verse conferred with the same word Firmament in the twentieth, Verse makes it manifest: for in the eight Verse it is written, that God called the firmament, which deuided waters from waters, Heauen; and in the 20. Verse hee calleth the firmament of Heauen, aire, in these wordes: And let the fowle flie wpon the earth in the open firmament of heaven: and what vse there should be of this icye, or cristalline, or waterie heaven, I conceine not, except it be to moderate and temper the heat, which the Primum mobile would otherwise gather and increase: though in very truth, in stead of this helpe, it would adde an vnmeasurable greatnesse of circle, whereby the fwiftnesse of that first Moueable would exceede all possibilitie of beleefe. Sed nemotenetur ad impossibilia, but no man ought to be held to impossibilities; and faith 20 it selfe (which surmounteth the heighth of all humane reason) hath for a forcible conducter the word of truth, which also may be called lumen omnia rationis, & intellectus, the light of all reason and understanding. Now that this supposed first Moueable turneth it selfe so many hundreth thousand miles in an instant (seeing the Scriptures teach it not) let those that can beleeue mens imaginations, apprehend it, for I can not : but of these many heavens, let the Reader, that desireth satisfaction, search Orontius, and of this waterie Heauen, Basilius Magnus in his Hexam. fol. 40. 41. 60. and Matth Beroaldus his second Booke and fixt Chapter. For my selfe I am perswaded, that the waters called the waters about the heanens, are but the clowdes and waters ingendred in the vppermost aire.

A conclusion repeating the summe of the workes in the Creation, which are reduced to three heads : The creation of matter, The forming of it, The finishing

O conclude, it may bee gathered out of the first Chapter of Genesis, that this was the order of the most wife God in the Sod incomprehenfible when there was no other nature, or being, but Gods incomprehenfible when there was no other nature of all things: and in the first that this was the order of the most wise GoD in the beginning, and 40 three daies he diftinguished and gaue to every nature his proper forme;

the forme of leuitie to that which ascended, to that which descended, the forme of gravitie: for he separated light from darkenesse, deuided waters from waters, and gathered the waters under the firmament into one place. In the last three dayes, God adorned, beautified, and replenished the world : he set in the firmament of Housen, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres; filled the Earth with Beafts, the Aire with Fowle, and the Sea with Fifls, giving to all, that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their Species and kindes; to creatures vegetative and growing, their feedes 50 ad salating in themselves; for he created all things, that they might have their being : and the generations of the world are preserved.

CHAP.I.S.10.

That nature is no Principium perfe, nor forme the giver of being: and of our ignorance, how fecond causes should have any proportion with their effects.

Nd for this working power, which we call Nature, the beginning of motion and reft, according to Arifolde, the fame is nothing elfe, but the firength and faculty, which God hath infuled into euery creature, having no other felfe-ability, then a Clocke, after it is wound by by a motion and reft, according to Ariflotle, the same is nothing else, but the

For asit is Gods infinite power, and euery-where-prefence (compaffing, embracing, and piercing all things) that giveth to the Sunne power to draw vp vapours; to vapours to be made cloudes; cloudes to contayne raine, and raine to fall: so all second and instrumentall causes, together with Nature it selfe, without that operative facultie which God gave them, would become alto-30 gether filent, vertueleffe, and dead: of which excellently ORPHEVS; Per te viref- Natura chim;

Of Fate; and that the Starres have great influence: and that their operations may diversly be prevented or furthered.

Nd, as of Nature, fuch is the dispute and contention concerning Fate or Destinie, of which the opinions of those learned men that have written thereof, may be fafely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an incuitable necessity, and made it more generall, and vniuerfally powerfull then it is, by giving it dominion over the minde of man.

An errour of the Chaldeans, and after them of the Stoicks, the Pharifees, Prifcillianists, the Bardilanists, and others, as Basil, Augustine, and Thomas have observed: 40 but, that Fate is an obedience of fecond causes to the first, was well conceived of Hermes, and Apuleius the Platonist. Piotinus out of the Astronomers calleth it a disposition from the acts of celestiall Orbes, vnchangeably working in inferiour bodies, the fame being also true enough, in respect of all those things, which a rationall minde doth not order nor direct. Ptolomie, Seneca, Democritus, Epicurus, Chrylippus, Empedocles, and the Stoicks, some of them more largely, others more strictly, ascribe to Fate a binding and ineuitable necessity, and that it is the same which is spoken and determined by God (quod de vnoquog, nostrûm fatus est Deus) and the definite lot of all living. And certainely it cannot be doubted, but the Starres are instruments of farre greater vse, then to give an obscure light, and for men to gaze on after Sunne set: it being manifest, that the diversity of seasons, the Winters, and Sommers, more hot and cold, are not fo vicertained by the Sunne and Moone alone, who alway keep one and the same course, but that the Starres haue also their working therein.

taines, to cold earth, to plants and stones, Minerals, and to the excrementall parts of the baself liuing creatures, why should wee robbe the beautifull Starres of their working powers? for feeing they are many in number and of eminent beauty and magnitude, we may not thinke, that in the treasury of his wisedome who is infinite, there can be wanting (cuen for euery starre) a peculiar vertue and operation; as euery hearbe, plant, fruit, and flower, adorning the face of the Earth bath the like. For as these were not created to beautifie the earth alone, and to couer and shadow her dufly face, but otherwise for the vse of man and beast, to feede them and cure them; so were not those vicountable glorious bodies set in the firmament, to no other end, to then to adorne it, but for instruments and organs of his divine providence, so farre as it hath pleased his just will to determine. Origen vpon this place of Genesis, Let there Gen. 150 belight in the firmament, &c. affirmeth that the Starres are not causes (meaning perchance binding causes) but are as open bookes, wherein are contained and set downe all things what focuer to come; but not to be read by the eyes of humane wisedome: which latter part I beleeue well, and this faying of Syracides withall. That there are Eccl, 42, 6.32. hidde yet greater things then thefe be, and we have feene but a few of his workes. And though, for the capacitie of men, we know somewhat, yet in the true and vttermost vertues of hearbs and plants, which our felues fow and fet, and which grow under our feete, we are in effect ignorant; much more in the powers and working of cele-

20 stiall bodies: for hardly (faith SALOMON) can we different the things that are upon the wift, 16, earth, and with great labour finde we out those things that are before vs: who can then inuestigate the things that are in heauen? Multum est de rebus calestibus aliquid cognoscere: Aistote, It is much to know a little of heavenly things. But in this question of Fate, the middle course is to be followed, that as with the Heathen we doe not binde God to his creatures, in this supposed necessity of destinie, so on the contrary we doe not robbe those beautifull creatures of their powers and offices. For had any of these second causes despoiled God of his prerogatiue, or had God himselfe constrained the minde and will of man to impious acts by any celestiall inforcements, then fure the impious excuse of some were instifiable; of whom St. A VG VS TINE. Impia peruersitate in ma Aug. 20, Super

Where we reprehend them of eaill deedes, they againe with wicked peruer seneffe urge, that rather the Authour and Creatour of the Starres, then the doer of the enill is to be accused.

But that the Starres and other celestiall bodies incline the will by mediation of the fensitiue appetite, which is also stirred by the constitution and complexion, it cannot be doubted. Corpora calestia (faith DAMASCENE) constituunt in nobis habitus, complexiones, & dispositiones, The heavenly bodies (saith he) make in vs habits, complexions, and dispositions: for the body (though Galen inforce it further) hath vindoubtedly a Gal. l.mor.an. kinde of drawing after it the affections of the minde, especially bodies strong in hu- sequence 40 mour, and mindes weake in vertues: for those of cholericke complexion are subject to anger, and the furious effects thereof; by which they fuffer themselues to be transported, where the minde hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vaffailes, not her Masters. And that they wholly direct the reasonlesse minde I am resolued: For all those which were created mortall, as birds, beasts, and the like are left to their naturall appetites, ouer all which, celeftiall bodies (as instruments and executioners of Gods prouidence) haucabfolute dominion. What we should judge of men, who little differ from beafts, I cannot tell: for as he that contendeth against those inforcements, may easily master or resist them: so who so ever shall neglect the remedies by vertue and pictic prepared, putteth himselfe altogether under the power 50 of his sensuall appetite; Vincitur fatum si resistas, vincit si contempseris : Fate will be o Quint.

uercome, if thou resist it, if thou neglect, it conquereth. But that either the Starres or the Sunne haue any power ouer the mindes of men immediately, it is abfurd to thinke, other then as aforefaid, as the same by the bodies temper may be effected. ad vitam ipfam mouet, & nutrit, & auget, & perficit : The light of the Sunne (faith Saint AVCVSTINE) helpeth the generation of Sensible bodies, moueth them to life, and nourifieth, augmenteth, and perfecteth them: yet still as a Minister, not as a Master: Bonus quidem est Sol, in ministerio, non imperio; The Sunne is good to serue, not to sway (faith St. Ambrofe.) And St. Avgvstine : Deus regit inferiora corpora per superiora; Godruleth the bodies below by those abone, but he anoucheth not that superiour bodies have rule ouer mens minds, which are incorporeall.

But howfoeuer we are by the Starres inclined at our birth, yet there are many things both in nature and art, that encounter the same, and weaken their operation: and Ariflotle himselfe confesseth, that the heavens doe not alwaies worke their of- 10 fects in inferiour bodies, no more then the fignes of raine and wind doc alwaies come to passe. And it is divers times seene, that paternall vertue and vice hath his counter-working to these inclinations. Est in Inuencis patrum virtus; In the young offforing the fathers vertue is, and so the contrary, patrum vitia: and herein also there is often found an enterchange; the Sonnes of vertuous men, by an ill constellation become inclinable to vice, and of vitious men, to vertue.

Egregia est soboles, seclerato nata parente.

A worthy fonne is borne of a wicked father.

But there is nothing (after Gods referued power) that so much setteth this art of influence out of square and rule, as education doth: for there are none in the world fo wickedly inclined, but that a religious instruction and bringing vp may fashion anew, and reforme them; nor any fo well disposed, whom (the raines being let loose) the continual fellowship and familiaritie, and the examples of dissolute men may not corrupt and deforme. Vessels will ener retaine a sauour of their first liquor: it being equally difficult either to cleanse the minde once corrupted, or to extinguish the fweet fauour of vertue first received, when the minde was yet tender, open, and casily seasoned; but where a fauourable constellation (allowing that the Starres incline 30 the will) and a vertuous education doe happily arriue, or the contrarie in both, thereby it is that men are found so exceeding vertuous or vitious, heaven and earth (as it were) running together, and agreeing in one: for as the feedes of vertue may by the art and husbandry of Christian counsaile produce better and more beautifull fruit, then the strength of selfe nature and kinde could have yeelded them; so the plants apt to grow wild, and to change themselues into weedes, by being set in a soile sutable, and like themselves, are made more vnsauoury and filled with poyson. It was therefore truly affirmed, Sapiens adiuuabit opus astrorum, quemadmodum agricola terra naturam; Awise man assisteth the worke of the Starres, as the husbandman helpeth the nature of the foile. And Ptolomie himselfe confesseth thus much, Sapiens, & omnta fa- 40 pientis medici dominabuntur astris , A wife man , and the ominous art of wife Phylitian shall prevaile against the starres. Lastly, we ought all to know, that God created the flarres, as he did the rest of the Vniuersall, whose influences may be called his reserued and vnwritten lawes. But let vs confider how they binde: euen as the lawes of mendoe; for although the Kings and Princes of the world haue by their lawes decreed, that a theefe and a murderer shall suffer death; and though their ordinances are daylie by Judges and Magistrates (the Starres of Kings) executed accordingly, yet these lawes doe not deprive Kings of their naturall or religious compassion, or binde them without prerogative, to fuch a feuere execution, as that there should be nothing left of libertie to judgement, power, or conscience: the Law in his owne nature being no other then a deafe Tyrant. But feeing that it is otherwise, and that Princes (who ought to imitate God in all they can) doe fometimes for causes to themselves knowne, and by mediation, pardon offences both against others and themselues, it were then impious to take that power and libertic from God himselfe, which his Substitutes enioy; God being mercy, goodnesse, and charitie it selfe. Otherwise that example of prayer by our Sauiour taught. And let us not be leade un- Matt.6. :3. to temptation, but deliver vs from evill, had beene no other but an expense of wordes and time; but that God (which only knoweth the operation of his owne creatures truly) hath affured vs, that there is no inclination or temptation fo forcible, which our humble prayers and delires may not make frustrate, and breake asunder : for were it (as the Stoicks conceive) that Fate or Destinie, though depending upon eternall power, yet being once ordered and disposed, had such a connexion and immutable dependencie, that God himfelfe should in a kinde haue shut vp himfelse therein. 10 How milerable then were the condition of men (faith St. AVGVSTINE) left altogether

And if this strength of the Starres were so transfer'd, as that God had quitted vnto them all dominion ouer his creatures; be he Pagan or Christian that so beleeueth, the only true God of the one, and the imaginarie Gods of the other would thereby be despoiled of all worship, reuerence, or respect.

And certainely, God which hath promised vs the reward of well-doing, which Christhimselfe claimed at the hands of the Father (I have finished the works which thou 100,18.4. gauest me to doe.) And the same God, who hath threatned vnto vs the forrow and torment of offences, could not contrary to his mercifull nature be so vinust, as to bind 20 vs incuitably to the destinies, or influences of the Starres, or subject our soules to any imposed necessitie. But it was well said of Plotinus, that the starres were significant, but not efficient, giuing them yet something lesse then their due; and therefore as I doe not confent with those, who would make those glorious creatures of God vertueleffe : fo I thinke that we derogate from his eternall and absolute power and prouidence, to ascribe to them the same dominion ouer our immortall soules, which they have over all bodily substances, and perishable natures: for the soules of men, louing and fearing God, receive influence from that divine light it felfe, whereof the Sunnes claritie, and that of the Starres is by Plato called but a shadow. Lumen est Pl. pol. 6. umbra Dei, & Deus est lumen luminis, Light is the Dadow of Gods brightnesse, who is the Ficin. in 1.7. pol 30 light of light. But to end this question, because this Destinie, together with Prouidence, Prescience, and Predestination are often confounded, I thinke it not impertinent to touch the difference in a word or two, for every man hath not observed it, Rescience, or fore-knowledge (which the Greekes call Prognosis, the Latines precognitio, or prescientis) considered in order and nature (if we may speake of God after the manner of men) goeth before Prouidence: for God fore-knew all things, before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and Prescience is no other then an infallible fore-knowledge. For what soeuer our selves fore-know, except the same be to fucceede accordingly, it cannot be true that we fore-know it. But this Prescience of God (as it is Prescience only) is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding : neither doth Gods fore-knowledge impose any necessity, or binde. For in that we fore-know that the Sunne will rife, and fet; that all men borne in the world shall die againe; that after Winter, the Spring shall come; after the Spring Sommer and 50 Haruest, and that according to the seucrall seedes that we sow, we shall reape seucrals forts of graine, yet is not our fore-knowledge the cause of this, or any of these: neither doth the knowledge in vs binde or constraine the Sunne to rife and set, or men to die; for the causes (as men perswade themselues) are otherwise manifest and knowneto all. The eye of man (faith BOETIVS) beholdeth those things subject to sense, as they are; the eye seeth that such a beast is a horse, it seeth men, trees, and houses, &c. but our feeing of them (as they are) is not the cause of their so being, for such they be in their Boëiius de cofol. owne natures. And againe out of the same Authour. Dinina providentia rebus generandis non imponit necessitatem, quià si omnia euentrent ex necessitate, pramia bonorum, & pana malorum periret, Divine providence (faith he) imposeth no necessity upon things that are to exist, for if all came to passe of necessity, there should neither be reward of good, nor punishment of eaill.

d. XIII.

Of Providences

Ow Providence (which the Greekes call Pronois) is an intellectuall knowledge, both fore-feeing, caring for, and ordering all things, and doth not only behold all past, all present, and all to come, but is the cause of their so being, which Prescience (simply taken) is not : and therefore Prouidence by the Philosophers (faith St. Augustine) is deui-

ded into Memorie, Knowledge, and Care: Memorie of the past, Knowledge of the present, and Care of the future; and we our selues account such a man for prouident, 20 as, remembring things past, and observing things present, can by judgement, and comparing the one with the other, prouide for the future, and times fucceeding. That fuch a thing there is as Prouidence, the Scriptures energywhere teach vs. Moles in many places, the Prophets in their prædictions: Christ himselfe and his Apostles affure vs hereof; and, belides the Scriptures, Hermes, Orpheus, Euripides, Pythagoras, Plato, Plotinus, and (in effect) all learned men acknowledge the Prouidence of God: yea the Turks themselves are so consident therein, as they refuse not to accompanie and visit each other, in the most pestilent diseases, nor shunne any perill whatsocuer, though death therein doe manifestly present it selfe.

The places of Scripture prouing Prouidence, are so many, both in generall and 30 particular, as I shall neede to repeate but a few of them in this place. Sing vato Ged (faith DAVID) which couereth the heavens with cloudes, and prepareth raine for the earth. and maketh the graffe to grow upon the mountaines, which giveth to beasts their foode, and feedeth the young Rauen that cries: all these waite upon thee, that thou maiest give them foode in due feafun. And thou halt drinke of the river Cheareth (faith God to ELIAH) and I have commanded the Rauens to feede thee there. Behold the Fowles of the aire, they fow not, nor reape, and yet your heavenly Father feedeth them : againe, are not two farrowes fold for a farthing? and one of them Shall not fall on the ground without your Father : yea all the haires of your head are numbred. And St. PETER, Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you; Andhis indgements are written (faith DAVID.)

God therefore, who is every where present, who filleth the heavens and the earth, whose eyes are upon the righteous, and his countenance against them that doe euill, was therefore by Orpheus called oculus infinitus, an infinite eye, beholding all things, and cannot therefore be esteemed as an idle looker on, as if he had transferred his power to any other: for it is contrary to his owne word. Gloriam meam alteri non dabo : I will not give my glorie to another. No man commandeth in the Kings presence; but by the Kings direction; but God is eucry where present, and King of Kings. The example of Gods vniuerfall providence is seene in his creatures. The Father provideth for his children: beafts and birds and all liuings for their young ones. If prouidence be found in second Fathers, much more in the first and Vniuerfall: and if there 50 be a natural llouing care in men, and beafts, much more in God, who hath formed this nature, and whose divine love was the beginning, and is the bond of the Vniverfall. Amor diuinus rerum omnium est principium, o vinculum universi (faith PLATO.) Anor Dei est nodus perpetuus, mundi copula, partiumý, etus immobile sustentaculum, ac vniuerle

d. XIIII. Of Predestination.

Ow for Predestination; we can difference it no otherwise, from Prouidence and Prescience, then in this, that Prescience only fore-seeth: Prouidence fore-feeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, euen from the brightest Angels of heauen, to the vinworthiest wormes Rom. 8.6.9. of the earth, and Predestination (as it is vsed specially by Diuines) is

Yet Peter Lombard, Lomb Lt. dill. 39 20 Thomas, Bernensis Theologus, and others, take the word Predestination more strictly, diff 23. and for a preparation to felicitie: divers of the Fathers take it more largely fomtimes: Bern in Probl.de among whom St. Augustine speaking of two Citties, and two societies, vseth these P. d. wordes, Quarum est una, qua pradestinata est in aternum reguare cum Deo, altera ater- Aug.l.15.c.1 de num supplicium subire cum Diabolo, Whereof one is it, which is predestinated to raigne for Ciuil. But I will forbeare to be curious in that, which (as it is commonly vnderstood) is nothing else but a power imaginarie, to which the successe of humane actions and endeuours were for their varietie ascribed; for when a manifest cause could not bee 20 giuen, then was it attributed to Fortune, as if there were no cause of those things, of which most men are ignorant, contrary to this true ground of PLATO: Wibil est ortum sub Sole, cuius causa legitima non pracesserit, N othing euer came to passe under the Sunne, of which there was not a just preceding cause. But Aquinas hath herein answered in one diffinction, what socuer may be objected; for many things there are ( faith he) which happen besides the intention of the inseriour, but not besides the intention of the superiour: Prater intentionem inferioris, sed non prater intentionem superioris, (to Teficimus For- Wit) the ordinance of God; and therefore (faith MELANCHTON) Qued Poete fortima Deam, ca- tunam, nos Deum appellamus, Whom the Poets call Fortune, we know to be God, and that this is true, the Scripture in many places teacheth vs, as in the law of murder. For who focuer shall tell any great man or Magistrate, that he is not just, the Generall of an Armie, that he is not valiant, and great Ladies that they are not faire, shall neuer be made a Counseller, a Captaine, or a Courtier. Neither is it sufficient to be wise with a wife Prince, valiant with a valiant, and iust with him that is iust, for such a one hath no estate in his prosperitie; but he must also change with the successour, if he be of contrary qualities, faile with the tide of the time, and alter forme and condition, as the Estate or the Estates Master changeth: Otherwise how were it possible, that the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, could so often attaine to honour and riches, but by fuch an observant slauish course? These men ha-20 uing nothing else to value themselues by, but a counterfait kinde of wondring at other men, and by making them believe that all their vices are vertues, and all their dustie actions cristalline, haue yet in all ages prospered equally with the most vertuous, if not exceeded them. For according to MENANDER, Omnis insipiens arrogantia of plausibus capitur, Euery foole is wonne with his owne pride and others flattering applance: fo as who focuer will live altogether out of himselfe, and studie other mens humours, and obserue them, shall neuer be vnfortunate; and on the contrary, that man which prizeth truth and vertue (except the season wherein he liueth be of all these, and of all forts of goodnesse fruitfull) shall neuer prosper by the possession or profession thereof. It is also a token of a worldly wise man, not to warre or contend 30 in vaine against the nature of times wherein he liueth: for fuch a one is often the authour of his owne miferie, but best it were to follow the aduise, which the Pope gaue the Bishops of that age, out of Ouid, while the Arian Heresie raged:

While furie gallops on the way, Let no man furies gallop stay.

And if Cicero (then whom that world begat not a man of more reputed judge-40 ment) had followed the counfaile of his brother QVINTVS, Potuiffet (faith PE-TRARCH) in lectulo suo mori, potuisset integro cadauere sepeliri, He might then have died the death of nature; and beene with an untorne and undiffeuered body buried; for as Petrarch in the same place noteth : Quid stultius quam desperantem ( prasertim de effectu) litibus perpetuis implicari, what more foolish then for him that despaires, especially of the effect, to be entangled with endleffe contentions? Who so ener therefore will set before him Machiauels two markes to shoote at (to wit) riches, and glorie, must set on and take off a backe of yron to a weake wooden bow, that it may fit both the strong and the feeble: for ashe, that first deuised to adde sailes to rowing vessels, did either so proportion them, as being fastened aloft, and towards the head of his Mast, he might 50 abide all windes and stormes, or else he sometime or other perished by his owne inuention: so that man which prizeth vertue for it selfe, and cannot endure to hoise and strike his failes, as the divers natures of calmes and stormes require, must cut his failes, and his cloth, of meane length and breadth, and content himselfe with a flow and fure nauigation, (to wit) a meane and free effate. HE creation of all other creatures being finished, the heauens adorned, and the earth replenished, God faid, Let vs make man in our owne Image, according to our likenesse.

Man is the last and most admirable of Gods workes to vs knowne, ingens miraculum homo, man is the greateft wonder (faith Plato out of MERCVRIVS:) 2V atura ardentissima artificium, The artificiall worke of the most ardent or fire-like nature (as faith Zoroafter) though the fame be meant, not for any excellencie externall, but 30 in respect of his internall forme, both in the nature, qualities, and other attributes thereof: in nature, because it hath an effence immortall, and spirituall; in qualities, because the same was by God created holy and righteous in truth; in other attributes, because Man was made Lord of the world, and of the creatures therein.

More holy then the rest, and understanding more A liuing creature wants, to rule all made before, So man beganne to be.

Of this Image and similitude of God, there is much dispute among the Fathers, Schoole-men, and late Writers: Some of the Fathers conceine, that man was made after the Image of God, in respect chiefly of Empire and dominion, as St. Chrysoftome, Ambrose, and some others: which St. Ambrose denyeth to the woman in these wordes, Vt ficut Deus vnus, ab eo fieret homo vnus, & quomodò ex Deo vno omnia, ità ex vno homine omne genus effet super faciem totius terra: Vnus igitur vnum fecit, qui 50 unitatus eius haberet imaginem, That as Godis one, one man might be made by him, and that in what manner all things are of one God, likewise of one man the whole kinde should be upon the face of the whole earth: Therefore he being one made one, that should have the Image of his vnitie. But whereas it is gathered out of the following wordes of the fame Verse, that man was after the image of God in respect of rule and power, it is written Dominamini in the plurall number, and let them rule ouer the fifth of the Sea, &c. and therefore cannot the woman be excluded. Others conceiue, that man is faid to be after the image of God in respect of his immortall soulconly, because as God is inuisible, so the soule of man is inussible, as God is immortall and incorporall, so is the foule of manimmortall and incorporall; and as there is but one God which gouerneth the world, so but one soule which gouerneth the body of man; and as God is wholly in every part of the world, so is the soule of man wholly in every part of the body : Animaest tota in tote, & tota in qualibet parte , The soule is wholly in the whole bo-10 dy, and wholly in every part thereof, according to Ariflotle; though Chalcidius, and other learned men denie that doctrine; which that it is otherwise then potentially true, all the Ariflotelians in the world shall neuer proue. These and the like arguments doe the Iewes make (faith Toftatus ) and these resemblances, betweene the infinite God, and the finite Man.

The Schoole-men resemble the Minde or Soule of Man to God, in this respect especially; because that as in the Minde there are three distinct powers, or faculties (to wit) Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, and yet all these, being of reall differences, are but one minde : fo in God there are three distinct persons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, and yet but one God. They also make the Image and Si-20 militude divers; and againe, they diftinguish betweene imaginem Dei, and ad imaginem Dei, and spinne into small threds, with subtile distinctions, many times the plainenesse, and sinceritie of the Scriptures: their wits being like that strong water, that eateth through and diffolueth the pureft gold. Victorinux also maketh the image of God to be substantiall, but not the similitude : sed in substantia nomen qualitatis declaratinum, A word-declaring qualitie in the substance. Out of which wordes, and that which followeth, it is infer'd, that as the image and similitude doe greatly differ : so the sinnefull soule doth not therefore leave to be the image of God; but it bath not his similitude, except it be holy and righteous. St. Augustine also against Adimantus the Manichee affirmeth, that by finne, the perfection of this image is loft in man, and 30 in his Retractations maintaineth the same opinion, and also affirmeth that the Similitude is more largely taken, then the Image.

But how soeuer the Schoole-men and others distinguish, or what soeuer the Fathers conceive, fure I am that St. Paul maketh the same sense of the image, which Vi-Horinus doth of the similitude, who saith: As we have borne the image of the earthly, 1,cor, 15,490 fo shall we beare the image of the heavenly; and it cannot be egathered out of the Scriptures, that the wordes image and similitude were yied but in one sense, and in this place the better to expresse each other; what soeuer Lombard hath said to the contrarie. For God knowes, what a multitude of meanings the wit of man imagineth to himselfe in the Scriptures, which neither Moses, the Prophets, or Apolles, euercon-40 ceiued. Now as St. Paul vieth the word (image) for both: fo St. Iames vieth the word

(fimilitude) for both in these wordes. Therewith bleffe wee God even the Father, and 7am.3.9. therewith curse we Men, which are made after the similitude of God: How soever therefore St. Augustine seemeth, out of a kinde of elegancie in writing, to make some difference, as where he writeth, Confitemur imaginem in aternitate, similitudinem in mori- y: fund, bus inveniri, we confesse that this image is found in eternitie, but his similitude in manners, that is, in the spirituall dispositions and qualities of the minde, yet thus he elsewhere speaketh plainely. Quasi verò possit esse imago aliqua in qua similitudo non sit: si Aug. ve sup. enim omnino similis non est, procul dubio nec imago est, As if (faith he) there could be any image, where the similitude is not : no, out of doubt, where there is no likenesse, there is no 50 image. The verie wordes of the Text make this most manifest, as Let vs make man in our image, according to our likeneffe: which is, Let vs make man in our image, that he may bee like vs; and in the next Verse following God himselfe maketh it plaine, for there he vieth the word (image) only, as thus. God created the man in his image, in the image of God created he him. And to take away all dispute or ambiguitie, in the first Verse of the fift Chapter, the word (similitude) is vsed againe by it selfe, as in the day that God created A D A M, in the likeneffe of God made he him. And this similitude S. Paul Colof. the third, calleth the image. Put on (faith he) the rew man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him, that created him. And in Stragides it is written, he made them according to his image. Now if we may believe S. Paul before Peter Lombard and other Schoole-men, then it is as manifest as wordes can make it, that the image and similitude is but the same, for S. Paul vseth both the words directly in one fenfe. For they turned the glorie of the incorruptible God to the similitude of the

Zanchius laboureth to proue, that man was formed after the image of God, both 10 Zanchide op. Dei in body and minde: Nulla pars in homine qua non fuerit huiusce imaginis particeps. No part in a man (laith he) which was not participating Gods image : for God (aid, Let vs make man according to our owne image. But the foule alone is not man, but the Hypoflasis or whole man compounded of body and foule. The body of man (faith he) is the Image of the world, and called therefore Microcosmus; but the Idea and exemplar of the world was first in God, so that man, according to his body must needes be the image of God. Against which opinion of this learned man, his owne objection seemeth to me fufficient, where he alleageth, that it may be faid that Mofes spake by the figure Synedoche, as when a man is called a mortall man, yet is not the whole man mortall. but the body only: fo when God faid, Let vs make man after our image, hee meant 20 the foule of man, and not the bodie of earth and dust: Maledictus qui deitatem ad hominis lineamenta refert (faith S. AVGVSTINE,) Curfed is he that referreth the Deitie of Godto the lineaments of mans body. Deus enim non est humana forma particeps, neque corpus humanum divine (faith PHILO,) God is not partaker of humane forme, nor human: body of the forme divine: The Hebrew word for image is Tfelem, which fignifieth a thadow or obscure resemblance: In imagine pertransit homo, Man passeth away in a Ibadow: Let vs then know and consider, that God, who is eternall and infinite, hath not any bodily shape or composition, for it is both against his nature and his word; an errour of the Anthropomorphite, against the very essence and Maiestie of God.

Surely Cicero, who was but a Heathen, had yet a more divine understanding then 30 these grosse Heretikes : ad similitudinem Dei propius accedebat humana virtus, quam sigura, The vertue which is in man (faith he) came nearer the similitude of God, then the figure. For God is a spiritual substance, invisible, and most simple; God is a just God : God is mercifull : God is charitie it felfe, and (in a word) goodneffe it felfe, and none else simply good. And thus much it hath pleased God himselfe to teach vs. and to make vs know of himfelfe. What then can be the shadow of such a substance, the image of fuch a nature, or wherein can man be faid to refemble his vnex cogitable power and perfectnesse? certainely, not in dominion alone: for the Deuill is said to be the Prince of this world, and the Kingdome of Christ was not thereof, who was the true and perfect image of his Father; neither, because man hath an immortall 40 foule, and therein the faculties of Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, for the Deuils Platin Cratyl. are also immortall, and participate those faculties, being called Damones, because fcientes of Knowledge, and fubtility; neither because we are reasonable creatures, by which we are distinguished from beasts: for who have rebelled against God? who haue made Gods of the vileft beafts, of Serpents, of Cats, of Owles, yea euen of shamefull parts, of lusts and pleasures, but reasonable men? Yet doe I not condemne Of originate Luft. the opinion of St. Chryfoftome and Ambrofe, as touching dominion, but that, in respect thereof, man was in some fort after the image of God, if we take Dominion, such as make man a ruler and Gouernour ouer the Fishes of the Sea, the Fowles of Heauen 50

Vt Mens is not taken here for anima physica, according to Aristotle, which is forms, vol. natura hominis, The forms or nature of man, but this facultie or gift of God, called Mens, is taken for prima via animi, she principall firmgth of the minde, or follow, cuits active of perpetual ventation contemplatios whose aid, exercise, or office, u the perpetual contemplation

Est autem mens nostra (faith CvsANvs) vis comprehendendi, & totum virtuale ex om- Demente. nibus comprehendendi virtutibus compositum: Our intellectuall minde (saith he) is a power Idiotal. 3. of comprehending, even the whole, that is in this kinde powerfull, compounded of all the powers of comprehension : vnto which Mercurius attributeth so much (if his meaning accompanie his wordes) that he effecmeth it to be the very effence of God (which was also the errour of the Manichees and others) and no otherwise separate from God (faith he) then the light from the Sunne : for this Mens or vnderstanding (faith 20 Mercurius) eft Deus in bominibus, Is Godin men, or rather (and which I take to be his sen. Ep. 65. f. meaning) is the image of God in man. For as the Sunne is not of the same effence or $31.f. nature with the divine light, but a body illightned, and an illumination created; fo is this Mens or understanding in men, not of the essence of Gods infinite understanding, but a power and facultie of our foules the pureft; or the lumen anima rationalis. by the true and eternall light illightned. And this Mens others call animam anima, The foule of the foule, or with St. Augustine, the eye of the foule, or receptacle of Sapience and divine knowledge, que amorem sapientie tanquam ducem sequitur, which followeth after the lone of fapience as her quide (faith Philo) between which and reason, between which and the minde, called anima, betweene which and that power which the La-40 tines call animas, there is this difference. Reason is that facultic by which we judge and discourse; Anima, by which we live. Hereofit is said, Anima corpus animat, id eft, vinificat; anima, or the foule to that which doth animate the body, that is, giveth it life: for death is the separation of body and soule; and the same strength (faith Phile) which God the great directour hath in the world, the fame hath this Anima, or mind, or foule in man. Animus, is that, by which we will and make election; and to this Bafil agreeth, which calleth this Mens, or divine understanding, perspicacem anime partens, the perceiuin a part of the minde, or the light, by which the Soule discerneth : dormientium mens, non anima, sopitur, & in furiosis mens extinguitur, anima manet, In men that fleepe it is this (mens) or understanding, and not the minde or soule, which resteth, 50 during which time it is but habituall in wife men, and in madde men this (mens) is extinguified, and not the Soule: for madde men doe live, though distract.

Therefore this word being often vsed for the Soule giuing life, is attributed abufinely to madde men, when we say that they are of a distract minde, in stead of a broken understanding, which word (mind) we vse also for opinion, as, I am of this mind, or that minde: and fometimes for mens conditions or vertues, as, he is of an honest minde, or, a man of a just minde: sometimes for affection, as I doe this for my minds fake; and Ariffole sometimes wieth this word (mens) for the phantalic, which is the strength of the imagination: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we haue without discourse: oftentimes for Spirits, Angels, and Intelligences: but as it is vsed in the proper fignification, including both the vnderstanding agent and possible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantiall act, not depending upon matter, but hauing relation to that, which is intelligible, as to his first object : or more at large thus; a part or particle of the Soule, whereby it doth understand, not depending uppon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion comming from without, and 10 apt to be diffeuered, as, eternall from that which is mortall. Hereof excellently Mercurius: Anima est imago mentis, mens imago Dei. Deus menti praes, mens anima, anima corpori, The Soule (meaning that which giveth life) is the image of this understanding, or Mens, and this (Mens) or understanding is the image of God. God is Presdent or ruler ouer this understanding, this understanding ouer the Soule, and this Soule ower the body. This division and distinction out of the Platonikes and Peripatetikes, I leaue to the Reader to judge of. That Mens humana hath no neede of any organ, Marsilius Ficinus in his ninth booke of the Soules immortalitie laboureth to proue. Zanch. de oper. Zanchius doth not differ from Ficinus in wordes, for (faith he) ad facultatem intelligentem exercendam non eget Mens organo, tanquàm medio, per quod intelligat, quanquàm 20 eget obiecto in quod intucatur, & ex quo intellectionem concipiat : hoc autem obiectum funt phantasmata, seù rerum à sensibus perceptarum simulachra ad phantasiam prolata, To exercise the facultie of understanding, the minde of man (faith he) needeth no instrument, as a me ane, by which it may understand : but it needeth an object, whereon to looke, and whence to conceive the act of understanding. This object are the phantasmes, or the resemblances of things received from the fense, and carried to the phantasie : But in effect his conclusion feemeth to carry a contrarie fense, when he maketh the Phantalie, in representing the object to the understanding, to be a corporall Organum; neither can it be understood to be an Organum of any thing; but of the vnderstanding. And hee addeth that the refemblance of things in mans imagination, are to his vnderstanding and minde, as 36 colours are to the fight: whence it to followeth, that the imagination or phantalie it felfe is to the facultie of vnderstanding, as the eye is to the facultie of seeing, and as this is an Organum: fo that. Of this question, How the Minde in all her actions maketh vse of the body, and hath communion with the body, I referre the Reader to Pag. 185. 5 fe. a most grave and learned discourse in the last Replie of Mr. Dr. Bilson, now Bishop of Winchester, vnto Henrie Iacob. Howsocuer the truth bee determined, wee must conclude, that it is neither in respect of reason alone, by which we discourse, nor in respect of the minde it selfe, by which we live, nor in respect of our soules simply, by which we are immortall, that we are made after the image of God. But most fafely may wee resemble our sclues to God in mente, and in respect of that pure facultie 40 which is neuer separate from the contemplation and loue of God. Yet this is not all. For St. Bernard maketh a true difference betweene the nature and faculties of the minde or Soule, and betweene the infusion of qualities, endowments and gifts of lum id oft Sapigrace, wherewith it is adorned and enriched, which, being added to the nature, efentre virtute. fence, and faculties, maketh it altogether to be after the image of God, whose words ac bonitaticompotem qui seie intuitus creato- arc these: Non proptered imago Desest, quid sui meminit Mens, seá, intelligit & dilirem agnoceres git (which was also the opinion of S. Avgvstine) fed quia potest meminife, intellijuum,aique imitati, prej inge-gere ac diligere eum à quo facta est, (that is) The minde (or Mens) was not therefore the ny,progauttor- image of God, because it remembreth, understandeth, and loneth it selfe, but because it can tais, fibi concef- remember, under sand, and love God, who created it. And, that this image may be defor- 50

it unprofusble by drawing our mindes into torrupt concupifcence. It is not therefore (as aforefaid) by reason of Immortalitie, nor in Reason, nor in Dominion, nor in any one of thele by it selfe, nor in all these ioyned, by any of which, or by all which were semble, or may be called the shadow of God, though by reason and understanding, with the other faculties of the Soule, we are made capable of this print; but chiefly, in respect of the habit of Originall righteousnesse, most perfectly infused by God into the minde and Soule of man in his first creation. For it is not by nature, nor by her liberalitie, that wee were printed with the feale of Gods image (though Reason may be said to be of her gift, which ioyned to the Soule 10 is a part of the effentiall constitution of our proper species) but from the bountifull grace of the Lord of all goodnesse, who breathed life into earth, and contriued within the truncke of dust and clay, the inimitable habilitie of his owne instice, pietie, and

So long therefore (for that resemblance which Dominion bath) doe those that are powerfull retaine the image of God, as according to his Commandements they exercise the Office or Magistracie to which they are called, and sincerely walke in the waies of God, which in the Scriptures is called walking with God; and all other men Gen. 5.22. folong retaine this image, as they feare, loue, and ferue God, truly, (that is) for the loue of God alone, and doe not bruife and deface his feale by the waight of manifold 20 and voluntarie offences, and obstinate sinnes. For the vniust minde cannot bee after the image of God, seeing God is instice it selfe; The bloud-thirstic hath it not; for God is charitie, and mercie it felfe: Fallhood, cunning practife, and ambition, are properties of Sathan; and therefore cannot dwell in one foule, together with God; and to be short, there is no likelihood betweene pure light and blacke darkenesse, be- 2. (47,6.14) tweene beautie and deformitie, or betweene righteoushesse and reprobation. And though Nature, according to common understanding, have made vs capable by the power of reason, and apt enough to receive this image of Gods goodnesse, which the fenfuall foules of beafts cannot perceive; yet were that aptitude naturall more inclinable to follow and imbrace the falle and dureleffe pleafures of this stage-play world, 20 then to become the shadow of God by walking after him, had not the exceeding workemanship of Gods wiscdome, and the liberalitie of his mercy, formed eyes to our foules, as to our bodies, which, piercing through the impuritie of our flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge and Obiect to the minde and Soule, to contemplate the cuer-during gloric, and termeleffe ioy, prepared for those, which retaine the image and fimilitude of their Creatour, preferuing vndefiled and vnrent the garment of the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in 2, Cor. 3.9 righteousnesse, and true holinesse, as faith St. Paul. Now whereas it is thought by fome of the Fathers, as by St. Augustine with whom S. Ambrose ioyneth, that, by finne, the perfection of the image is loft, and not the image it felfe; both opinions by 40 this distinction may be well reconciled (to wit) that the image of God, in man, may be taken two waies; for either it is considered, according to naturall gifts, and consisteth therein: namely, to have a reasonable and vnderstanding nature,&c. and in this fense, the image of God is no more lost by sinne, then the very reasonable or vnderstanding nature, &c. is lost: (for sinne doth not abolish and take away these naturall gifts) or, the image of God is considered, according to supernatural gifts, namely, of diuine grace, and heauenly glorie, which is indeede the perfection and accomplishment of the naturall image; and this manner of fimilitude and image of God, is wholly blotted out and destroyed by sinne.

That Man was formed of earth and dust, did Abraham acknowledge, when in humble feare he called vnto God, to saue Sodome. Let not my Lord now be angrie, if I (beake, I, that am but dust and ashes: And in these houses of clay, whose foundation is in the duft, doe our soules inhabite, according to 10b; and though our owne eyes doe enery where behold the sudden and reliftlesse affaults of death, and Nature affureth vs by neuer-failing experience, and Reason by infallible demonstration, that our times vpon the earth haue neither certainetie nor durabilitie, that our bodies are but the Anduiles of paine and diseases, and our Mindes the Hiues of vnnumbred cares, sorrowes, and passions: and that (when we are most glorified) we are but those painted posts, 20 against which Enuie and Fortune direct their darts; yet such is the true vnhappinesse of our condition, and the darke ignorance, which couereth the eyes of our vnderstanding, that we only prize, pamper, and exalt this vaffall and flaue of death, and forget altogether (or only remember at our cast-away leisure) the imprisoned immortall Soule, which can neither die with the reprobate, nor perish with the mortall parts of vertuous men: feeing Gods iustice in the one, and his goodnesse in the other is excrcifed for euermore, as the euer-liuing fubiects of his reward and punishment. But when is it that we examine this great accompt? neuer while we have one vanitie left vs to spend : we pleade for titles, till our breath faile vs; digge for riches, while our strength enableth vs; exercise malice, while we can reuenge; and then, when Time 30 hath beaten from vs both youth, pleasure, and health, and that nature it selfe hateth the house of old age, we remember with lob, that we must goe the way, from whence we Shall not returne, and that our bedde is made ready for vs in the darke; And then I say, looking ouer late into the bottome of our conscience (which Pleasure and Ambition had locked vp from vs all our liues, we behold therein the fearefull images of our actions past, and withall, this terrible inscription : That God will bring every worke into judgement, that man hath done under the Sunne.

But what examples have cuer moued vs? what perfwalions reformed vs? or what threatnings made vs afraide? we behold other mens Tragedies plaid before vs, we heare what is promised and threatned; but the worlds bright glorie hath put out the 40 eyes of our minds; and these betraying lights, (with which we only see) doe neither looke vp towards termeleffe ioyes, nor downe towards endleffe forrowes, till we neither know, nor can looke for any thing elfe, at the worlds hands. Of which excellently Marius Victor:

But let vs not flatter our immortall foules herein: for to neglect God all our lives. and know that we neglect him, to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, cafting our hopes on the Peace, which we trust to make at parting, is no other then a rebellious prefumption, and (that which is the worst of all) even a contemptuous laughing to scorne, and deriding of God, his lawes and precepts. Of the Spirit of life, which God breathed into man, in his Creation.

N this frame and carcafe God breathed the breath of life; and the man was a liuing foule: (that is) God gaue to a Bodie of earth and of corruptible matter, a Soule spiritual and incorruptible; not that God had any such bodilic instruments as men vse, but God breathed the Spiritof life and immortalitie into man, as he breatheth his grace daily into such as love and feare him. The Spirit of God (faith ELIHV in IOB) bath made me, and 10b 33.4 20 the breath of the Almightie hath given melife: In qua fententia (faith RABANVS) vitanda est paupertas sensus carnalis, ne forte putemus Deum, vel manibus corporeis de limo formasse corpus hominis, vel faucibus aut labys suis inspirasse in faciem formati, vi vincre posit, & spiraculum vita habere: Nam & Propheta cum ait, Manus tua fecerunt me. Coc. tropica hac locutione magis quam propria, (id est) iuxta consuctadinem, qua solent homines operari, loquutus est. In which sentence (faith he) the beg gerlinesse of carnall sense is to be avoided, lest perhaps we fould thinke, either that God with bodily hands made mans boay of flime, or breathed with lawes or lips wpon his face (being formed) that he might line, and have the spirit of life : for the Prophet also when he faith, Thy handes have made me, spake this tropically, rather then properly (that is) according to the cultome which men vie in wor-20 king. Quantum est periculi hijs, qui Scripturas sensu corporeo legunt : In what danger are they that reade the Scriptures in a carnall fense. By this breath was infused into man both life and foule; and therefore this (Soule) the Philosophers call Animam, que vinificat corpus, & animat, Which doth animate, and give life to the body. The inspiration of the Almightie giveth understanding, faith Iob; and this spirit, which God breathed into man, which is the reasonable soule of man, returneth againe to God that gaue it, as the body returneth vnto the earth, out of which it was taken, according to Ecclesiastes: And dust ball returne to the earth, out of which it was taken, and the spirit hall ecclesized returne to God that gaue it. Neither is this word (spirit) vsually otherwise taken in the Scriptures, then for the foule; as when Stephen cryed vnto God: Domine Susing Allers 39. 40 Spiritum meum, Lord lefus receiue my Spirit: and in St. I o H N, And Icfus bowed his head, Job. 19.30. and gaue up the Ghoft, or spirit, (which was) that his life and soule left his body dead. And that the immortall foule of man differeth from the foules of beafts, the manner of the creation maketh it manifest: for it is written, Let the waters bring forth in abun- Gentaeo. dance enery creeping thing, and let the earth bring forth the lining thing, according to his kinde, the beaft of the earth, &c. But of Man it is written, Let us make man in our owne image, &c. and further, that the Lordbreathed in his face breath of life. Wherefore, as Gon 270 from the water and earth were those creatures brought forth, and thence received life: fo shall they againe be dissoluted into the same first matter, whence they were taken: but the life of breath euerlasting, which God breathed into man, shall, accor-50 ding to Ecclefiaftes, returne againe to God that gaue it.

An, thus compounded and formed by God, was an abstract or modell, or briefe Storie of the Winnerfall in whom God concluded the creation, and worke of the world, and whom he made the last and most excellent of his creatures, being internally endued with a diuine vnderflanding, by which he might contemplate and ferue his Creatour, after whose image he was formed, and endued with the powers and faculties of reason and 10 other abilities, that thereby also he might gouerne and rule the world, and all other Gods creatures therein. And whereas God created three forts of living natures, (to wit) Angelicall, Rationall, and Brutall; giving to Angelsan intellectuall, and to Bealts a ferifuall nature, he wouch fafed vnto man; both the intellectuall of Angels, the fensitine of Beasts; and the proper rationall belonging vnto man; and therefore (faith GREGORIE NAZYANZENE: ) Homoeft Vtriufg, natura vinculum, Man is the bond and chaine which tieth together both natures: and because in the little frame of Arift. In this also is the little world of man compared, and made more like the Vniuerfall (man being the measure of all things; Homo est mensura omnium rerum, saith Aristotle And 10 Meand Pythagoras) that the fourecomplexions refemble the foure Elements, and the taph.c.i.f. feuen Ages of man the feuen Planets: Whereof our Infancie is compared to the Moone, in which we feeme onely to liue and growe, as Plants; the fecond age to Mercurie, wherein we are taught and instructed; our third age to Venue, the dayes of love, defire, and vanitie; the fourth to the Sunne, the strong, flourishing, and beautifull age of mans life; the fifth to Mars, in which we feeke honour and victorie, and in which our thoughts trauaile to ambitious ends ; the fixth age is afcribed to Iupiter. to in which we begin to take accompt of our times, judge of our felues, and grow to the perfection of our understanding; the last and seventh to Saturne, wherein our dayes are fad and ouer-cast, and in which wee finde by deere and lamentable experience, and by the loffe which can neuer be repaired, that of all our vaine passions and affections past, the forrow onely abideth: Our attendants are licknesses, and variable infirmities, and by how much the more we are accompanied with plentic, by to much the more greedily is our end defired, whome when Time bath made vnfociable to others, we become a burthen to our felues : being of no other vie, then to hold the riches we have, from our fucceffours. Of the free power, which man had in his first creation, to dispose of himselfe.

Hefe be the miferies which our first Parents brought on all mankinde, vnto whom God in his creation gaue a free and vnconstrained will, and on whom he bestowed the liberall choice of all things, with one only prohibition, to trie his gratitude and obedience. God fet before him, a mortall and immortall life, a nature celestiall and terrene, and (indeed)

God gaue man to himfelfe, to be his owne guide, his owne workeman, and his owne painter, that he might frame or describe vnto himselfe what hee pleased, and make election of his owne forme. God made man in the beginning (faith SIRACIDES) and left him in the hands of his own counfaile. Such was the liberalitie of God, and mans felicitie: whereas beafts, and all other creatures reasonlesse brought with them into the world (faith Lucilius) and that euen when they first fell from the bodies of their Dammes, the nature, which they could not change; and the supernall spirits or Angels were from the beginning, or soone after, of that condition, in which they remaine in perpetuall eternitic. But (as aforefaid) God gaue vnto man all kinde of feedes and grafts of life, (to wit) the vegetative life of Plants, the fenfuall of beaftes. the rationall of man, and the intellectuall of Angels, whereof which socuer hetooke pleasure to plant and cultiue, the same should futurely grow in him, and bring forth fruit, agreable to his owne choyce and plantation. This freedome of the first man Adim, and our first Father, was ænigmatically described by Aclepius Atheniensis 30 (faith Mirandula) in the person and fable of Proteur, who was faid, as often as hee pleased, to change his shape. To the same end were all those celebrated Metamorpholes among the Pythagorians, and ancient Poets, wherein it was fained, that men were transformed into diners shapes of beasts, thereby to shew the change of mens conditions, from reason to brutalitie, from vertue to vice, from meekenesse to crueltie, and from iuftice to oppression. For by the lively image of other creatures did those Ancients represent the variable passions, and affections of mortall men; as by Serpents were fignified deceivers, by Lions, oppressours, and cruell men; by swine, mengiuen ouer to lust and sensualitie; by wolues, rauening and greedy men; which alfo S. Matthew refembleth to false Prophets, which come to you in heepes clothing but 40 inwardly they are rauening Wolues, by the images of stones and stockes, foolish and ignorant men, by Vipers, vngratefull men: of which Saint IOHN BAPTIST, Ozee generation of vipers, &c.

CHAP. III. Of the place of Paradife.

That the seate of Paradise is greatly mislaken: and that it is no maruaile that men should erre.

ONCERNING the first habitation of man wereade, that the Lord God planted a garden, Eastward, in Eden, and there he put the man whom he made, GEN. 2.6. Of this feate and place of Paradife, all ages have held dispute; and the opinions and judgements have been in effect, as divers, among those that have written vppon this part of Genesis, as vpon any one place therein, feeming most obscure : some there are, that have conceiued the being of the terrestriall Paradise, without all regard of the worlds Geographie, and without any respect of East and West, or any consideration of the place where Moles wrote, and from whence he directed (by the quarters of the heauens) the way how to finde out and judge, in what region of the world this garden was by God planted, wherein he was exceeding respective and precise. Others, by being themselues ignorant in the Hebrew, followed the first interpretation, or trusting to their own iudgements, understood one place for another; and one errour is so fruitfull, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousnesse thereof be not timely restrained. And thirdly, those writers which gaue themselues to follow and imitate others, were in all things so observant sectatours of those Masters, whom they admired and beleeued in, as they thought it safer to condemne their owne vn-50 derstanding, then to examine theirs. For (faith Vadianus in his Epistle of Paradife) magnos errores (magnorum virorum auctoritate perfuali) transmittimus, We passe ouer many groffe errours, by the authoritie of great men ledde and perswaded. And it is true, that many of the Fathers were farre wide from the understanding of this place. I speake it not, that I my selfe dare presume to censure them, for I reuerence both their learning and their pietie, and yet not bound to follow them any further, then they are guided by truth; for they were men; Et humanum est errare. And to the end that no man should be proude of himselfe, God bath distributed vnto men such a proportion of knowledge, as the wifeft may behold in themselves their owne weakenesse. Nulli unquam dedit emnia Deus, God neuer gaue the knowledge of all things to any one. St. Paul confest that he knew not, whether he were taken vp into the third heauen in the flesh, or out of the flesh; and Christ himselfe acknowledgeth thus much, that neither Men, nor Angels knew of the latter day; and therefore, feeing knowledge is infinite, it is God (according to St. Iude) who is only wife. Sapientia vbi inucnitur? (faith I o B) but where is wisedome found? and where is the place of understanding? 10 man knoweth not the price thereof, for it is not found in the land of the living. And therefore feeing God found follie in his Angels, mens judgements (which inhabite in houses of clay) cannot be without their mistakings; and so the Fathers, and other learned men excufable in particulars, especially in those whereupon our faluation dependeth not.

A recitall of firange opinions, touching Paradife.

Ow as touching Paradife, first it is to be enquired, whether there were a Paradife or no? or whether Mofes description were altogether mysticall, and allegoricall? as Origen, Philo, Fran. Georgius with others have Affirmed, and that vnder the names of those foure Rivers, Pifon, Gehon, Hidekel, and Perath, The tree of life, and the tree of knowledge, there were deliuered vnto vs other mysteries and significations; as, that by the foure Rivers were meant the foure Cardinall vertues, Iustice, Temperance, Fortitude, and Prudence, or (by other) Oile, Wine, Milke, and Honnie. This Allegoricall vnderstanding of Paradife by Origen divulged, was againe by Francifcus Georgius received (faith Sixtus Senensis) whose friuolous imaginations Sixtus himselfe doth fully and learnedly an- 30 fwere, in the 24. Annotation of his fift Booke, fol. 228. the last Edition.

St. Ambrofe also leaned wholly to the Allegoricall construction, and fet Paradife in the third heaven, and in the vertues of the minde, & in nostro principali, which is, as I conceiue it, in mente, or in our foules: to the particulars whereof he alludeth in this fort. By the place or garden of Paradife, was meant the foule or minde; by Adam, Mens, or vinderstanding; by Eue, the sense; by the Serpent, delectation; by the Tree of good and euill, Sapience; and by the rest of the trees, the vertues of the minde, or in the minde planted, or from thence springing. Notwithstanding all which, vpon the first of the Corinthians, c. 6. he indirect wordes alloweth both of a celeftiall and terrestriall Paradife; the one, into which St. Paul was rapt; the other, 40 into which Adam was put by God. Aug Chryfamensis, was of opinion, that a Paradise had beene, but that there was not now any marke thereof on the earth: the same being not only defaced, but withall the places now not fo much as existing. To which Lutber feemeth to adhere.

The Manichees also understood, that by Paradife was meant the whole Earth; to which opinion Vadianus inclineth, as I conceiue his wordes in two feuerall places. First, vpon this: Fill the earth, Gen. 10. Of which he giveth this indgement. Hoe ipfo etiam quod dixit, Replete terram, dominamini universis animantibus, subjette terram, clarissime docet, totam terram extantem, & omnigenis (vt tum erat) fructibus consitam, Jesem & hortum illud Ada & posteritatis futura fuisse, These wordes (saith he) in which 50 God faid, Bring forth fruit and multiplie, and fill the earth, and subdue it, and rule ouer euery creature, doe clearly hew, that the Vninerfall earth fet or filled with all forts of fruits (as then it was) was the garden and feate of Adam, and of his future posteritie. And afterward he acknowledgeth the place, out of the Acts the 17. Apollolus ex uno fanquine omne genus humanum adeò factum docet, vt habitarent (uper vniuer (am faciem terra: tota igitur terra Paradi [us ille erat; The Apostle (saith he) teacheth, that God hath made of one bloud all mankinde, to dwell over all the face of the earth: and therefore all the earth (faith he) was that Paradife. Which conjectures I will answere in order. Goropius Becanus differeth not much from this opinion, but yet he acknowledgeth that Adam was first planted by God in one certaine place, and peculiar Garden; which place Goropius findeth neare the River of Acesines, in the confines of India.

Tertullian, Bonauenture, and Durandus, make Paradife under the Aquinoctiall, and Bart, 16.126. Postellus, quite contrarie under the North pole: the Chaldeans also for the most part, to and all their Sectators, followed the opinion of origen, or rather origen theirs, who would either make Paradisea figure, or Sacrament only, or else would have it seated out of this sensible world, or raised into some high and remote Region of the Aire. Strabus, and Rabanus, were both fick of this vanitie, with Origen, and Philo: fo was our venerable Beda, and Pet. Comestor, and Moses Barcephas the Syrian, translated by Bed. in Gen. Massius. But as Hopkins saies of Philo Indens, that he wondred, quo maio genio afflatus; Pet. comest l.i. By what eutil Angel he was blowne up into this errour : fo can I not but greatly meruaile cap 3. at these learned men, who so grosly and blindly wandred; seeing Moles, and after par. him the Prophets, doe so plainly describe this place, by the Region, in which it was planted, by the Kingdomes and Provinces bordering it, by the Rivers which watered it, and by the points of the compasse vpon which it lay, in respect of Iudea, or Woulomagus also, vpon Beda, De natura rerum, beleeueth that all the Earth was taken for Paradile, and not any one place. For the whole Earth (faith hee) hath the same beautie adscribed to Paradise. He addeth, that the Ocean was that fountaine, from whence the foure Rivers, Pifon, Gehon, Tigrus, and Euphrates, had their beginning : for he could not thinke it possible, that these Rivers of Ganges, Nilw, Tigris, and Euphrates, (whereof the one ranne through India, the other through Agypt, and the other two through Mesopotamia and Armenia) could rise out of one fountaine, were it not out of the fountaine of the Ocean.

ð. III.

That there was a true locall Paradise Eastward, in the Countrie of Eden.

O the first therefore, that such a place there was vponthe earth, the words of Mofes make it manifest, where it is written. And the Lord God Gene. 3. planted a garden Eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had made. And howfoeuer the vulgar translation, called Hieromes translation, hath converted this place thus, Plantauerat Dominus Deus Para-

40 disum voluptatis à principio; The Lord God planted a Paradise of pleasure from the beginning; putting the word (pleasure) for Eden, and (from the beginning) for Eastward: It is manifest, that in this place Eden is the proper name of a Region. For what sense bath this translation (saith our Hopkins, in his Treatise of Paradise) that he planted a garden in pleasure, or that a River went out of pleasure to water the garden? But the scuentie Interpreters call it Paradisum Edenis, the Paradise of Eden, and so doth the Chaldean Paraphrast truly take it for the proper name of a place, and for a Nowne appellative; which Region in respect of the fertilitie of the soile, of the many beautifull rivers, and goodly woods, and that the trees (as in the indies) doe alwaies keep their leaues, was called Eden, which fignifieth in the Hebrew, pleafantneffe or delica-30 cie, as the Spaniards call the Countrie, opposite to the Isle of Cuba, Florida: and this is the miftaking, which may end the dispute, astouching the double sense of the word, that as Florida was a Countrie, to called for the flourithing beautie thereof, fo was Edena Region called pleasure, or delicacie, for the pleasure, or delicacie: and as Flaride fignifieth flourishing : fo Eden fignifieth pleasure, and yet both are the proper enigne names of Countries; for Eden being the proper name of a Region (called Pleasure in the Hebrew ) and Paradise being the choice seat of all that Region, Paradise was truly the Garden of Eden, and truly the Garden of pleasure.

Now, for Eastward, to translate it, from the beginning, it is also contrarie to the translation of the Seuentie; to the ancient Greeke Fathers, as Basil, Chry oftome, Theodoret, Gregorie; and to the Rabbines, as Ramban, Rabbi Salomon, R. Abraham, and Chimchi; and of the Latines, Senerinus, Damascenus, &c. who plainely take Eden for the proper name of a Region, and fet the word (Eastward) for ab initio: for Damafcens owne words are thefe, Paradifus est locus Dei manibus in Eden ad Orientem mirabiliter consitus: Paradise is a place, mermailously planted by the hands of God, in Eden, toward 10 the East.

And after all these Fathers, Guilhelmus Parisiensis, a great learned man, and Sixtus Senensis, of latter times, doe both understand these words of Eden, and of the East, contrarie to the vulgar translation; Parifiensis, as indifferent to both, and Sixtus Senenfis, directly against the vulgar: of which these are their owne words. After this I will beginne to speake of Paradise terrestriall, which that God planted from the beginning, or Eastward, &c. Posthac incipiam loqui de Paradiso terrestri, quem plantasse Deum ab initio vel ad Orientem, &c. And then Senensis; Mos Es enim clarissime prodit, Paradisum à Deo consitum in regione terre Orientalis , que dicitur Heden : Heden autem esse proprium nomen apparet ex quarto capite Gen. vbi legimus CH AM habitasse ad Orientalem plagam 20 Heden; For Moses (laith he) doth shew most clearly, that Paradise was planted of God in a Region of the East Countrie, which is called Heden : but that Heden is a proper name, it appeareth by the fourth Chapter of Genesis, where we reade, that CHAM dwelt on the East border of Heden. PERERIVS endeuoureth to qualifie this translation : for this particle (faith he) ab initio, is referred to all the time of the creation, and not to the very first day; alleaging this place of Christ, that although the Deuill was said to be a man-flaier from the beginning, yet that was meant but after the fixthday. But furely, as I thinke (referring my felfe to better judgement) the Deuill was from the instant of his fall a man-flaier in disposition, though he had not whereon to practife till mans creation. And for conclusion, S. Hierome (if that be his translation) adui- 30 feth himselfe better in the end of the third Chapter of Genesis, converting the word (Eden) by (ante) and not (a principio) as, God did set a Cherubin before the Garden of Eden, Collocaust Deus ante Paradifum voluptatis Cherubin; and Pererius himselfeacknowledgeth, that this is the true sense of this place, precisely taken, according to the Hebrew. Posuit à parte Orientalihorti Heden, Cherubin; Hee set on the East side of the Garden of Heden, Cherubin. BECANVS affirmeth that the Hebrew word (Be) fignifieth (with) aswell as (in) and so the Text beareth this sense; That God planted a Garden with pleasure (that is to say) full of pleasure. But Becanus followeth this construction, only to the end, to finde Paradise vpon the river of Acesimes : for there he hath heard of the Indian Fig-tree in great abundance, which he supposeth to bee 40 thetree of knowledge, of good, and euill, and would therefore draw Paradile to the Fig-tree: which conceit of his I will answere hereafter.

Now, because Paradise was scated by Moses toward the East, thence came the custome of praying toward the East, and not by imitation of the Chaldeans: and therefore all our Churches are built East and West, as to the point where the sunne riseth in March, which is directly ouer Paradife (faith Damascenus:) affirming, that we alwaies pray towards the East, as looking towards Paradise, whence we were cast out; and yet the Temple of Salomon had their Priests and Sacrifices, which turned themfelues in their feruice and divine ceremonies, alwaies toward the West, thereby to auoid the superstition of the Egyptians and Chaldeans.

But because East and West are but in respect of places; (for although Paradise were East from Iudea, yet it was West from Persia) and the seruing of God is every where in the world, the matter is not great which way wee turne our faces, so our hearts stand right, other than this, that we who dwell West from Paradife, and pray turning our selues towards the East, may remember thereby to be eech God, that as by Adams fall we have loft the Paradife on earth: fo by Christs death and passion we may be made partakers of the Paradife celeftiall, and the Kingdome of heaven. To conclude, I conceiue, that there was no other mysteric in adding the word (East) to Eden by Moses, then to shew, that the Region of Eden, in which Paradise was, lay Eastward from Iudea and Canaan: for the Scriptures alwaies called the people of those Nations, the Sonnes of the East, which inhabited Arabia, Mesopotamia, Chaldea, and Persia: of which Ouid:

CHAP.3.S.3.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabateaá, regna recessit, Persidag, & radysinga subditamatutinis.

The East winde with Aurora hath abiding Among th'Arabian, and the Persian hils, Whom Phoebus first salutes at his vp-rising.

And if it be objected, that Hieremie the Prophet threatning the destruction of Hierusalem, doth often make mention of Northern Nations, it is to be noted, that the North is there named, in respect of those Nations that followed Nabuchadonosor, 20 and of whom the greatest part of his Armie was compounded; not that Babylon it selfe stoode North from Hierusalem, though inclining from the East toward the North.

Now to the difference of this Translation, Peter Comestor giveth best satisfaction: for he vieth the word, From the beginning, that is, from the first part of the world, (à principio) id est (faith he) à prima orbis parte, and afterward he affirmeth, that (à principio and ad Orientem) haue the fame fignification; From the beginning and Eastward is all one. à principio idem est quodad Orientem.

But to returne to the proofe of this place, and that this Storie of mankind was not allegoricall, it followeth in the Text of the second Chapter and ninth Verse, in these 30 wordes. For out of the ground made the Lord God to grow enery tree pleasant to the fight, ana' good for meate, &c. fo as first it appeared that God created Adam elsewhere, as in the world at large, and then, put him into the garden: and the end why, is exprest: that he might dreffe it and keepe it; Paradife being a Garden or Orchard filled with verf.18; Plants, and Trees, of the most excellent kindes, pleasant to behold, and (withall) good for meate: which proueth that Paradife was a terrestriall garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and tafte. And to make it more plaine, and to take away all opinion of Allegoricall construction, he affirmeth that it was watered and beautified with a River; expressing also the Region, out of which this River version.

fprang, which he calleth Heden; and that Heden is also a Countrie neere vnto Charan Exech. 6.27.23.

40 in Mesopotamia, Ezechiel witneffeth. But to all these Cabalists, which draw the truth and Storic of the Scriptures into Allegories, Epiphanius answereth in these wordes: Si Paradifus non est fensibilis, non est etiam fons, si non est fons, non est flumen, si non est flumen, non sunt quatuor principia, non Pison, non Gehon, non Tigris, nec Euphrates, non est ficus, non folia, non comedit Ena de arbore, non est Adam, non funt homines, sed veritar iam fabula est, & omnia ad Allegorias renocantur. If Paradife be not fensible, then there was no fountaine, and then no riuer, if no river, then no such foure heads or branches, and then not any such river, as Pison, or Gebon, Tigris, or Euphrates, no such figtree, or fruit, or leaves, Euc then did not eate of the fruit, neither was there any Adam, or any man, the truth was but a fable, and all things c-30 seemed are called backe into Allegories. Words to the same effect hath S. Hierome vpon

Daniel. Conticefeant corum deliramenta, qui umbras & imagines in veritate fequentes, ipsam conantur euertere veritatem, ut Paradisum & flumina, & arbores putent Allegoria legibus se debere subruere, Let the dotages of them be silent, who following shadowes and images in the truth, endeanour to submert the truth it selfe, and thinke that they ought to bring Paradife, and the rivers and the trees under the rules of Allegorie.

Furthermore, by the continuation and order of the Storie is the place made more manifest. For God gaue Adam free libertie to cat of euery tree of the Garden, (the tree of knowledge excepted) which trees Mofes in the ninth verse saith that they were good to eat; meaning the fruit which they bare. Belides, God left all beaftes to Adam to be named, which he had formerly made; and these beastes were neither in the third heaven, nor neere the circle of the Moone, nor beaftes in imagination: for if all these things were enigmaticall or mysticall, the same might also bee said of the creation of all things. And Ezechiel speaking of the glory of the Assyrian Kings vseth this speech. All the trees of Eden, which were in the garden of God, enuied him, which 10 proucth both Eden, and Paradife therein seated to bee terrestriall: for the Prophets made no imaginarie comparisons. But Meses wrote plainly, and in a simple stile, fit for the capacities of ignorant men, and he was more large and precise in the description of Paradife, then in any other place of Scripture; of purpose to take away all scruple from the incredulitie of future ages, whom he knew (out of the gift of Prophecie) to be apt to fabulous inuentions, and that if hee had not described both the region and the rivers, and how it flood from Canaan, many of the vnbeleeuing Ifraelites, and others after them, would have misconstrued this storie of mankind. And is it likely, there would have beene so often mention made of Paradise in the Scriptures, if the fame had been an Vtopia? For we finde that the valley, wherein Sodome and Gomor- 20 rha ftood, (sometimes called Pentapolis, of the five principall Cities therein) was before the destruction (which their vnnaturall sinne purchased) compared to the Paradife of the Lord, and like to the land of Egypt toward Zoar; In like maner was If raell resembled to the Paradise of God, before the Babylonians wasted it: which producth plainely, that Paradife it selfe exceeded in beautie and fertilitie, and that these places had but a refemblance thereof: being compared to a feat and foyle of farre exceeding excellencie. Besides, whence had Homer his invention of Alcinous gardens, as Iustin Martyr noteth, but out of Moles his description of Paradife? Gene. 2. and whence are their praifes of the Elisian fieldes, but out of the Storie of Paradise? to which also appertaine 30 those verses of the golden age in Ouid.

And it is manifest, that Orpheus, Linus, Pyndarus, Hesiodus and Homer, and after him, Onid, one out of another, and all these together with Pythagoras and Plato, and their fectatours, did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stollen treasures of divine letters, altered by prophane additions, and difguifed by poeticall conversions, as if they had beene conceiued out of their owne speculations and contempla-

But besides all these testimonies, if we finde what Region Heden or Eden was; if we proue the river that ranne out of it, and that the same afterwards was divided into foure branches; together with the Kingdomes of Hauila and Culb, and that all thefe are Eastward from Canaan, or the defarts of the Amorites, where Moses wrote, 50 I then conceive, that there is no man that will doubt, but that such a place there was. And yet I doe not exclude the allegoricall sense of the Scripture; for aswell in this there were many figures of Christ, as in all the old Testament throughout: the Storie being directly true not with standing. And to this purpose (saith St. Augustine)

Tres sunt de Paradiso generales sententie: vna est corum, qui tantummodò corporaliter Paradisum intelligi volunt : alia eorum, qui spiritualiter tantum (idest) Ecclesiam : tertia eorum, qui veroq, modo Paradisum accipiunt, (that is) There are three opinions of Paradise: the one of those men, which will have it altogether corporall: a second of those which conceive it altogether spirituall, and to be a figure of the Church : the third of those, which take it in both fenfes ; which third opinion St. Augustine approneth, and of which Suidas gi- August de ciuis. neth this allowable indgement. Why it Should be needfull to intreate deligently of the place of Paradiff

Vt it may be objected, that it is needlesse, and a kinde of curiositieto enquire lodiligently after this place of Paradife, and that the know-ledge thereof is of little or no vie. To which I answere, that there is nothing written in the Scriptures, but for our instruction; and if the truth of the Storie be necessarily, then by the place proved, the same is a so made more apparent. For if we should conceive that Paradise were not on the earth, but lifted vp as high as the Moone; or that it were beyond all the Ocean, and in no part of the knowne world, from whence Adam was faid to wade through the Sea, and thence to have come into Indea, (out of doubt) there would be few men in the world, that would give any credit vnto it. For what could feeme more ridiculous then the report of such a place? and besides, what maketh this seate of Paradile so much disputed and doubted of but the conceit that Pifform should be Ganges, which watereth the East India, and Gehon, Nilus, which enricheth Agypt, and these two 30 Rivers fo farre distant, as (except all the world were Paradife) these streames can no way be comprised therein?

Secondly, if the birth, and workes, and death of our Saujour, were faid to have beene in fome fuch Countrie, of which no man euer heard tell, and that his miracles had beene performed in the aire, or no place certainly knowne, I affure my felfe, that the Christian religion would have taken but a slender roote in the minds of men; for times and places are approued witnesses of worldly actions,

Thirdly, if we should relie, or give place to the judgements of some writers vpon this place of Genesis (though otherwise for their doctrine in generall, they are worthy of honour and reuerence) I say that there is no fable among the Grecians or Agyp-40 tians more ridiculous: for who would beleeve that there were a peece of the world fo fet by it felfe and separated, as to hang in the aire under the circle of the Moone?

or who fo doltish to conceive, that from thence the fourerivers of Ganges, Nilus, Euphrates, and Tigris, should fall downe, and runne vider all the Ocean, and rife vp againe in this our habitable world, and in those places where they are now found. Which left any man thinke, that I enforce or straine to the worst, these are Peter Comestors owne wordes. Est autem locus amani simus longo terra & maris tractu à nostra habitabili zona secretus, adeò eleuatus, vt vs que ad Lunarem globum attingat, o c. (that is) It is a most pleasant place, severed from our babitable zone by a long tract of land and Seaseleuated so, that it reacheth to the globe of the Moone.

And Mofes Barcephas vpon this place writeth in this manner: Deinde hoc quoque re- Bare converted Sponsum volumus, Paradisum multo sublimiore positum esfe regione, atque hae nostraextet by Masus. terra, eog, fieri, vt illine per pracipitium delabantur fluuy tanto cum impetu, quantum verbis exprimere non posses; eog. impetu impulsi presig, sub Oceani vada rapiuntur, unde rur-Sus prosiliant ebullianty, in hoc a nobis culto orbe: which have this sense: Furthermore

(faith he) we give this for an answere, that Paradife is set in a Region farre raised above this part which we inhabite; whereby it comes to paffe, that from thence thefe rivers fall downe with such a headlong violence, as worder cannot expresse; and with that force so impulsed and prest, they are carried under the deepe Ocean, and doe againe arise and boile up in this our habitable world: and to this he addeth the opinion of Ephram, which is this Ephram dicit Paradifum ambire terram, atg, ultra Oceanum ita positum esse, ut totum terrarum orbem ab omni circumdet regione, non aliter atq, Luna orbis Lunam cingit, (which is) That Paradise doth compasse or embrace the whole earth, and is so set beyond the Ocean Sea, as it enuironesh the whole Orbe of the earth on enery side, as the Orbe of the Moone doth embrace the Moone. To the end therefore that these ridiculous expositions and opinions doe 10 not bring question vnto truth it selfe, or make the same subject to doubts or disputes, it is necessarie to discouer the true place of Paradife, which God and his wisedome appointed in the very Nauell of this our world, and (as Melanchton faies) in parte terra meliore, in the best part thereof, that from thence, as from a Center; the Vniuerfall might be filled with people, and planted, and by knowing this place, wee shall the better judge of the beginning of Nations, and of the worlds inhabitation: for neare vnto this did the Sonnes of Noah also disperse themselues after the floud, into all other remote Regions and Countries. And if it be a generous delire in men, to know from whence their owne forefathers have come, and out of what Regions and Nations, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first Auncester, from 20 whence all the streames and branches of mankinde haue followed and beene deduced. If then it doe appeare by the former, that fuch a place there was as Paradife, and that the knowledge of this place cannot be unprofitable, it followeth in order to examine the seuerall opinions before remembred, by the Truth it selfe; and to see how they agree with the sense of the Scripture, and with common reason, and afterward to proue directly, and to delineate the Region in which God first planted this delightfull Garden.

That the floud bath not otterly defaced the market of Paradife, nor caused hils

Nd first, whereas it is supposed by Mag. Chysamensis, that the should hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated this place, in such fort, as no man can finde any marke or memorie thereof: (of which opinion there were others also, ascribing to the sloud the cause of those high mountaines, which are found on all the earth over, with many other strange effects) for my owne opinion, I thinke neither the one nor the other to be true. For although I cannot denie, but that the face of Paradife was after the floud 40 withered, and growne old, in respect of the first beautie: (for both the ages of men, and the nature of all things Time hath changed) yet if there had beene no figne of any fuch place, or if the foile and feate had not remained, then would not Mofes, who wrote of Paradife about 850. yeares after the floud, have described it so particularly, and the Prophets long after Moses would not have made so often mention thereof. And though the very garden it selfe were not then to be found, but that the floud, and other accidents of time made it one common field and pasture with the land of Eden, yet the place is still the same, and the rivers still remaine the same rivers. By two of which (neuer doubted of) to wit, Tigris, and Euphrases, we are fure to finde in what longitude Paradife lay; and learning out one of these rivers, which afterward 50 doth divide it selfe into soure branches, we are sure that the partition is at the very border of the garden it selfe. For it is written, that out of Eden went a river to water the garden, and from thence it was divided and became into foure heads: Now whether the word in the Latine translation (Inde) from thence, be referred to Eden it selfe, or to Paradife, yet the division and branching of those rivers must be in the North or South fide of the very garden (if the rivers runne as they doe, North and South) and therefore these rivers yet remaining, and Eden manifestly knowne, there could be no fuch defacing by the floud, as is supposed. Furthermore, as there is no likelihood, that the place could be so altered as future ages know it not, so is there no probabilitie, that either these rivers were turned out of their courses, or new rivers created by the floud which were not, or that the floud (as aforefaid) by a violent motion, when it beganne to decrease, was the cause of high hils, or deepe vallies. For what descent of waters could there bee in a Sphæricall and round bodie, wherein to there is nor high nor low? feeing that all violent force of waters is either by the strength of winde, by descent from a higher to a lower, or by the ebbe or floud of the Sea. But that there was any winde (whereby the Seas are most enraged) it appeareth not, rather the contrarie is probable: for it is written, Therefore God made a Gen. 3.1. winde to passe upon the earth, and the waters ceased. So as it appeareth not, that, untill the waters fanke, there was any winde at all, but that God afterward, out of his goodnesse, caused the winde to blow, to drie up the abundant slime and mudde of the earth, and make the land more firme, and to cleanfe the aire of thicke vapours and vnholesome mists; and this we know by experience, that all downe-right raines doe cuermore diffeuer the violence of outragious winds, and beate downe, and levell 20 the swelling and mountainous billow of the Sea: for any ebbes and flowes there could be none, when the waters were equall and of one heighth ouer all the face of the Earth, and when there were no Indraughts, Bayes, or Gulfes to receive a floud, or any descent, or violent falling of waters in the round forme of the earth and waters, as aforefaid: and therefore it feemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calme, then that they moued with any raging or ouerbearing violence. And for a more direct proofe that the floud made no fuch destroying alteration, Joseph. auoweth that one of those pillars erected by Seth, the third from Adam, was to be seene in his dayes, which pillars were set up aboue 1426. yeares before the floud, counting Seth to be an hundred yeares old at the erection of them, and 20 Infeph. himselfe, to have lived some 40.or 50 yeares after Christ: of whom although ten in Berofus (to whom although I giue little credit, yet I cannot condemne him in all) that the Cittie of Enoch built by Cain, about the mountaines of Libanus, was not defaced by length of time: yea the ruines thereof Annius (who commented ypon that invented fragment) faith, were to be seene in his daies, who lived in the raigne of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile; and if these his wordes be not true, then was he 40 exceeding impudent. For, speaking of this Cittle of Enoch, he conclude thin this fort. Cuius maxima & ingentis molis fundamenta visuntur, & vocatur ab incolis regionis, Ciuitus Cain, ut nostri mercatores, & peregrini referent, The foundation of which huge Masse is now to be seene, and the place is called by the people of that region, the Cittie of Cain, as both our strangers and merchants report. It is also auowed by Pomponius Mela, (to whom I give more credit in these things) that the Cittie of Joppa was built before the floud, ouer which Cepha was King: whose name with his brother Phineus, together with the grounds and principles of their religion, was found grauen vpon cer-

there be no cause to beleeue all that he wrote, yet that, which he auouched of his owne time, cannot (without great derogation) be called in question. And therefore it may be possible, that some foundation or ruine thereof might then be seen? Now that fuch pillars were raifed by Seth, all Antiquitie hath auowed. It is also writ-

50 not be of the first Cittie of the world, built by Cain, the place, rather then the time, Gen.4. 17. denying it.

And to proue directly, that the floud was not the cause of mountaines, but that there were mountaines from the creation, it is written, that the waters of the floud ouerflowed by fifteene cubits the highest mountaines. And Masius Damascenus speaking of taine Altars of stone; and it is not unpossible, that the ruines of this other Cittie, called Enoch by Annius, might be feene, though founded in the first age: but it could the floud, writeth in this manner. Et supra Minyadam excelsus mons in Armenia (qui Baru appellatur) in quo confugientes multos sermo est diluuy tempore liberatos. And uppon Minyada there is an high mountaine, in Armenia (called Baris) unto which (as it is (aid) that many fledde in the time of the deluge, and that they (aued themselues thereon. Now although it is contrarie to Gods word, that any more were faued then eight persons (which Masim doth not anouch, but by report ) yet it is a testimonie, that fuch mountaines were before the floud, which were afterwards, and euer fince, knowne by the same names; and on which mountaines it is generally received that the Arkerested: but vntruly, as I shall proue hereafter. And agains it appeareth, that the Mount Syon (though by another name) was knowne before the floud: on 10 which the Thalmudists report, that many Giants faued themselves also; but (as Annius faith) without all authoritie, either diuine or humane.

Lastly, it appeareth that the floud did not so turne vpside-downe the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased, by this that when Noah fent out the Doue the second time, shee returned with an Oline leafe in her mouth, which shee had pluckt, and which (vntill the trees were discourred) shee found not: for otherwise shee might have found them floating on the water; a manifest proofe, that the trees were not torne vp by the rootes, nor swamme vpon the waters, for it is written, folium Oliua, raptum or decerptum, a leafe pluckt, (which is) to take from a tree, or to teare off. By this it is apparent, (there being nothing written 20 to the contrarie) that the floud made no fuch alteration, as was supposed, but that the place of Paradise might be seene to succeeding ages, especially vnto Moses, by whom it pleased God to teach the truth of the worlds creation, and vnto the Prophets which succeeded him: both which I take for my warrant, and to guide me in this discoucrie.

That Paradife was not the whole earth, as fome have thought: making the Ocean to be the fountaine of those foure Rivers.

His conceit of Aug. Chyfamenfis being answered, who only giueth his opinion for reason, I will in a few wordes examine that of the Manichies, of Nouiomagus, Vadianus, Goropius, Becanus, and all those that vnderflood, that by Paradife was meant the whole carth. But in this I shall not trouble the Reader with many wordes, because by those places of Scripture formerly remembred, this Vniucrfalitie will appeare altogether improper. The places which Vadianus alleageth, bring forth fruit and multiplie, fill the earth and subdue it, rule ouer enery creature, or. with this of the Acts, and hath made of one bloud all mankinde, to dwell on all the face of the earth, doe no way proue such a generali- 40 tie: for the world was made for man, of which he was Lord and Gouernour, and all things therein were ordained of God for his vse: Now although all men were of one and the same fountaine of bloud originally; and Adams posteritie inhabited in proceffe of time ouer all the face of the earth, yet it disproucth in nothing the particular garden, affigned to Adam to dreffe and cultiue, in which he lived in fo bleffed an estate before histransgression. For if there had beene no other choice, but that Adam had beene left to the Vniuerfall; Moses would not then haue said Eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath nor East nor West, but respectively. And to what end had the Angell of God beene set to keepe the East-side, and entrance into Paradise after Adams expulsion, if the Universall had beene Paradife? for then must Adam have been 50 chased also out of the world. For if All the earth were Paradise, that place can receiue no better construction then this, That Adam was driven out of the world into the world, and out of Paradise into Paradise, except we should believe with Metrodorus, that there were infinite worlds. Which to denie; he thinkes all one, as to afCHAP.3. S.7. of the Historie of the World.

firme, that in so large a field, as the universall, there should grow but one thistle. Novio-MAGVs vpon Beda, seemeth to be led by this, that it was vnpossible for those three Rivers, Ganges, Nelus, and Euphrates, (which water three portions of the world fo farre distant) to rise out of one sountaine, except the Ocean be taken for the Well, and the world for the Garden.

And it is true, that those four criuers, being so vnderstood, there could be no conjecture more probable; but it shall plainely appeare, that Pilon was falsly taken for Ganges, and Gehon fallly for Nilus, although Ganges be a river by Havilah in India, and Nilus runne through Athiopia. The Seventie write Chus for Athiopia, and thereto by the errours of the Manichees, and the mistakings of Nouiomagus, Goropius, and Vadianus, with others, are made manifest. Yet was their conjecture farre more probable, then that of Ephram, Cyrillus, and Athanasius: That Paradise was seated farre beyond the Ocean Sea, and that Adam waded through it, and at last came toward the Countrie, in which hee was created, and was buried at Mount Caluarie, in Hieru/alem. And certainly, though all those of the first age were of great stature, and so continued many yeares after the floud, yet Adams shinne bones must have contained a thousand sadome, and much more, if he had foorded the Ocean; but this opinion is so ridiculous, as it needs no argument to disprove it.

Of their opinion, which make Paradife as high as the Moone: and of others, which make it higher than the middle Region of the aire.

Hirdly, where as Beda faith, and as the Schoole-men affirme, Paradife to be a place, altogether removed from the knowledge of men (locus a cognitione hominum remotifimus) and Exceptus conceived, that Paralife was farre in the East, but mounted about the Ocean, and all the 20 Earth, and near the Orbe of the Moone (which opinion, though the Schoole-men charge Beda withall, yet Pererius laies it off from Beda vpon Strabus, and his Mr. Rabanus: ) and whereas Rupertus in his Geographic of Paradife, doth not much differ from the rest, but finds it seated next or nearest heaven; It may seeme, that all these borrowed this doctrine out of Plato, and Plato out of Socrates; but neither of them (as I conceine) well understood : who (undoubtedly) tooke this place for heauen it selfe, into which the soules of the bleffed were carried after death.

True it is, that these Philosophers durst not for feare of the Areopagites, (in this Diog.Lacrin and many other divine apprehensions) set downe what they beleeved in plaine Sco. termes, especially Plate: though Socrates in the end suffered death, for acknowledge-40 ing one only powerfull God; and therefore did the Deuill himselfe doe him that right, as by an Oracle, to pronounce him the wifest man. Instine Martyr affirmeth, Justin, Mart, that Plato had read the Scriptures; and St. Augustine gave this judgement of him, as admad Gent. his opinion, that (few things changed) he might be counted a Christian. And it see- dies. meth to me, that both Tertullian and Eusebius conceine, that Socrates, by that place aforesaid, meant the celestiall Paradile, and not this of Eden. Solinis, I grant reporteth, that there is a place exceeding delightfull and healthfull, vpon the top of Mount Atho (called Acrothones) which being about all clouds of raine, or other inconuenience, the people (by reason of their many yeares) are called Macrobio; (that is) Long-lined. A further argument is vsed, for proofe of the heighth of this 50 place, because therein was Enoch preserved from the violence of the floud : approued by Ilidore, and Peter Lumbard; in which place also Tertullian conceived, that the bleffed foules were prescrued till the last judgement; which Irenaus, and Instine Martyr also beleeved. But this opinion was of all Catholike Divines reproved, and in the Florentine Councell damned; of which St. Augustine more modefly gave this

judgement. Sicut certum est Enoch & Eliam nune viuere : ita vbi nune sunt, an in Paradiso an alibi, incertum est: (that is ) As it is certaine that ENOCH and ELIAS doe now line: so where they now line, in Paradise or elsewhere, it is uncertaine. But Barcephas gives a third cause, though of all other the weakest. For (saith he) it was necesfarie that Paradise should be set at such a distance and heighth, because the source Riuers (had they not fallen so precipitate) could not have had sufficient sorce to have thrust themselues under the great Ocean, and afterwards have forced their passage through the earth, and have rifen againe in the farre diffant Regions of India, Egypt, and Armenia.

These strange fancies and dreames have been answered by divers learned men 10 long fince, and lately by Hopkins and Pererius writing vpon this subject; of whose arguments I will repeat these few : for to vie long discourse against those things, which are both against Scripture and Reason, might rightly be judged a vanitie in the Answerer, not much inferiour to that of the Inventour. It is first therefore alleaged, that such a place cannot be commodious to liue in: for being set so neare the Moone, it had beene too neare the Sunne, and other heauenly bodies. Secondly, because it must have beene too joynct a Neighbour to the Element of fire. Thirdly, because the aire in that Region is so violently moued, and carried about with such swiftnesse, as nothing in that place can consist or have abyding. Fourthly, because the place betweene the Earth and the Moone (according 20 to Ptolomie and Alfraganus) is scuenteene times the Diameter of the Earth, which makes by a groffe account about one hundred and twentie thou and miles. Hereupon it must follow, that Paradife, being raised to this heighth, must have the compasse of the whole earth for a Basis & foundation. But had it been so raised, it could hardly be hidden from the knowledge, or cies of men: feeing, it would deprive vs of the Sunnes light, all the fore-part of the day, being seated in the East, as they suppose. Now, to fortific the former opinions, Toftatus addeth this, that those people which dwell neare those fals of waters, are deafe from their infancie, like those which dwell neare the Catadupa, or ouer-falls of Wilus. But this I hold as fained. For I have seene in the Indies, farre greater water-falls, than those of Nilus, and yet the people dwel- 20 ling neare them, are not deafe at all. Tostatus (the better to strengthen himselfe) citeth Baffl and Ambrosetogether : to which PERERIVS, Sed ego hac apad Basilium & Ambrolium in eorum scriptis, qua nunc extant, nusquam me legere memini; But I doe not remember (faith he) that I euer read those things, either in Balil or Ambrosc. But for the bodies of Enoch and Elias, God hath disposed of them according to his wisdome. Their taking vp might be into the celestiall Paradise, for ought we know. For although flelh and bloud, subject to corruption, cannot inherit the Kingdome of Heauen, and the seede must rot in the ground before it grow, yet we shall not all 1. CW. 15.36.51 die (faith St. PAVL) but all shall be changed: which change, in Enoch and Elias, was eafie to him that is Almightic. But for the rest, the Scriptures are manifest that by the 40 floud all perished on the earth, sauing eight persons, and therefore in the terrestrials Paradife they could not be.

For Tostatus his owne opinion, who soared not altogether so high as the rest, but belieued that Paradise was raised about the middle Region of the aire, and twentie cubits about all mountaines, that the floud did not therefore reach it: (which Scotus and other later Schoole-men also believed; for, say they, there were no sinners in Paradife, and therefore no cause to ouerwhelme it:) this is also contrarie to the expresse letter of the Scripture: which directly, & without admitting of any distinction teacheth vs, that the waters overflowed all the mountaines under heaven. And were it otherwise, then might we aswell give credit to Massus Damascenus, and the Thalmu- 50 difts, who affirme, that there were of the Giants that faued themselves on the mountaine Baris, and on syon. But to helpe this, Scotus, being (as the rest of the Schoolemen are) full of distinctions, saith; that the waters stood at Paradise, as they did in the Red Sea, and at Iordan; and as the floud was not naturall, so was Paradife faued

C H A P.3. S.8. by miracle. And Thomas Aquinas qualifieth this high conceit with this supposition, That it was not believed, that Paradife was so scated as Beds and others seeme to affirme in wordes, but by Hyperbole and comparatively, for the delicacie and beautic fo refembled. But this I dare anow of all those Schoole-men, that though they were exceeding wittie, yet they better teach all their followers to shift, then to resolue, by their distinctions. Wherefore not to stay long in answering this opinion of Tostatus, I confesse that it is written, that the Mountaines of Olympus, Asha, and Aslas, ouer-reach and furmount all windes and cloudes, and that (notwithstanding) there is found on the heads of the hilles both springs and fruits; and the Pagan Pricits, sacrito ficing on these mountaine tops, doe not finde the ashes (remaining of their sacrifices) blownethence, nor thence washt off by raines, when they returne : yet experience hath resolued vs, that these reports are fabulous, and Plenie himselfe (who was not fparing in the report of wonders) autweeth the contrarie. But were it graunted, yet the heighth of these mountaines is farre under the supposed place of Paradife; and on these selfe hilles the aire is so thinne (faith St. Augustine whom herein I mustrust) that it is not sufficient to beare up the body of a bird, having therein no feeling of her wings, or any sensible resistance of aire to mount her selfe by.

Of their opinion that seate Paradise under the Aquinoctiall: and of the pleasant habitation under those Climates.

Hole which come neare unto reason finde Paradise under the Aquino-Etial line, as Tertulian, Bonauenture, and Durandue; judging, that therevnder might be found most pleasure, and the greatest fertilitie of soile: but against it Thomas Aquinas objecteth the diftemperate heate, which he supposeth to be in all places so directly vnder the Sunne; but this is

30 (non caufa procaufa) for although Paradife could not be vnder the line, becaufe Eden is farre from it, in which Paradife was; and because there is no part of Euphrates, Tigrit, or Ganges vnder it, (Ganges being one of the foure rivers, as they suppose) yet this conceit of diffemper, (being but an old opinion) is found to be very vntrue, though for the coniecture not to be condemned, conlidering the age when those Fathers wrote, grounded chiefly on this: that whereas it appeared, that every Countrie, as it lay by degrees nearer the Tropick, and so toward the Aquinottiall, did so much the more exceede in heate. It was therefore a reasonable coniecture, that those Countries which were fituated directly under it, were of a diftemper uninhabitable; but it seemeth that Tertullian conceined better, and so did Autenne, for they both thought 40 them habitable enough; and though (perchance) in those dayes it might be thought a fantasticall opinion (as all are which goe against the vulgar) yet we now finde, that if there be any place vpon the earth of that nature, beautie, and delight, that Paradife had, the same must be found within that supposed vninhabitable burnt Zone, or within the Tropicks, and nearest to the line it selfe. For hereof experience hath informed reason, and Time hath made those things apparent, which were hidden, and could not by any contemplation be discoucred. Indeede it hath so pleased God to prouide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that fuch inconueniences which we contemplate a farre off, are found by triall and the witnesse of mens trauailes, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vaine, or 50 as afruitlesse lumpe to fashion out the rest. For God bimfelfe (laith I s A I) that formed 161 45 .181

the earth and made it, he that prepared it, he created it not in vaine, he formed it to be inhabited. Now we finde that these hottestregions of the world, seated under the Aquinoctiallline, or neare it, are so refreshed with a daylie gale of Easternely winde (which the Spaniards call the Brize, that doth euermore blow ftrongest in the heate of the day, as the downe-right beames of the Sunne can not fo much mafter it, that there is any inconvenience or differmperate heare found thereby. Secondly, the nights are fo cold, fresh and equall, by reason of the entire interpolition of the earth, as (for those places which my selfe haue seene, neere the Line and under it) I know no other part of the world of better, or equall temper, Onely there are some tracts, which by accident of high mountaines are barr'd from this ayre and fresh wind, and fome few fandie parts without trees, which are not therefore fo well inhabited as the rest, and such difference of soyles wee finde also in all other parts of the world. But (for the greatest part) those regions have so many goodly rivers, fountaines and · little brookes, abundance of high Cadars, and other stately trees casting shade, so ma- to ny forts of delicate fruites, cuer bearing, and at all times beautified with bloffome and fruit, both greene and ripe, as it may of all other parts bee belt compared to the Paradife of Eden: the boughes and branches are never vnclothed and left naked their sappe creepeth not under ground into the roote, fearing the injurie of the first incither doth Pomona at any times despise her withered hulband Vertumnus, in his Winter quarters and old age. Therefore are these Countries called Terra vitiofz; Vitious Countries: for nature being liberall to all without labour, necessitie imposing no industrie or trauell, idlenesse bringeth forth no other fruites then vaine thoughts, and licentious pleasures. So that to conclude this part, Tertullian and those of his opinion were not deceiued in the nature of the place: but Aquinas, who misliked this 20 opinion, andfollowed a worse. And (to say the trueth) all the Schoole-men were

Hele opinions answered, and the Region of Edennot found in any of those imaginarie worlds, nor vnder Torrida Zona; it followeth that now we discouer and finde out the scate thereof, for in it was Paradise by God planted. The difficultie of which fearch resteth chiefly in this, That as all Nations have often changed names with their Mafters; so are most of these places, by Moses remembred, forgotten by those names of all Historians and Geographers as well ancient as moderne.

Besides, we finde that the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians, (Cyrus onely and few other excepted) fought to extinguish the Hebrewes. The Gracians hated both their Nation and their Religion; and the Romanes despised once to remember 40 them in any of their stories. And as those three Monarchies succeeded each other: fo did they transforme the names of all those principall places and Cities in the East: and after them, the Turke hath fought (what hee could) to extinguish in all things, the ancient memorie of those people; which he hath subjected and inthralled.

Now befides those notable markes, Emphrates & Tigris, the better to find the way, which leaderh to the Countrey of Eden, we are to take for guides the set wo considerations (to wit) That it lay Eastward from Canaan and Iudea; and that it was of all other the most beautifull and fertile. First then in respect of situation, the next Country to Indea Eastward was Arabia Petraa; but in this Region was Moses himselfe when hee wrote: and the next vnto it Eastward also was Arabia the Defart, both which in re- 50 spect of the infertilitie could not be Eden, neither have any of the Arabians any such rivers, as are exprest to runne out of it: So as it followeth of necessitie, that Eden must be Eastward, and beyond both Arabia Petraa, and Deserta. But because Eden is by Mofes named by it selfe, and by the fertilitie, and the rivers onely described, we must

But to avoide confusion, we must understand that there were two Edens, one of which the Prophet Amos remembreth, where he divideth Spria into three Prouin- Cap. 1. verf. 1. ces, whereof, the first he maketh Syria Damascene, or Decapalitan: the second part is that Valley called Auenis, otherwise Conuallis, or the Tract of Chamath, where Allyria is joyned to Arabia the Defart, and where Ptolomie placeth the Cittle of Aueria: and the third is knowne by the name of Domus Edenis, or Calefiria, otherwise Vallis ca- Strabs. ua, or the hollow Valley, because the Mountaines of Libanus and Antilibanus, take all the length of it on both sides, and border it for Coele in Greeke is Caua in Latine. But this is not that Eden, which we feeke: neither doth this Prouince lie East from Canaan, but North, and so joyneth vnto it, as it could not be vnknowne to the Hebrewes. Yet, because there is a little Cittie therein called Paradise, the Jewes belee-20 ued this Calefyria to be the same which Moses describeth. For the same cause doth Hopkins in his Treatife of Paradife reprehend Beroaldus, in that he confoundeth this, Eden, with the other Eden of Paradife: though to give Beroaldes his right, I conceive that he ledde the way to Hopkins, and to all other latter writers, fauing, that he failed in diftinguishing these two Regions, both called Eden : and that hee altogether misunderstood two of the foure Rivers (to wit) Pifon and Gehon, as shall appeare hereafter. Now to finde out Eden, which (as Mofes teacheth vs) lay Eastward from the Defarts, where hee wrote after hee had paffed the redde Sea; wee must consider where those other Countries are found, which the Prophet Isai and Ezechiel ioyneth with it. For (faith Esalah) Gofan, Haran, and Reforb, and the children of Eden, 20 which were at Telaffar. Also Ezechiel ioyneth Haran with Eden, who, together with Ezech 27. v.23.

those of Sheba, Albur, and Chilmad, were the Merchants that traded with the Cittie of Tyre, which was then (faith Ezechiel) the Mart of the people for many Illes. And it hath euer beene the custome, that the Perfians conveyed their merchandile to Babylon, and to those Citties upon Euphrates, and Tigris, and from thence transported them into Syria, now Soria, and to the Port of the Mediterrane Sea : as in ancient times to the Cittie of Tyre, afterward to Tripolie, and now to Aleppo, from whence they imbarque them at the Port of Alexandretta, in the Bay of Isicus, now Laiazzo. Executed in the description of the magnificence of Tyre, and of the exceeding trade that it had with all the Nations of the East, as the only Mart-towne of that part of 40 the world, reciteth both the people, with whom they had commerce, and also what commodities every Countrie yeelded; and having counted the feuerall people and Countries, he addeth the particular trade, which each of them exercised. They were Versage thy Merchants (faith the Prophet) in all forts of things, in rayments of blew filter, and of

Merchants of Sheba and Raamah were thy Merchants, they occupied in thy Faires, with the chiefe of all Spices, and with all pretious flones and gold. Now these be indeed the riches which Persia and Arabia Fælix yeeld: and because Sheba and Raama are those parts of Arabia, which border the Sea, called the Persian Gulfe, therefore did those Nations 50 both vent fuch spice, sweet gummes, and pearles, as their owne Countries yeelded, and (withall) having trade with their neighbours of india, had from them also all forts of spices, and plentie of gold. The better to convey these commodities to that great Mart of Tyre, the Shebans or Arabians entred by the mouth of Tigris, and from the Cittie of Terredon (built or enlarged by Nabuchodonozor, now called Balfara) broidered workes, fine linnen, corrall and pearle: and afterwards speaking of the Merchants of Sheba and Raamah, and what kindes they traded, he hath these wordes. The thence fent up all these rich merchandises by boate to Bubylon, from whence by the body of Euphrates, as farre as it bended Westward, and afterward by a branch thereof, which reacheth within three daies journey of Aleppo, and then ouer land they past to Tyre, as they did afterward to Tripolie (formerly Hieropolie) and thence to Alexandretta, as aforesaid. Now the Merchants of Canneh, which Ezechiel ioyneth with Eden, inhabited farre up the river, and received this trade from Arabia and India, belides those proper commodities which themselves had, and which they received out of Persia, which bordered them. St. Hierome understandeth by Canneh, Seleucia, which is seated vpon Euphrates, where it breaketh into foure heads, and which tooke that name from Seleucus, who made thereof a magnificent Cittie. Hierofolymitanus 10 thinkes it to be Cteliphon, but Cteliphon is feated downe low vpon Tigris, and Cannel cannot be on that fide, I meane on the East-fide of Tigris, for then were it out of the Flin. 1.6. c.26. Plinie placeth the Schenite vpon Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fourdable, which is toward the border of Syria, after it leaueth to be the bound of Arabia the Defart, and where the river of Euphrates reflecteth from the De-fart of Palmirena: for these people of Canneh (afterward Schenita) inhabited both borders of Euphrates, stretching themselves from their owne Cittie of Canneh in Shinar Westward along the banks of Euphrates, as farre as the Cittie of Thap (acus, where Ptolomie appointed the Foords of Euphrates: which also agreeth with the description of the Schenita by Strabo, whose wordes are these; Mercatoribus ex Syria Seleuciam 20 & Babyloniam euntibus iter est per Schenitas, The Merchants which trauaile from Syria to Seleucia and Babylon, take their way by the Schenites. Therefore those which take Canneh for Charran doe much mistake it. For Charran, to which Abraham came from Vr in Chaldea (called by God) standeth also in Mesopotamia, not vpon Euphrates it selfe, but voon the river of Chaboras , which falleth into Euphrates : and the Merchants of Charran are distinctly named with those of Canneh in Ezechiel (as) they of Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the Merchants of Sheba, Ashur, and Chilmad were thy Merchants. Wherefore Charran which is fometime called Charre, and Haran, and Aran, is but the same Charran of Mesopotamia; and when it is written Aran, then it is taken for the region of Mesopotamia: or Aran flusiorum, the Greeke word (Mesopotamia) impor- 30 ting, a Countrie betweene Riucrs: for Mesos in Greeke, is Medius in Latine, and Potamos, fluuius; and when it is written Haran or Aran, it is then taken for the Cittle it felfe, to which Abraham came from Vr (as aforefaid.) For Strabo in the description of Arabia, giueth that Tract of land from the borders of Calefyria, to the edge of Mesopotamia, to the Schenite, who also inhabited on both sides of Euphrates, and were in after-ages accounted of these Arabians which inhabite Batanea, and the North part of the Defarts, stretching themselves toward the vnhabited Solitude of Palmirena, which lyoth betweene Syria, and Arabia the Defart. So as these of Canneb lay in the very ligh-way from Babylon to Tyre, and were neighbours (indifferent) to Charran and to Eden: and therefore they are by the Prophet Ezechiel coupled together, 40 they of Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, &c. But St. Hierome made a good interpretation of Canneb, or Chalne, by Seleucia: for Seleucia was anciently called Chalanne (witnesse Appian; ) and so Rabanus Maurus callethit in his Commentaries vpon Genesis; the name by time and mixture of languages being changed from Chalne or Canneh, to Chalanne: of which name there are two other Citties, flanding in Triangle with Seleucia, and almost the next vnto it, (as) Thelbe-canne, and Mann-canne; the one a little to the West of Selencia, and the other opposite vnto it, where these rivers of Tigris and Euphrates are ready to joyne. Therefore, which of these the ancient Canne was, (being all three within the bound of the Valley Shinar) it is vncertaine: but it is a note aswell of the importance of the place, as of the certaine seate thereof, that so many other Citties did retaine a part of the name in so many ages after. Neither is it vnlikely, that these additions of Thelbe and Mann to the word Canne, were but to make difference betweene the East and the West, or the greater and the lesse Canne, or betweene Canne the old, and the new : which additions to distinguish Citties by, are ordinarie in all the Regions of the world.

Now of the other Cittie ioyned with Eden, as Haran or Charran, St. Hierome on the Indges speaketh thereof in these words: Cumá, reverterentur, peruenerunt ad Jud. 1. Charran, qua est in medio itinere contra Niniuen, undecimo die, When they returned, they came to Charran, (which is the mid-way against Niniue) the eleuenth

Chaldes, Babylonia, Sinaar, idem funt (faith Comestor,) Three names of one Countrie : which Region of Babylonia tooke name of the Tower Babel; and the Tower, of the confusion of tongues. And that Shinar was Babylonia, it is proved in the eleventh Chapter of Genefis, in these wordes: And as they went from the Vert 2; East, they found a Plaine in the land of Shinar, and there they abode : in which Plaine Babylon was built (as aforefaid.)

Now Shinar being Babylonia, and Canneh, in the first beginning of N imrods greatneffe, and before he had fubdued any strange, or farre-off nations, being one part of his Dominion, and also named by Moses to be in Shinar, it proueth, that Canneh ioyneth to Babylonia; which also Ezechiel coupleth with Eden, and (further) affirmeth, that those of Eden were also the Merchants, which traded with the Tyrians : and Esai in the threats of Senacharib against Hierusalem (with other Nations that Senacharib vaunted that his Fathers had destroyed) nameth the children of Eden which were at Telaffar. But before I conclude where Eden it felfe lyeth, it is necessarie to describe those other Countries, which Ezechiel ioyneth therewith in the places before remembred, as, those of Sheba and Raamah. It is written in Genefit the tenth. Moreover Verf.7.

40 the sonnes of HAM were Custo, &c. And the sonnes of Cvs H were Scha, and Hauilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah, &c. And the sonnes of RAAMAH were Sheba, &c. and anon after Cv s H begat NIMR OD: To as Sheba was the grand-child of Culb, and Nimrod the fonne of culb, whose elder brother was Sebah: though some there are that conceive to the contrarie, that Nimred was the elder in valour and vnderstanding, though not in time and precedence of birth; who inhabited that part of Shinar, where Babel was built, afterwards Babylonia. His brother Rasmah or Regma tooke that part adiovning to Shinar, toward the Sea-side and Persian Gulfe (called afterward Raama and Sheba, by the Father and his Sonnes, which possessed it.) For (faith Ezechtel) the Merchants of Raamah and Sheba were thy Merchants, they occupied in thy Faires with the chief 50 of all spices, and all pretious stones, and gold. So as Sheba was that Tract of Countrie, which parteth Arabia deferta from Arabia Falix, and which in yneth to the Sea where Tigris and Euphrates fall out, and render themselves to the Ocean. This part, and the confining Countrie Strabo calleth Catabaria, where the best Myrrhe and Frankin- strabo. 1.16. cense is gathered; which people have an interchange or trade with Elana, lying on the East side of the Persian Gulfe. By this it appeareth who were the Shebans, spoken of by Ezechiel, and faid to have beene the Merchants of Tyre, for gold, spices, and pretious stones: of which they had not only plentie of their owne, but were also furnished from that part of India (called Elana according to Strabo) for exchange of their Aromatiques and other proper commodities. For as Strabo reporteth out of E-RATOSTHENES. In Persica ora initio Insula est, in qua multi & pretios vniones gignantur : in alysvero, clari & perlucidi lapilli. ERATOSTHENES (faith STRABO) affirmeth, that in the beginning of the Persian Gulfe there is an Island, in which there are many pretious pearles bred : and in other, very cleare and shining stones. Now the difference betweene Sheba, the sonne of Raamah, and Seba, the sonne of Cush, is in this, 10 That Seba is written with the Hebrew (Samech,) and Sheba with (Schin: ) bur whatfocuer the difference may be in the Hebrew Orthographic, their Countries and habitations are divers. For Sheba is that part which bordereth the Persian Sea; and Saba (whence the Queene of Saba) neighboured the redde Sea; and so that place of the 72. Pfalme, expounded. Reges Arabum & Saba, hath in the Hebrew this fense: Reges Sheba & Saba.

The Shebans Ezechiel nameth together with the Edenites, because they inhabited vpon the Out-let of the fame river, vpon which the Edenites were leated ; and for those of Sheba, towards the Sea-coast and vpon it, past vp the Countrie, by Tigris and Euphrates, being joyned in one maine streame, and so through the Region of Eden which 20 Tigris boundeth, thereby the better to conucy their merchandise toward Tre. And as the Citties of Charran, and Canneb, border Eden on the West and Northwest: fo doth Sheba on the South, and Chilmad on the North-east. Chilmad being a Region of the higher Media, as appeareth in the Chaldean Paraphrast, which Countrie by the Geographers is called Coromitena, (L) placed by exchange for (R:) which change the Hebrewes also often vse.

Thus much of those Countries which border Eden, and who altogether traded with the Tyrians: of which, the chiefe were the Edenites, inhabiting Telassar : for these Senacharib vaunted, that his Fathers had destroyed; and this place of Telasfar lay most convenient, both to receive the Trade from Sheba and Arabia, and also to 30 conney it over into Syria, and to Tyris. Now to make these things the more plaine, we must remember, that before the death of Senacharib, many parts of the Babylonian Empire fell from his obedience, and after his death these Monarchies were vtterly dilioyned.

For it appeareth both in Esai the 37 and in the second of Kings, by the threats of Rabfache, the while the Armie of Affiria lay before Hierufalem, that the Citties of Gofan, Haran, Refeph, and the Edenites at Telasfar, had relisted the Affyreans, though by them (in a fort) maistered and recourred. Have the Gods of the Nations delivered them, whom my Fathers have destroyed, as Gosan, and Haran, Reseph, and the children of Eden, which were at Telaffar. But it appeared manifestly after Senacharibs death, that 40 these Nations formerly contending, were then freed from the others subjection: for Esar-Haddon held Assyria, and Merodach Baladan, Babylonia. And after that the Armie of Senacharib, commanded by Rabsache, which lay before Hierusalem (Ezechias then raigning) while Senacharib was in Agypt, was by the Angell of God destroyed: the King of Babel fent to Ezechias, both to congratulate the recourse of his health, and his victorie obtained ouer the Affyrians. After which ouerthrow Senacharib himselfe was slaine by his owne sonnes in the Temple of his Idols, Efar-Haddon succeeding him in Affria. To the Babylonian Embassadours sent by Merodach, Ezechias shewed all his treasures, aswell proper as consecrate, which inuited the Kings of Babylon afterward to vndertake their conquest and subuersion. So as, the suspition of 50 warre encreasing betweene Babylon and Asyria, the Edenites which inhabited the borders of Shinar towards the North, and towards Affria, were imployed to beare off the incursions of the Affireans; and their Garrison-place was at Telastar: and the

rians. This place Hierofolymitanus takes for Refem, others for Scleucia: but this Telaffar is the fame, which Am. Marcellinus in the Historie of Iulian (whom he followed in the enterprise of Persia) calleth Thilutha in stead of Telassar, who describeth the exceeding strength thereof in his 24. Booke : It is scatted in an Island of Euphrates vppon a steepe and vnassaultable Rocke, in so much as the Emperour Iulian durst not attempt it; and therefore it was a convenient place for a Garrison against the Assirians, being also a passage out of Mesopotamia into Babylonia, and in which the Edenites of the Countrie adioyning were lodged to defend the same. This place Ptolomie calleth Teridata, having Reseph (which he calleth Resepha) on the left hand, and Canneh, Asia Tab. 41

10 (which he calleth Thelbe-canne) on the right hand, not far from whence is also found the Cittie of Mann-canne vpon Tigris, and all these seated together, as Esay and Ezechiel have forted them. But the vinderstanding of these places is the more difficult; because Assyria (which the Chaldeans call Atturia) and Mesopotamia, were so often confounded the one taken for the other by interchange of Dominion. Allria & Melopotamia in Babylonia nomen transicrunt (saith NIGER,) Assiria and Mesopota- cosmoe Asia. mia tooke the name of Babylonsa. Lastly, it appeareth by those adiacent Regions by the Prophets named, in what part of the world Eden is feated, as, by Charran or Haran in Mesopotamia : also by Canneh and Reseph, according to the opinion of Vatablus, who in these wordes translateth this place: Plantauerat autem I EHOVAH Deus hor-20 tum in Eden, ab Oriente, The Lord God planted a garden in Eden, Eastward: that is (faith he in his Annotations.) Iusserat nasci arbores in Eden, Regione Orientali, in finilus Arabia & Mesopotamia, He commanded trees to grow in Eden, an Easterne Region in the borders of Arabia and Me Copotamia.

Of divers other testimonies of the land of Eden; and that this is the Eden of Paradife.

Nd for a more particular pointing out of this Eden, it seemes by the two Epistles of the Nessorian Christians, that inhabite Mesopotamia, which Epiftles in the yeare 1552. they fent to the Pope about the confirming of their Patriarch, and Andreas Mafeus hath published them, translated out of Syriac into Latine. By these Epistles (I say) it seemes we may haue some farther light for the proofe of that, which we haue said about the Region of Eden in those parts. For in them both there is mention of the Island of Eden in the River Tigris, or at least, Tigris in both these Epistles is called the River of Eden. This Island as Masius in his Praface to these Epistles faith, is commonly called Gozoria (as it were, the Island, by an eminencie) It hath (faith he) tenne miles in circuit, and was 40 sometimes walled round about, which name of the Island Eden may (doubtleffe) remaine to this day; though in the rest of the Region so called this name be swallowcd vp, with the fame of those flourishing Kingdomes of Mesopotamia, Asspira, Babylowia, and Chaldea. This Island of Eden hath up the River, and not farre beyond it, the Cittie of Hafan-Cepha, otherwise Fortis Petra: below it, it hath Mofal or Mosel, from which (as in that which followeth it shall appeare out of Massus) it is not about twelue miles diftant. Neither is it to trouble vs, that Mofal or Mofel by Marius Niger is remembred among the Citties higher vp Tigris, in these wordes. Iuxts autem V: sup 2. Tigrim, Ciuitates sunt Dorbeta prope Taurum montem, qua nunc Mosel dicitur, magna sane, &c. (that is) By Tigris are these Citties, Dorbeta neare unto mount Tauras (which 30 is now called Mofel) which is a great one, &c. This opinion of Niger, displacing Mofel, and making it to be Dorbeta (I say) needes not here to trouble vs : seeing for this matter, the testimonie of Masius informed by the Christians that dwelt there (the Seat of whose Patriarch it is) ought to be of credit, anowing that this Mofal (or Mozal) is in the confines of Mesopotamia and Assyria, seated upon Tigria, and in the neighbourhood of Niniue; and that it is the famous Seleucia Parthorum. The Nestorian Chri-Stians in their former epiftle call it Attur in these words: Ex omnibus Civitatibus de pagis que sunt circum Civitatem Mozal (hoc est) Attur in vicinia Niniues 3 Of all the Citties and townes which are about the Citic of Mozal (that is) Attur in the neighbourhood of Niniue. As also Niger acknowledgeth Ctesiphon, a Cittie thereabout to be called Asfur (which is the fame as Attur, after the Dialett of those Nations, which change sh into T.) Neither is it much that he should mistake Ctesiphon (which is not farre off Seleucia) for Seleucia, to be Affur. By this then we may come somewhat necre the end of our purpose. For the the of Eden, which lyeth in the breast of Tigris, is but twelve miles from Moful, and that ancient Cittie, which Ptolomie and Tacitus call Winus, 10 and the Scriptures Niniue, Philostratus, and Simeon Sethi, Mofula, and Iohn Leon Mo-(al, others Mosse, (though it be not the same with Mosal) is set but a little higher vpon the same river of Tigris, neere Mofal: so that we are like to finde this ile of Eden heere-about. For the same Andreas Masius which placeth it about Molal.

makes it to be belowe Hasan-chepha, which is vpon the same river of Tigris. The onely difficultie is this, that some perhaps may thinke, that the words of the 2 estorians in both their epiftles speake not of any Ile in Tigris, called the Ile of Eden, but of an Ile in Tigris, ariver of Eden. But this sense of their words in my opinion seemeth the more vnprobable. And yet if this were the meaning heere, we have a testimonie from the learned of those parts, that not onely Euphrates, but also Tigris was 26 ariuer of Eden, and that the name of Eden in those parts is not yet quite worne out, though the Region hath beene subject to the same change, that all other kingdomes of the world have beene, and hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages. received new and differing names. For the South part of Eden, which stretcheth over Euphrates, was after the floud called Shinar, and then of the tower of Babel, Babylomis; and the North part of Eden is that Tract of Melopotamia, Allyria, and Armenia, which embraceth both the banks of Tigris, betweene Mount Taurus, and Seleucia. And of this Region of Eden that auncient AETHICVS maketh mention, (not that latter AETHICVS disciple of CALLINICVS, otherwise by PLVTARCH and ATHEN AEVS called ISTRI, who lived in Agypt in the raigne of PHILADEL- 20 PHVs, but an other of a farre higher and remote time) the same being made Latine out of Greeke by S. HIEROME. And though by corruption of the ancient coppie it be written in AETHICVS Adonu, for Edenis, yet Adonis being a river of Phaniera, cannot be vnderstood to be the region named by AETHICVS. For AETHIc v s makes it a Countrie, and not a river, and ioyneth it with Mesopotamia and Athiopia, calling the land of CH vs Ethiopia, after the Vulgar, and Septuagint. And lastly, the river which watereth the Regions (fayth AETHICVS) falleth into the Gulte of Persia: which river he calleth Armodius, for Tigris; Tigris being but a name imposed for the swiftnesse thereof. And out of Armenia both Tigris and Euphrates have their originall: for out of Eden came a river, or rivers, to water the gar- 40 den, both which rivers (to wit) Tigris and Euphrates come out of Armenia, and both of them trauerse Mesopotamia, Regions first of all knowne by the name of Eden for their beautie and fertilitie. And it is very probable, that Eden contained also fome part of Armenia, and the excellent fertilitie thereof in divers places is not vnworthie the name of Eden. For in some part thereof (fayth STRABO) the leaves are alwayes greene, and therefore therein a perpetuall Spring. Alfo STEPHANVS de wrbibus mentioneth the Cittie of Adana vpon Euphrates: and the name of Eden was in vie in Amos time, though he speake not of Eden in the East, but of Eden in Calesyria. But to the end I may not burden the readers patience with too long a difcourse, it may suffice to know, that Euphrates and Tigris (once joyned together, and 50 afterward separate) are two of those source heads, into which these rivers which are fayd to water the garden of Paradift, were divided: whose courses being knowne, Eden, (out of which they are fayd to come) cannot be vnknowne. Now that Hiddekel and Perath were Tigris and Euphrates it is agreed by all: for the Scuentie and all others conuert Perath by Euphrates, & Hiddekel Tigrim omnes exponunt : and all men winderstand Hiddekel by Tigris (sayth VATABLE.) And because that which I have favd of the Ile of Eden, shall not be subject to the censure of self-invention, I have heere-under fet downe the words out of the two generall epiftles of the Nestorians, as Masius (ad verbum) hath converted them into Latine. The occasion of those letters and fupplications to the Pope were, that the Nestorian Christians which inhabit Mesopotamia, Asyria, Persia, and Babylonia, and have to this day (at least in Queene Maries time they had) fitteene Churches in one Cittie, called Seleucia Parthorum, or Molel vpon the river of Tigris, having no fufficient authoritie to choose themselves 10 a Patriarch (which cannot be done without fower or three Metropolitan Bishops at least) fent to the Bishop of Rome in the yeare of Christ 1552 (as aforefaid) a Petition to obtaine allowance vnto fuch an election as themselves had made : having three hundred yeare before that vpon the like defect, sent one Marans thither to be confirmed; and in this negotiation they make knowne to the Bishop of Rome the flate of the Christian Church in those parts: for vpon the death of their Patriarch (who of a couctous defire to enrich himself had forborne to institute Metropalitane Bifloops, when the places fell void) they all affembled themselves together to consult of the Church-gouernment. And because all the Patriarchs for 100 yeares had been of one house and familie to the prejudice of the Church, and that there yet remai-20 ned one Bilhop of the same stock and kindred, who aspired to the same dignitic, which his Predeceffours had held, the rest of the Profesiours refused to allow him. Vpon which occasion, and for the choice of a Gouernour more sufficient, the Teachers in all the Churches affembled themselues. The words of the generall epistle to the Pope are these, about the middle of the sayd epistle. Verum nos non acceptauimus neque proclamanimus ipsum, sed subitò conuenimus ex omnibus locis Orientalibus, & ex omnibus Ciuitatibus & Pagis que funt circum Ciuitatem Mofel (hoc est) Attur, in vicinia Niniues, ex Babylonia, ex Charrha, ex Arbella, ex Insula qua est in medio Tigris, fluminis, Eden, ex Tauris Persia, ex Nisibi, &c. which is, But we did neither accept of this man, neither pronounced him: but suddenly we assembled our selves out of all parts of the 30 East, and out of all the Cities and Villages which are about Mosel (or Attur) neighbouring Niniue, and out of Babylon, Carrha, Arbella, and out of the Iland which lyeth in the middle of Tigris, a riner of Eden, or rather, out of the Ile of Eden, which lyeth in the riner Tigris. And in a second epistle at the same time sent, they vie these words: Neque supersunt apud nos Metropolica, quorum est ordinare Catholicum, sed soli panci Episcopi, Episcopus Arbele, Episcopus Salmasti, Episcopus Adurbeigan, en è vestigio conuenimus in Insulam, que est intra Tigrim flumen, Eden, fecimus q, compactum inter nos &c. (which is) Neither are there remaining among us any Metropolitan Bishops to whome it belongs to ordaine a Patriarch, but onely a few Bishops, as, the Bishop of Arbela, the Bishop of Salma-flus, and the Bisbop of Adurbeigan: but loe we assembled speedily in the Iland Eden, which 40 is in Tigris, and agreed betweene our felues &c. Now this Iland of Eden Masius describeth with other places; which being well conceined, the Westerian epistles, and the state of the Church may be in those parts (faythhe) the better vnderstood. And after he hath distinguished the fower forts of Christians in those parts of the world, and in the South part of Africa, which hee calleth Nestorians, Iacobites, Maronita, and Cophti, he goeth on in these words : Mox. auditaillius morte, concurrisse aiebant tumultuario in illam quam modo dixi Tigris insulam, que duodecem circiter passuum millibus supra Mosal posita, decem sere millia possuum Suo ambitu continet, muris undiq cincta, & à paucis alijs qu'am Christianis hominibus habitata: which is, Now hearing of the death of the Patriarch (as those that came to Rome 30 reported) they ran tumultuously together into that Ilandof Tigris or Eden before spoken of, which Iland is situated about 12 miles about Mosel, containing very neere ten miles in compasse, and every where invironed with a wall, inhabited by a few other men than Chriflians. And afterward he maketh a recapitulation of the Christian Churches; among the rest he addeth the Isle of Eden by the name of Geferta, Infula Tigris: fine Geferta.

Furthermore, describing the Citie of Hosan-cepha, or Fortis Petra, he placethit supra pradictam Tigris Insulam rupi aspera impositam, about the foresaid Iland of Tigris, being feated on a fleepe rock. Of this Hand of Geferta Andrew Theuet maketh mention in his tenth booke of his generall Cosmographie in these words: Geserta ou Gestre est au milieu de la riuiere du Tigre, & pense que c'est une terre des plus fertiles de toute l'Asie. Geserta or Gesire is in the middle of Tigris, the soile the most fertile of all Asia.

By this we see that the ancient name of Eden liueth, and of that Eden, which lyeth Eastward from Arabia Petras, and the Defart where Moses wrote, and that Eden which bordereth Charran according to Ezechiel, and that Eden which is scated according to the affertion of the faid Prophet, and ioyned with those Nations of Re- 10 feph, Canneh, and Charran, and the rest which traded with the Tyrians, and is found at this day in the parting of the two Regions of Assyria and Babylonia, where the Edenites in Thelassar were garrisond to relist the Assprians, whose displantation Senacherib vaunted of (as aboue written) and lastly, the same Eden, which embraceth Tigris, and looketh on Euphrates, two of the knowne rivers of those foure, which are by all men ascribed to Paradife.

XI.

Of the difficultie in the Text, which feemeth to make the foure rivers to rife from one streame.

Que verba melius consentient cum rei narratione, & eius dem explicatione, si ita reddantur. Et fluuius erat egrediens ex Edene, (hoc cft) fluui procedebant ex Edene regione ad rigandum pomarium, & inde dividebatur, & erat in quatuor capita: which is, And a River went 30 out of the place of pleasure to water Paradise, and thence was divided into source heads: which words (fayth Beroaldus) doe better agree with the narration and explication of the place, if they be thus translated : And a river was going forth of Eden (that is) Rivers went forth, and ran out of the Region of Eden to water the Orchard, and from thence it was diuided, and they became foure heads. The Tigurine differs from the Vulgar or Latine, for it converts it thus: Et fluuius egrediebatur de delicijs. And a River went out of pleasure in stead of Eden; and the Latine addeth the word locus, or place, Et fluius egrediebstur de locovoluptatis: And a River went out of the place of pleasure, and so the word (place) may rightly be referred to Eden, which was (of all other) a Region most delightfull and fertile; and so also the word (inde) and thence was divided, hath reference to the 40 Countrie of Eden, and not to the garden it selfe.

And for the word (river) for rivers, it is viuall among the Hebrewes: for it is written. Let the earth bud forth the bud of the hearbe, that seedeth seede, the fruitfull tree, &c. Heere the Hebrew vieth the Singular for the Plurall, bearbe and tree for hearbs and trees; and againe, we eat of the fruit of the tree, in stead of (trees:) And thirdly, The man and his wife hid themselues from the presence of God. In medio ligns Paradisi. In the middle of the tree of the garden, for (trees.) And of this opinion is David Kimbi, and Vatablus, who vpon this place of Genesis say, that the Hebrewes doe often put the Singular for the Plurall, as illud, for vnumquodg, illorum, and he giveth an instance in this question it felfe, as A river (for rivers) went out of Eden.

And this answere out of divers of the learned, may, not without good reason, be giuen to the obiection, That Moses speaketh but of one river, from which the heads should divide themselves. Howbeit I denie not, but with as good (and perhaps better) reason we may expound the fower heads, to be fower notable passages into famous Countries. And so we may take the word (river) verse the tenth for one river (to wit) Euphrates, as this name comprehendeth all the branches thereof. For this River, after he is past the place, where we suppose Paradife to have beene, divides it felfe, and ere long yeeldeth fower notable paffages into feuerall Countries, though not all the way downe streame, (for this is no where in the Text) where it is noted. that following the river downeward, there is conveyance into the Countries named in the Text, though part of the way to one of the Countries (to wit, to Allyria, were vp Tigris.

To this end the Text speaking of Hiddekel, as it riseth from the River of Eden, to doth not fay it compaffeth or walketh the whole Region of Affyria, (as it had vied this phrase of Pison and Gehon) but that it runneth toward Assiria. The first branch Pi(on, is Nahar-malcha, (by interpretation) Basilius, or flumen regium, which runneth into Tigris vnder Apamia, whence ariseth the name of Pasitigris, (as it were) Piso-tigris. This leadeth to the land of Hauila or Susiana. The second branch Gehon, is that which in Historians is Nabarsares, or Narragas, for Nabar-ragas: both which names signifie flumen derivatum (a river derived) also Acracanus, quasi Ranosus, by reason of the froggie fennes which it maketh; this Gehon leadeth to the first seate of Chus, about the borders of Chaldea and Arabia, and it is lost at length in the Lakes of Chaldea. The third branch, Hiddekel, may be expounded the vpper streame of Pi-20 fon, or Basilius, which runneth into Hiddekel properly so called (that is, into Tigris) aboue Seleucia, where it sheweth a passage vp Tigris into Assyria: where, because at length it is called Hiddekel, or Tigris, having before no knowne proper name, the Text in this place calleth it Hiddekel from the beginning. The fourth Perath or Euphrates, so called per excellentiam, being the Bodie of the River Euphrates, which runneth through Babylon and Otris. But, be it ariuer, or rivers, that come out of Eden, feeing that Tigris and Euphrates are noted in the Text, there can be no doubt, but that Paradife was not farre from these Rivers: for that Perath in Moses is Euphrates, there can be no question; and (indeede) as plaine it is that Hiddekel is Tigris. For Hiddekel goeth (faith Moses) Eastwards towards Affur, as we finde, that Tigris is the River of 30 Affriaproprie dicta, whose chiefe Cittie was Niniue, as in Genesis the tenth it is written: That out of that land (to wit) Babylonia, Numrod went into Affur, and builded Niniue, which was the chiefe Cittie of Affyria.

And as for the kinde of speech here vsed in the Text, speaking of sourcheads; though the heads of Rivers be (properly) their fountaines, yet here are they to be vnderstood, to be spoken of the beginning of their division from the first streame. Caput aqua (faith VLPIANVS) illudeft, unde aqua nascitur; si ex fonte nascatur fons; siex flumine, vel ex lacu prima initia, &c. If the beginning of the water be out of a fountaine, then is the fountaine taken for the head: if out of a lake, then the lake; and if from a maine river any branch be separate and divided, then where that branch doth first 40 bound it selfe with new bankes, there is that part of the river, where the branch forfaketh the maine streame, called the head of the river.

Of the strange fertilitie and happinesse of the Babylonian Soile, as it is certaine that Eden was fuch.

T may also be demanded, whether this region of Edan, by vs descri-bed, be of such fertilitie and beautie, as Edan the seate of Paradyse was: which if it be denied, then must we also consider, that there was no part of the earth, that retained that fertilitie and pleasure, that it had before the curse: neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulnesse to any part of the earth, nor the same vertue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the floud; and therefore this Region of Eden may be now no fuch flourishing Countrie, as it was when it was first created in his perfection. Yet this I finde Harod. clis. H.t. written of it: First in Herodotio, who was an eye-witnesse, and speaketh of the very place it selfe, for the Isle of Eden is but twelve miles or thereabout from Ninine, and To from Mosal. Ex Euphrate exiens in Tigrim, alterum flumen, iuxta quod Vrbs Ninus sita crat, Hacregio, omnium quas nos vidimus, optima est, &c. Where Euphrates runneth out into Tigris, not farre from the place where Ninus is seated, This Region, of all that we have feene, is most excellent; and he addeth afterward. Cereris autem fructu procreando adeo ferax est, vt nunquam non fere ducenta reddat, &c. (that is) It is so fruitfull in bringing forth Corne, that it yeeldeth two hundred fold : The leaves of Wheate and Barley being 10 almost foure fingers broade : As for the height of Millet and Sesame, they are even in length like unto trees, which although I know to be true, yet I forbeare to feakehereof well knowing, that those thinges which are reported of this fruitfulnesse, will seeme very incredible to those, which never were in the Countrie of Babylon. They have commonly in all the Countrie Palme-trees growing of their owne accord, the most of them bearing fruit, out of which they make both meats, and wine, and honnie, ordering them as the Fig-trees. Thus farre Herodotus,

To this Palme-tree so much admired in the East India, Strabo and Niger adde a fourth excellencie, which is, that it yeeldeth bread; Ex quibus panem, o mel, o vinum, & acetum conficiunt, Of which these people make bread, wine, honnie, and vineger. But 20 Antonius the Eremite findeth a fift commoditie, not inferiour to any of those foure, which is, that from this selfe-same Tree there is drawne a kind of fine flaxe, of which people make their garments, and with which in East India they prepare the cordage for their ships; and that this is true Athanasius in the life of Antonius the Eremit confesseth, saying: That he received a garment made thereof from the Eremite himselfe, which he brought with him out of this Region. So therefore those trees, which the East Indies fo highly esteeme and so much admire (as indeede the Earth yeeldeth no plant comparable to this) those trees (I say) are in this upper Babylon, or Region of Eden, as common as any trees of the field. Sunt etiam (faith STRABO) passim per omnem regionem Palma sua sponte nascentes, There are of Palmes over all the whole Region, grow- 30 ing of their owne accord. Of this place Quintus Curtius maketh this report. Euntibus à parte laua Arabia odorum fertilitate nobilis, regio campestris interest inter Tigrim & Euphratem, iacens tam obere & pingui solo, ot à pastu repelli pecora dicantur, ne satietas perimat, (that is) As you traualle on the left hand of Arabia (famous for plentic of sweet odours) there lyeth a champaine Countrie placed betweene Tigris and Euphrates, and so fruitfull and fat a soile, that they are said to drive their cattell from the pasture, least they should perish by satietie. Bis in anno segetes Babylonij secant, The Babylonians cut their corne twice a yeare (faith Niger.) And as Countries generally are more fruitfull to the Southward, then in the Northern parts: so we may judge the excellence of this by that report which Strabo maketh of the South part of Armenia, which is the North border 40 of Eden, or a part thereof; his wordes be these in the Latine, Tota enim hac regio frugibus & arboribus abundat mansuetis, itemas semper virentibus, This Region aboundeth with pleasant fruits, and trees alwaies greene: which witnesseth a perpetual! Spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the Sunnes neighbourhood, the life and stirrer vp of nature in a perpetual lactivitie. In briefe so great is the fertilitie of the ground, that the people are constrained twice to mow downe their cornefields, and a third time to eate them vp with sheep: which husbandrie the Spaniards wanting in the Valley of Mexico, for the first fortie yeares, could not make our kinde of Wheate beare feede, but it grew vp as high as the trees, and was fruitlesse. Besides, those fields are altogether without weedes (faith Plinie) who addeth this singulari- 50 tie to that soile, That the second yeare the very stubble (or rather falling downe of the feedes againe) yeeldeth them a haruest of Corne without any further labour; his wordes are these: Vbertatis tanta funt, vt sequenti anno sponterestibilis siat seges.

Of the River Pison, and the land of Havilah,

CHAP.3. S.13.

Fter the discouerie of Eden, and the tentholise of the returned of, it reflects to prove that Pijon and Gebon are branches of Tigris, and Euphrates. For that the knowledge and certainety of these two rivers should trouble so many wise men, it is strange to me, seeing necessitie it though the province indeed them out: for Eu-Fter the discouerie of Eden, and the testimonies of the fertilitie thereselfe (Tigris and Euphrates being knowne) findeth them out : for Euphrates or Tigris, or both be that river or rivers of Eden, which water Paradife, which riuer or riuers Mases witneffeth afterward; divided into soure heads, whereof the one is called Pifon, the other Gehon, &c. Could there be a stranger fancie in the world, then when we find both these (namely) Tigris and Euphrates in Assiria and Mesopotamia, to feeke the other two in India and Egypt, making the one Ganges, and the other Nilus? Two rivers as farre distant, as any of fame knowne or discovered in the world: the Scriptures making it fo plaine, that these rivers were divided into source branches; and with the Scriptures, Nature, Reason and Experience bearing witnesse. There is no errour, which hath not fome flipperie and bad foundation, or fome apparance of probabilitie refembling truth, which when men (who studie to be singu-20 lar) finde out, (straining reason according to their fancies) they then publish to the world matter of contention, and jangling: not doubting but in the variable deformitie of mens minds to finde some partakers or sectatours; the better by their helpe to nurse and cherish such weake babes, as their owne inventions have begotten.

But this miltaking (and first for the river of Pifon) feemeth to have growne out of the not diffinguishing of that Region in India, called Hauilah, from Hauilah, which adioyneth to Babylonia, afterward knowne by the name of Susiana. For Hauilah vpon Tigris tooke name from Hauilah the sonne of Cush; and Hauilah in India from Hauilab the sonne of Ioctan, the one remembred by Moles in the description of Paradife, Gm. 10.7. the other where Moles letteth downe the generations of Noah and his sonnes after 30 the floud. For the sonnes of Cush were Seba, Hauilah, Sabtah, and Raamah; and the fonnes of Ioctan were Ophir, and Hauilah, &c. of which later (to wit) of Ophir and Hauilah the sonnes of Ioctan, that Iland of Ophir, (whence Salomon had gold) and Hauilah adioyning had their names. Now because Ganges is a great and a samous river of the East India, and Hauilah a Countrey of the same, and is situated upon Ganges, hence it came that Ganges was taken for Pilon, which river is faid by Moles to water 2.16 the land of Hauilah. Or perhaps it was supposed that those four rivers, named by Moles, must of necessitie befoure of the greatest in the world; whence (supposing that Ganges was the next great and famous river after Tigris and Euphrates, they chole out this river to make one of the foure. And yet certainely there is an other river, 40 whomein these respects they should rather have chosen then Ganges; for the river Indus on this fide India, for beautie, for nearneffe, and for abilitie, giveth no way place to Ganges; but exceedeth it in all. And how can any reasonable man conceive, that Ganges can be one of the foure heads: feeing Indus commeth betweene it and Tigris; and betweene Tigris and Indus is all that large Empire of Persia, consisting of many Kingdomes. And againe, farther toward the East, and beyond Indust, are all those ample Dominions of Indiaintra Gangem, which lie betweene those two proud rivers of Indus and Ganges, now called the Kingdome of Mogor. So as if Indus bee not accounted for any of the foure, because it is removed from Tigris by all the breadth of Persia, then how much lesse Ganges, which falleth into the Ocean, little lesse then 50 fortie degrees to the Eastward of Indus? Surely whosoeuer readeth the Storie of Alexander shall finde, that there is no river in Asia, that can exceede Indus. For Hydaspis was of that breadth and depth, as Alexander thereon in great Gallies transported himselfe and the greatest part of his armie, and in sayling downe that branch of Indus, found it so large and deepe, and by reason thereof so great a billow, as it endangered his whole Fleete, which was readic to be swallowed up therein: Hydaspis (as aforefaid) being but one of many branches of Indus, comparable to it, and as great as it. having belides this, the Rivers of Coas, of Snastus, Acelines, Adris, (otherwise Hirotis) Hispalis, and Zaradrus, all which make but one Indus, and by it are swallowed vp with all their children and companions, which being all incorporate and made one streame, it crosseth athwart Asia, and then at Cambaia visiteth the Ocean Sea.

But because Pilon, which compasseth Hanilah, as also Gehon, which watereth Cull, must somewhere be joyned with the rest in one bodie, or at least be found to proceed out of the same Countrie of Eden, out of which the other two heads doe proceed, out of doubt they cannot either the one or the other, be Ganges, or Nilus: for 10 Wilus riscth in the verermost of the South, and runneth Northward into the Mediterran Sea; and the River Ganges rifeth out of the mountaine Imaus, or (as others will haue it) Caucasus, which divides the Northerne Seythia from India, and runneth from North to South into the Indian Ocean. And as for Perath and Hiddekel (that is, Euphrates and Tigris) the one of them is begotten in Armenia, necre Georgiana Or Iberia, the other not farre off in the same Armenia, by the Gordican mountaines, so as Ganges who onely trauaileth in her owne India, and Nilus through Athiopia and Agypt, neuer faw the land of Eden, or joyned themselves in one Channell, either with themselues, or with either of the other; and therefore could not at any time from thence be separated, or divided into sower heads or branches, according to 20 Moses. Therefore the River Pifon, which enricheth Hauilah, is the same which by joy-

Gen. 2. v. 12.

ning it selfe with Tigris, was therefore called Pisi-tigris, or Piso-tigris, of Pison and Tioris, which river watereth that Hauilah, which Hauilah the fonne of CvsH gaue name vnto, and not Hauilah of India, so called of HAVILAH the sonne of I octan, who inhabited with his brother OPHIR in the East. And this Hauilah of the Cu-Ihites hath also Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx stone. This Bdellium is a tree, of the bignesse of an Oliue, whereof Arabia hath great plentie, which yeeldeth a certaine gumme, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also Bdellium. The Hebrewes take the Load-stone for Bdellium. Beroaldus affirmeth, that Bdela in Hebrew signi- 30. fieth Pearle: so doth Eugubinus; and Hierome calls it Oleaster: be it what it will, a tree bearing gumme, or pearle: Hauilah, or Sufiana hath plentie of both. Now this Countrie of Susiana or Hauilah stretcheth it selfe toward the North, as farre as the Altars of Hercules, and from thence embraceth all that Tract of land Southward, as farre as the Persian Gulfe, on the East side thereof: from which East side had the Shebans (which traded with the Cittie of Tyre, according to Ezechiel) their great plentie of gold, which Straboalfo witneffeth, as was shewed before. The Greekes had a conceipt, that Pison was Danubius: the Rabbines take it for Steuch.

But Nilus findeth the same impossibilitie that Ganges doth: and Danubius hath the 40 Sea of Hellespont and all Asia the leffe, betweene it and Tigris. Now Pison which runneth through Hauilah or Susiana, doth to this day retaine some signe of this name; for where it and Tigris embrace each other vnder the Cittie of Apamia, there doe they agree of a joynet and compounded name, and are called Pifo-tigris. And it is strange vnto me, that from so great antiquitie there should be found remayning any resembling sound of the first name: for Babylon it selfe, which dwelleth so neere these rivers, is by some writers knowne by the name of Bandas, as, by Postellus, by Castaldus, of Baldach: by Barius, of Bagdad; and of Boughedor, by Andrew Theuet; and yet all those that have lately seene it, call it Bagdet. To this river of Pison, Ptolomie indeed with many others give the name of Basilius, or Regius, and Gehon they terme 50 Mahar-fares and Marsias, and Baarsares. So is Euphrates, neere the Spring and foun-

Nilus. Aben-ezra (fayth Hopkins) out of Rabbi Saadia translateth Pison into Nilus:

Poft.Colmoz. Theuet Cofmog. Afie.tab.4.

Plin.lib.s.e.24. taine, by Strabo and Plinie called Pixirates: by Iunius, Puckperath, out of the Hebrew, (that is) The profusion, or comming forth of Euphrates: where it breaketh through the mountaine Taurus, it takes the name of Omyra. Plutarch calls it Medus and Zaranda: the Hebrewes Parath, (fayth Ar. Montanus: ) Pagninus, Perath: Iosephus, Phorah; Eusebius, Zozimus: Ammianus, Chalymicus: Gistilanus and Colinutius terme it Cobar: which Ezechiel calleth Chebar; but this is but a branch of Euphrates. The Affrians know it by the name of Armalchar or Nahor Malcha: but now commonly it is called Frai.

The fame confusion of names hath Tigris, as, Diglito, and Diglath, Seilax, and Sollax: of the Hebrewes it was called Hiddikel: now of the inhabitants Tegil.

But Mercer vpon Genesis conceineth rightly of these rivers: for Euphrates and Tigris (fayth he) streame into fower branches, two of which keepe their ancient to names, and the other two are called Pifon and Gehon. The reason, why these two riuers ioyned in one (below Apamia) loose their names, and are called Pisi-tigris, and the memorie of Euphrates extinguished, is, because the best part of Euphrates running through the channell of Gehon, linketh into the Lakes of Chaldea, not farre from Vr. the Cittie of Abraham, and fall not intirely into the Persian Sea, as Tigris accompanied with Pison doth.

This errour that Pison was Ganges, was first broched by tosephus, (whose fields though they be fertile, yet are they exceeding full of weedes) and other men (who take his authoritie to be sufficient in matter of description, whereupon depended no other important confequence) were not curious in the examination thereof. For 20 Epiphanius, Augustine, and Hierome, take this for currant; whereof it followed that as Pison was transported into the East India, to find out Hauilah: so was Gehon drawne into Africa, to compasse Athiopia. But if Hauilah, whereof Moses speaketh in the description of Paradise, be found to be a Region, adioyning to Babylon on the one side, and Culb (which is fallly interpreted Athiopia) fastened to it on the other side, wee shall not neede then to worke wonders (that is) to impose vpon men the transportation of rivers, from one end of the world to the other, which (among other vies) were made to transport men. Now it was in the valley of Shinar, where Culb the fonne of Ham first fate downe with his fonnes, Sheba, Hauilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Nimrod, coc. and of Hauilah, the sonnes of Cush, did that Region take name, which Pifon so compasseth; and the land (called Culh) which Gehon watereth, tooke name of Culh himselfe. For as the sonnes of loctan, Ophir, and Havilah, seated themselves as neare together as they could in India, so did the sonnes of Cush and Shinar or Babylonia, where Nimrod built Babel: for Hauilah or Chauilah was first Chusea of Cush; then

Chufa, Sufa, and Sufiana. From this Hauilah vnto the Defarts of Sur, did the Ifraelites and Amalechites pofsoffe all the interiacent Countries: for Saul smote the Amalechites from Hauilah to 1. Sam. 15.7%] Sur: which Sur the Chaldean Paraphrast converteth Hagra, and Hagra bordereth the redde Sea; but this was not meant from Sur vpon the redde Sea, to Hauilah in the East India, for Saul was no such trauailer or Conquerour, and therefore Hauilah must 40 be found nearer home, where the fonnes of Ismael inhabited, and which Countrie Saul wasted : for Amalek and the Amalechites posses that necke of Countrie, between the Persian Sea, and the redde Sea; Hauilah being the extreme of the one towards the East, and Sur of the other, towards Ægypt and the West, leaving that great body of Arabia fælix towards the South; and they spredde themselves with the Madianites and Edumaans, from the East part, or backe-fide of the Holie Land, to the bankes of Euphrates, comprising the best parts of Arabia Petraa, and Deserta.

Ow, as Hauilah in the East India drew Pifon fo farre out of his way thicher, so I say did Cufh (being by the Scuentie translated Athiopia force Gehon into Africa. lus. But Æthiopians are, as much, as blacke or burnt faces, whose proper 10 Countrie is called Thebaides, lying to the Southward of all Agypt. And although there be many other regions of Athiopians, and far South in Africa, yet those of Thebaides are those so often remembred in the Agyptian Stories, and out of which Nation they had many times their Kings of Egypt: all which Ethiopians are very neare, or elfe directly under the Aguinoctiall line, which is very farre from that land inhabited by the Chastes; who are neither blacke of colour, nor in any fort neighbouring Torrida Zona. But this Translation of the Septuagint. Pererius doth qualifie in this manner. There are (faith he) two Athiopia's, the East, and the West : and this division he findeth in Strabo, out of Homer. Now because there is no colour to make Chush Ethiopiain Africa, Pererius will make Chush and the land of the Chu- 20 fites (which is Arabia Petraa, and a part of Arabia the happic, with the Region of Madian) to be the East Athiopia.

Now if it be graunted, that Cush and the land of the Chusites, be that Tract from Gen.25,18. Sur to Hauilah, according to the Scriptures: Habitauit Is MAELab Hauilah v (que Sur, qua respicit Agyptum introcuntibus Assprios, Is MAEL dwelt from Hauilah unto Sur. that is towards Agypt, as thou goest toward Affyria; The same sufficeth to proue that Gehon cannot be Nilus, but a river which watereth Culh, and not Athiopia. But this place of Scripture Habitauit I s M A E L, &c. hath this sense. Ismael dwelt from Hauilah. which is the way of Affyria, or the Countrie bordering Affyria; and Sur, which ly-Verf. 16.

eth toward Agypt, which is as much to fay, as, The issues of Ismael (whereof there 30 were twelue Princes) whom God had promifed to make a great people, inhabited all those regions between the border of Agypt and Assyria. And that they were (according to the word of God) so increased and multiplied, it well appeared, when Zearah the Chuste, which others call Tharantha, brought an Armic of ten hundred thousand against As King of Iuda. Which Armie came not out of Æthiopia beyond £gypt; for that had beene a strange progresse for such a multitude, as ten hundred thousand, having so mightie a King as the King of £gypt, betweene Palefina and Athiopia. But these were the Chusites, Amalechites, Madianites, Ismaelites, and Arabians. For it is written, that after Asa (strengthened by God) had defeated this world of an Armic, he in following his victorie tooke some of the Citties of King 40

Zearah round about, as Gerar. Now that Gerar is a Cittie of the Athiopians, it cannot be suspected: for these be the wordes of the Scripture disprouing it : And ABR A-HAM departed thence toward the South Countrie, and dwelt betweene Cadelh and Sur, and foiourned in Gerar; Now Sur is that part, upon which Moses and the Israelites first set Exod.17.8. their feete after they passed the redde Sea, where the Amalechites in Rephidim set on them, supposing that they had beene weary, and vnable to resist. Againe, in the Sto-

Gen,26.1. rie of Isaac it is written. Wherefore Is a a c went to Abimilech, and the Philistims unto Gerar: and I am fure Abimelech and the Philistims were no Athiopians. And lastly, Moses himselfe, where he describeth the bounds of Canaan, hath these words: Then the border of the Canaanites was from Sydon, as thou commest to Gerar: for Sydon was the Frontier of Canaan towards the North, and Gerar by Gazah towards the South. But indeede, howfoeuer Pererius doth with an honest excuse salue his Translation of Chus for Athiopia, yet it appeareth plainely, that the Septuagint. and Iosephus did altogether misvnderstand this place. And first, for Homers East and West Athiopia, they are both found elsewhere. For Plinie in his fift Booke and eighth Chapter, citeth Homer for an Author, of the fe two Athiopia's. But the East Athiopia is that which compaffeth Nilus to the South of Egypt, and is the South border thereof; now a part of the Empire of the Abysines, under Prester lohn, And the West Ethiopie is that, which joyneth it felfe with the river Niger, which we call Senega and Gambria : for thereabouts are these Athiopians, called Peror si, Daratites, with divers other names, which Plinie numbreth. But all these are in Africa, and beyond the Desarts Plinter. thereof, faith Plinie out of Homer, Agrippa, and Iuba; which Regions indeede ( meane that of Niger, and that of Prester Iohn, and the Troglodytes) lie due East and West. But as for Cush, and the Region of the Ismaelites, &c. they are extended directly North from that Ethiopia, which is beyond Agypt. Now, that Io/ephus was exceeding groffe herein, it appeareth by that fiction, which he hath of Moles when he ferued Pharas, in the warres against the Æthiopians: for in that ( to make Chus. Æthiopia) hee transporteth Madian by miracle ouer the Red Sca, and beyond all Expt, and fetteth it in Ethiopia, as shall be shewed more at large in the Chapter of the worlds plantation. Againe, that Gehon was improperly translated Nilus, Pererius confesseth, and laieth it rather to the corruption of the Greeke copie, than otherwise. And whereas the Septuagint have converted this place of the Prophet HIEREMIE. And what hast thou now to doe in the way of Agypt, to drinke the water c.z.v.18. 20 of Nilus ? Quid tibi vis in via Ægypti, vt bibas aquam Gehon? to this faith Pereriu.

profecto Hebraice ibi non est vox Gehon , sed Sicher , que significat nigrum & turbidum ; Truly (faith PERERIVS) the word Gebon in this place, is not found in the Hebrew, but Sicher, which signifieth black and troubleth water.

CHAP.3. S.14.

Furthermore, this is a manifest and vnanswerable argument, that Chus was ill taken for Athiopia. Moles maried the daughter of Jethro, Prince and Priest of Madian, Exod 2. 21. whom both the Greeke and Latin call a Madianite, and not Athiopiffan, as ( with 10- 3.1. (cohus ) the Geneus converts it, though it helpe it a little with a marginall note. Num. 12.1. Now it is without dispute, that Zipporah was of the Countrie of Madian, which is that part of Arabia Petraa, bordering the Red Sea; for it is written in the second of 30 Exodus, that Moses fled from PHARAO into the land of Madian, and fate downe by a V.15:

Well, or and againe, in the third of Exodus, When Moses kept the sheepe of IETHRO V.I. his father in law, Priest of Madian, Ge. Indeed, these four nations are eucry where mixt in the Scriptures, because they dwell confusedly together (to wit) the Madianites. the Ifmselites, the Amalekites, and the Chafites, which were all in one generall word, Arabians, and in the Scriptures sometimes called by one of those names, and sometimes by another, as in Gen. 37. v. 25. 27. 28. that Is feph was fold to the Ismaelites; and in the same chapter, v. 36. it is written, that the Madianites fold Infeph to Putiphar , Pharae's steward. The Geneuians, in a marginall note (to avoid this confounding of the Nations) say, that Moles wrote according to their opinion, who tooke the Madianites and Ismaelites to be all one. But Moles wrote not after any mans opinion, he wrote the truth, and these were all Arabians, and so in this very place it appeareth by their merchandise, which they brought with them, when they bought Ioseph: for their Cammells were loaden with spicerio, and Balme, & Myrrhe, which are the trades of Gen. 37.25. Arabia falix : from whence chiefly, and from the East India, all the world is serued with Myrrhe and Frankincense; and their spices they received from the East side of the Arabian Gulfe, as aforefaid. And in the 39. Chapter it is faid : That Putiphar v.1. bought Tofeph of the Ifmaelites, which the Chaldaan Paraphrast in the same place cal-Reth Arabians. Now, to make this the more manifest, it is written in the 6. of Indges. That when Ifrael had fowen, then came up the Madianites, and the Amalekites, and V.s.

to they of the East, and came voon them: they of the East, were Arabians of the Defart; To as where before in the buying of Isleph, the Madianites and the Ismaelites were confused, here the Madianites and Amalekites, are made one Nation. For in the profecution of the storie of Gedeon, the Madianites only are named, as comprehending c.r. both Nations, and in the eight Chapter, v. 2 4. thefe Nations are all called I/maelites.

and neither Madianites nor Amalekites. As when Gedeon defired, that every man would give him the golden ear-rings, which they had taken, after the victoric against Zebah and Zalmanna, Kings of Arabia, amounting to 1700 shickles of gold, it is written: For they had golden eare-rings, because they were Ismaelites. And these Ismaelites were a great and valiant Nation, and cuer in action of warre. Manus eius contra omnes, o manus omn um contra eum ; His hand (faith Go D of I s M A E L) shallbe against alimen, and every mans hand against him. Of these Ismaelites came the Mahometan Arabians, though some writers thinke Mahomet to be of the Schenita. And these Ismaelites, which inhabite chiefly in Cedar, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan (faith Iofephus) vse poison vpon their arrowes, as the Indians doe. Towards the South-east to are the Madianites, and Chusites: and beyond them, towards the Desarts of Arabia, the Amalekites; and all are one Nation, and all Arabians.

Lastly, the ill translation of Æthiopia for Chus, is, among other places, made most chron.2.c.21.16 apparent, in the second of Chronicles, in these words: So the Lord sured up against I E H OR A M, the shirit of the Philistines, and the Arabians, which confine the Athiopian: so Hierome reads it : the Geneua translation hath it, which were besides the Athiepians. Now, how farre it is off betweene the Philiftines, and the Negro's, or the Athiopians, cuery manthat looketh in a Map, may judge. For the Philistines and Arabians, doe mixe and joyne with the land of the Chusites, and are distant from Æthiopis about two and thirtie, or three and thirtie degrees, and therefore not their next 20 Neighbours; but all Agypt, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan, are betweene them. So as this place of the second of Chronicles, should have beene translated in these words: So the Lord stirred up against I EHORAM, the spirits of the Philistines, and the Arabians, which confine and border upon the Chustes, who indeed are their next neigh-* Steuch. Eu- bours * Nulla superest dubitatio quin Æthiopia in sacris liter is sit Arabia propinqua; There gub.in Gen. c.z. remaineth no doubt (laith STEVCHIVS) but Athiopia in the Scriptures, it taken for that Countrie, which toyneth to Arabia. Now may we thinke is it probable, or possible, that Moses could be ignorant of Ni-146? No he knew it, no living man fo wel, and therfore would never have named Gehon, for Nilus, or Nilus for Gehon. Surely if Moses had meant Nilus, when he named 30 Gehon he would have called the River (into which he was cast vpon reeds, and preferued by God, working compassion in the Daughter of Pharao) a River of Egypt, wherein hee was borne and bred, and wrought so many miracles. Besides the riuer of Nilus is often named in the Scriptures, but neuer by the name of Gehon. And if Mojes had told the Israelites, that Nilus had beene a River of Paradife, they might justly have thought, that he had derided them: for they had lived there all daics of their lines, and found no fuch Paradife at all, nor any memorie, or speech thereof; except we shall believe the Paradise of Hesperides, where (faith Plinie) there was nothing found in his time, but wild Oliues in stead of golden apples. But Nilus is twice called Sichor, once in Esay, and once in the Prophet Hieremie; and yet in those places 40 it is not faid to be a river of Athiopia, but of Agypt. For in a word, the Ifraelites had neuer any comunion or affaires with the Athiopians, nor any intelligence, or trade. beyond Agypt, to the South; but the enemies, which they had on the South, and East parts, were these Nations of the Chusites, Philistines, Ismaelites, Amalekites, and Madianites: who being often gouerned by many little Kings, or Reguli, were diftinguished in names, according to the Fathers and Heads of those Nations; but in one generali name were all Arabians. On the North fide of Canaan, they were afflicted with the Calefyrians, with the Magogians, Tubalines, and others their adherents; and thirdly within themselues, the Nations, which remained of the ancient Canaanites, held the strongest Cities vpon the Sea-coast (as) Tyre, Siden; Acon, Gaza, and many 50 others : yea, Hierufalem it felfe was with-held from Ifrael (from the daies of Moses euen vnto the time of David) by the Iebusites.

That which now remaineth of most difficultie is, that it doth not appeare, that any part of Gehon watereth that part of arabia the stonie, which the Chustes inhabited in the times of the Kings of Ifraell: and in this Defart it was that Matt. Beroaldus lost himselfe in seeking out Paradise: for he was driven (to my understanding) to create two rivers, and call them Gehon, and Pifon; to the end that the one might water Chus, and the other Hauilah, for I finde none fuch in rerum natura, as he hath described: by which Rivers hee also includeth within Paradife, even Arabia the

And as he well proued that Pifon was not Ganges, nor Gehon, Nilus: fo where to finde them else-where it seemeth he knew not. Certainely this river of Gehon, which he maketh to fall into the Mediterran at Gaza, and whose springs he findeth farre to East in Arabia, is but imaginarie: for the Current by Gaza is but a small streame. rifing betweene it and the red Sea, whose head from Gaza it selfe is little more then twentie English miles, as shall appeare hereafter. But questionlesse, hence it comes that many were mistaken. They all considered of the habitations of the Chasites, as they were planted when the state of Israell stood, and when it flourished, being then their necre neighbours, and neuer looked back to the first seates and plantation of CHVS. For after the floud, CHVS and his children neuer refted, till they found the Valley of Shinar, in which, and necre which himfelfe with his fonnes first inhabited. HAVILAH tooke the river-fide of Tigris chiefly on the East, which after his owne name he called HAVILAH, (now Susiana:) Raamah and Sheba farther downe the 20 river, in the entrance of Arabia fælix. NIMR OD seated himselfe in the best of the Valley, where he built Babel, whereof that Region had afterwards the name of Babylonia. CHVs himselfe and his brother MIZRAIM first kept vpon Gehon, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea, and in processe of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselves more Westerly towards the red or Arabian Sea: from whence MIZRAIM past ouer into Agypt, in which Tract the Chustes remayned for many yeares after. Now because there could be no such river found in Arabia the stonic. which they might entitle Gehon, they translated Chus Aethiopia, and Gehon, Nilus. And if we doe examine this miltaking by example, we shall the better perceive it as it was. For let vs suppose, that BRVTE, or whosoeuer else that first peopled this 30 Iland, had arrived upon the River of Thames, and calling the Iland after his name BRITANNIA, it might be fayd that Thames or Tems was a river, that watered Britannia: and when afterwards in processe of time, the same BRVTE had also discouered and conquered Scotland, which he also entituled by the same name of Britannia, after-ages might conclude that Scotland was no part thereof, because the river of Tems is not found therein. Or let vs suppose that EVROPA, the daughter of the King of Tyre in Phanicia, gaue the name to Europe, according to Herodetus, and that Herod. I. & 1. the first discourrers thereofarrised in the mouth of some river in Grete, which then watered as much of Europe, as he first discouered, shall we in like fort resolue, that France, Spaine, and Italie, &c. are no parts of Europe, because that River is not found 40 in them, or any of them? In like manner was it fayd by Mofes in his description of Gehon, that it watered the whole land of Chus; but not the whole land which the Chustes should or might in future time conquer, people, and inhabit, seeing in afterages they became Lords of many Nations, and they might (perchance) haue beene Maisters in time, (as the Saracens which came of them were) of a great part of the world. For (though the Babylonian Empire, which tooke beginning in NINE OD the sonne of CHVs, consisted at the first but of fower Citties, (to wit) Babel, Erech, Acad, and Chalne, yet we finde, that his Succeffours within a few yeares after commaunded all the whole world in effect: and the fame of Babel confumed the memorie of Chusea. For of this Tower of Confusion did all that land take the name of Baby. lonia: and the greatnesse of that Empire founded by NIMROD a yonger sonne, ob-50 scured the name and nation of his father Cvs H in those parts, vntill they crept farther off, and in places not yet entituled, and farther from the Babylonian Empire, where the Chastes retained their names, which also they fastned to the Soile and that CHVs or any of his could in halt creepe through those desert Regions, which the length of 120 years after the flood had (as it were) fortified with thickets, and permitted euery bush and briar, reede and tree to joyne themselues (as it were) into one maine body and Forrest. For if we looke with judgement and reason into the worlds plantation, we shall finde, that every familie feated themselves as neere together as possible they could; and though necessitic enforced them, after they grew full of people, to fpread themselves, and creepe out of Shinar or Babylonia, yet did they it with this adulfe, as that they might at a 1 times refort, and fuccour one another by river, the fields being then (without all doubt) impassable. So N 1 M-ROD, who out of wit and strength vsurped dominion ouer the rest, sate downe in 19 the very confluence of all those rivers, which watered Paradife: for thither it was to which the greatest troupes of NoAHs children repaired; and from the same place whence Mankinde had his beginning, from thence had they againe their increase. The first Father of men ADAM, had therein his former habitation. The second Father of Mankinde N o A H, began from thence his dispersion.

Now as NIMROD the yongest, yet strongest, made his choice of Babel (as aforefaid) which both Tigris and Euphrates cleanfed and enriched; fo did HAVILAIT place himselfe vpon Pifo-tigris: R AAMAH and his sonne SHEBA farther downe vpon the fame river, on the Sea-coast of Arabia: CHVs himselfe vpon Gehon, the fairest branch of Euphrates. And when they began to spread themselves farther off, 22 yet they alwaics fastened themselues to the rivers sides: for Niniue, Charran, Reseph, Cannel, Vr in Chaldes, and the other first-peopled Cities were all founded upon these nauigable rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give fuccour and affistance to the other, as is already often remembred.

). XV. A conclusion by way of repetition of somethings spoken of

Vt now to conclude this dispute, it appeareth to me by the testimonics of the Scriptures, that Paradife was a place created by God, and a part of this our earth and habitable world, scated in the lower part of the Region of Eden, afterward called Aram fluniorum, or Mesopotamia, which taketh into it also a portion of Shinar and Armenia: this Region standing in the most excellent temper of all other, (to wit) 35 degrees from the Aequinoctiall, and 55 from the North pole: in which Climate the most excellent wines, fruites, oyle, graine of all forts are to this day found in abundance. And there is nothing that better proueth the excellencie of this fayd foile and temper, then the abundant growing of the Palme-trees, without the care and labour of man. 42 For wherein foeuer the Earth, Nature, and the Sunne can most vaunt, that they haue excelled, yet shall this Plant be the greatest wonder of all their works: this tree alone giueth vnto man what socuer his life beggeth at Natures hand. And though it may be fayd, that these trees are found both in the East and West Indies, which Countries are also bleffed with a perpetuall Spring and Summer, yet lay downe by those pleasures and benefits the fearefull and dangerous thunders and lightnings, the horrible and frequent Earthquakes, the dangerous discases, the multitude of venimous beafts and wormes, with other inconucniences, and then there will be found no comparison betweene the one and the other.

What other excellencies this garden of Paradife had, before God, (for mans in-50 gratitude and crueltic, curfed the earth) we cannot judge; but I may fafely thinke, that by how much Adam exceeded all liuing men in perfection, by being the immediate workemanship of God, by so much did that chosen and particular garden exceede all parts of the Vniuerfall world, in which God had planted (that is) made to grow the trees, of Life, of Knowledge; Plants only proper, and becomming the Paradife, and Garden of fo great a Lord.

The summe of all this is, That whereas the eyes of meninthis Scripture haue beene dimme-lighted (some of them finding Paradise beyond our knowne world: some, aboue the middle Region of the aire: some, cleuated neare the Moone: others, as farre South as the Line, or as farre North, as the Pole, &c.) I hope that the Reader will be fufficiently fatisfied, that these were but like Castles in the aire, and in mens fancies, vainely imagined. For it was Eastward in Eden (faith Moses)

Eastward, inrespect of Indea, that God planted this garden, which Eden we finde 10 in the Prophets where it was, and whereof the name (in some part) remaineth to thisday. A River went out of Eden to water this garden, and from thence divided it selfe into foure branches; and we finde that both Tiggis and Euphrates swimming through Eden doe ioyne in one, and afterward taking wayes apart doe water Chus and Hauilah, according to Moses: the true seates of Chus and his Sonnes then being in the Valley of Shinar, in which Nimrod built Babel. That Pifon was Ganges, the Scripture, Reason, and experience teach the contrarie: for that which was neuer iovned cannot be divided. Ganges, which inhabiteth India, cannot be a branch of the Rivers of Eden; That Gehon was Nilus, the same distance maketh the same impossibilitie, and this River is a greater stranger to Tigris and Euphrates, then Ganges

20 is: for although there are betweene Tigris and Ganges about four ethousand miles, yet they both rife in the same quarter of the world; but Nilus is begotten in the mountaines of the Moone, almost as farre off as the Cape of good hope, and falleth into the Mediterran Sca : and Euphrates distilleth out of the mountaines of Armenia. and falleth into the Gulfe of Persia: the one riseth in the South, and travaileth North: the other riseth in the North, and runneth South, three score and three degrees the one from the other. In this leafe following I have added a Chorographicall description of this terrestriall Paradise, that the Reader may thereby the better conceiue the preceding discourse; and this is the reward I looke for, that my labours may but receive an allowance suspended, untill fuch time as this description of mine

CHAP. IIII.

Of the two chiefe Trees in the Garden of Paradife.

That the tree of Life was a materiall tree : and in what sense it is to be taken, that man by his cating the forbidden fruit, is made subiect to death.

OR eating the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge was Adam driven out of Paradife, in exilium vita temporalis, into the banishment of temporall life, faith Beda. That these trees of Life and Knowledge were materiall trees (though Figures of the Law and of the Gospell) it is not doubted by the most religious 20 and learned writers: although the wits of men, which are so volatile, as nothing can fixe them, and so slipperic, as nothing can fasten them, have in this also delivered to the world an imaginarie doctrine.

The tree of Life (fay the Hebrewes) hath a plurall construction, and is to be understood, Lignum vitarum, The tree of lines, because the fruit thereof had a propertie, to preserue both the growing, sensitiue, and rationall life of man; and not only (but for Adams transgression) had prolonged his owne dayes, but also given a durefull continuance to all posteritie; and that, so long, as a Bart. fept. 2. l.1.

bodie compounded of Elements could last.

And although it is hard to thinke, that flesh and bloud could be immortall, but that it must once perish and rot, by the vnchanged law of God imposed on his creatures, Man (notwithstanding) should have enjoyed thereby a long, healthfull, and ungricued life: after which (according to the opinion of most Diuines) he should haue beene translated, as Enoch was. And as before the floud, the daies of men had the long measure of eight hundred or nine hundred yeares; and soone after the floud of two hundred yeares and vpwards even to five hundred : fo if Adam had not difobeyed Gods first and easie Commandement, the lines of men on earth might have continued double, treble, or quadruple to any of the longest times of the first age, as manylearned men haue conceined. Chrysostome, Rupertus, Tostatus, and others were 40 of beliefe, that (but for Adams fall and transgression) Adam and his posteritie had beene immortall. But fuch is the infinite wisedome of God, as he foresaw that the Earth could not have contained mankinde; or elfe, that Millions of foules must have beene vngenerated, and have had no being, if the first number, wherewith the Earth was replenished, had abode thereon for cuer: and therefore that of Chrysostome must be vnderstood of immortalitic of bodies, which should have been translated and

But of what kinde or Species this tree of Life was, no man hath taken on him to teach; in which respect many have conceived, that the same was not materiall, but a meere Allegorie, taking their strength out of Salomon, where Wisedome is compared 50 to the Tree of Life, and from other places, where also Christ is called the Tree of Life, and out of the Spocalypsis, I will give to him that our commeth, to eate of the Tree of life, which is in the Paradife of God. But to this place St. Augustines answere may fuffice, (which is) That the one doth not exclude the other, but that, as there was a terrestrial Paradife, so there was a celestiall. For although Agar and Sara were Figures of the Old, and New Testament, yet to thinke that they were not Women, and the maide and wife of Abraham, were meere foolilhnesse. And so in this place the sense of the Scripture is manifest. For God brought out of the earth enery tree faire to light, and fiveet to taste; the tree also of life in the midst of the garden: which showeth, that among the trees, which the Earth by Gods commandement produced, the tree of Life was one, and that the fruit thereof was also to be eaten. The report of this Tree was also brought to the ancient Poets: for as from the indigested matter or Chaos, Hefiodus, Homer, Ouid, and others steale the invention of the created world;

10 fo from the Garden of Paradife, they tooke the Plat-forme of the Orchard of Alcinous, and another of the Hesperides : and from the tree of Life, their Nectar and Ambrofia; for Nectar, according to Suidas, fignifieth making young, and Ambrofia, immortalitie; and therefore faid to be the meate and drinke of the Gods.

II.

Of BECANUS his opinion that the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica.

20 to the Tree of Knowledge of good and cuill, some men have prefumed farther, especially Goropius Becanus, who giveth himselfe the honour to have found out the kind of this Tree, which none of the Writers of former times could ever gheffe at, whereat Goropius much maruaileth. But as he had an inuentiue braine, so there neuer lined any man, that beleeued better thereof, and of himselfe. Surely howsoeuer his opinion may be valued, yet he vsurpeth the praise due to others, at least if the invention be at that price at which he fettethit. For Moses Bar-cephas fastened on this coniecture aboue fixe hundred yeares before Becanes was borne; and Bar-cephas himfelfe referreth the invention to an antiquitie more remote, citing for his Authour Philoxenus 30 Mahurgensis, and others, whose very wordes Garopius vseth, both concerning the Tree, and the reasons wherewith he would induce other men to that beliefe. For Moses Bar-cephas in his Treatise of Paradise (the first Part and fol. 49.) faith, That the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica, the Indian Fig-tree, of which the greatest plentie (faith Becanus) are found vpon the bankes of Acesines, one of the Rivers which falleth into Indus, where Alexander built his Fleet of Gallies in, or neare the Kingdome of Porus.

This Tree beareth a fruit of the bigneffe of agreat peaze, or (as Plinie reporteth) Plin.Lit. 46 fomewhat bigger, and that it is a tree fe femper ferens, alwaies planting it felfe; that it spreadeth it selfe so farre abroade, as that a troupe of horsemen may hide themselves

40 vnderit. Strabo faith, that it hath branches bending downewards, and leaues no leffe Lib. x.cap. 3. then a shield. Aristobulus affirmeth that fiftie horsemen may shadow themselves vnder one of these trees. Onesieritus raiseth this number to soure hundred. This tree (faith Theophrastus) exceedethall other in bignesse, which also Plinie and Onesieritus confirme: to the truncke of which these Authours give such a magnitude as I shame to repeate. But it may be, they all speake by an ill-vnderstood report. For this Indian Fig-tree is not fo rare a Plant, as Becanus conceiveth, who because he found it no where elfe, would needes draw the garden of Paradife to the Tree, and fet it by the river Acesimes. But many parts of the world have them, and I my selfe have seene twentie thousand of them in one Valley, not farre from Paria in America. They

50 grow in moist grounds, and in this manner. After they are first shot up some twentie or thirtie foote in length, (some more, some lesse, according to the soile) they spread a very large toppe, hauing no bough nor twigge in the truncke or stemme ; for from the vimost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummie inyce, which have geth downeward like a cord or finnew, and within a few Moneths reacheth the ground; which it no fooner toucheth but it taketh roote, and then being filled both from the toppe boughes, and from his owne proper roote, this corde maketh it selfe a Tree exceeding haltily. From the vtmost boughes of these young trees there fall againe the like cordes, which in one yeare and leffe (in that world of a perpetual) spring) become also trees of the bignesse of the nether part of a launce, and as straight, as art or nature can make any thing, casting such a shade, and making such a kinde of groue, as no other Tree in the world can doe. Now one of these trees considered with all his young ones may (indeede) shrowde foure hundred or foure thousand horsemen, if they please; for they couer whole vallies of ground where these Trees grow neare the Sca-banke, as they doe by thousands in the inner part of Trinidado, 10 The cordes which fall downe ouer the bankes into the Sea, shooting alway downeward to finde roote under water, are in those Seas of the Indies, where Oisters breed. intangled in their beddes, fo as by pulling vp one of these cordes out of the Sea, I haue seene fine hundred Oysters hanging in a heape thereon; whereof the report came, that Oysters grew on trees in India. But that they beare any such huge leaves, or any fuch delicate fruit I could neuer finde, and yet I haue trauailed adozen miles together under them: but to returne to Goropius Becanus. This tree (faith he) was good for meate and pleasing to the fight, as the tree of Knowledge of good and euill is described to be.

Secondly, this tree having so huge a truncke (as the former Authours report, and 20 Becamus beleeueth) it was in this tree that Adam and Eue hidde themselves from the presence of God, for no other tree (saith he) could contain them. But first it is certaine, that this Tree hath no extraordinarie magnitude, as touching the trunke or stemme, for among ten thousand of them it is hard to finde any one bigger then the rest, and these are all but of a meane size. Secondly, the wordes of Mojes translated in medioligni, are by all the interpreters understood in the plurall number, (that is) in the middest of the trees, But his third argument (or rather the argument of Moses Bar-cephas, word for word) is, that when Adam and Eue found themselues naked, they made them breeches of Fig-leaues; which proueth (indeede) that either the tree it selfe was a Fig-tree, or that a Fig-tree grew neare it: because Adam being possest with shamedid not runne vp and downe the garden to seeke out leaves to cover him, but found them in the place it selfe; and the seleaues of all other were most commodious by reason of their largenesse, which Plinie anoweth in these wordes; Latitudo foliorum pelta efficiem Amazonia habet, The breadth of the leaves hath the shape of an Amazonian shield: which also Theophrast confirmeth; the forme of which Targets Virgil toucheth:

Gen.3.7.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis Penthesilaa furens.

The Amazons with Crescent-formed shield Penthesilæa leades into the field.

Here Becamus desireth to be beleeved, or rather threatneth vs all that reade him. to giue creditto this his borrowed discouerie, vsing this confident (or rather cholericke) speech. Quiserit tam impudenter obstinatus, si hac à nobis de ficu hac ex antiquis scriptoribus cum Mosis narratione comparet, vt audeat dicere aliam arborem inueniri posse, qua cum illa magis quadret, Who will be so impudently obstinate, if he compare these thinges which we have reported of this Fig-tree, and out of ancient Writers delivered, with the narration of Moses, as to dare to auow, that any other tree can be found, which doth 50 more properly answere, or agree therewith. But for my selfe, because I neither find this tree, forting in body, in largenesse of leaues, nor in fruit to this report, I rather incline to the opinion of Philo: That the Earth neuer brought forth any of these trees neither before nor after; but I leave every man to his owne beleefe, for the matter is of no great weight as touching his kinde: only thereby, and by the easie Commandement by God given to Adam, to forbeare to feede thereon, it pleafed God to make triall of his obedience : Prohibita, non propter aliud, quam ad commendandum pura ac August decinit. simplicis Obedientia bonum, Being forbidden, not for any other respect, then thereby to com- Dellas cao. mend the goodnesse of pure and simple Obedience.

Vt in this I must doe Becanus right, that he hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the Tree it selfe to be true. The effects whereof, because his discourses are exceeding ample, I have gathered in these few wordes. As this Tree (faith he) so did Man, grow straight and vpright towards God, vntill such time as hee had transgressed and broken the Commandement of his Creatour; and then like vnto the boughes of this tree, he beganne to bend downeward, and stouped toward the earth, which all the rest of Adams posteritie after him have done, rooting themselves therein, and fastning themselues to this corrupt world. The exceeding vmbragious-20 nesse of this tree he compareth to the darke and shadowed life of man, through which the Sunne of iuftice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climbe the tree of the Crosse for our enlightning and redemption. The little fruit which it beareth, and which is hard to finde among fo many large leaves, may be compared (faith he) to the little vertue, and vnperceiued knowledge among so large vanities, which obscure and shadow it ouer. And as this fruit is exceeding fweet, and delicate to the tafte and palate, fo are the delights and pleafures of the world, most pleasing while they dure. But as all those thinges which are most mellistuous, are soonest changed into choller and bitternesse: fo are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest forrowes and repen-30 tances. That the leaves are so exceeding large, the fruit (for such leaves) exceeding little, in this, by comparison we behold (faith he) the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their follicitude, their outward shewes, and publike oftentation, their apparent pride and large vanities; and if we feeke for the fruit, which ought to be their vertuous and pious actions, we find it of the bignesse of the smallest peaze; glorie, to all the world apparent; goodnesse, to all the world inuisible. And fürthermore, as the leaves, bodie, and boughes of this tree, by fo much exceede all other Plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly abilitie surpasse the meanest: so is the little fruit of fuch men, and fuch trees, rather fitting and becomming the vnworthieft shrubbe, and humblest bryar, or the poorest and basest man, then such a slouo rishing statelinesse, and magnitude. Lastly, whereas Adam, after he had disobayed God, and beheld his owne nakednesse and shame, sought for leaves to couer himfelfe withall, this may feruc to put vs in minde of his and our finnes, as often as we put on our garments, to couer and adorne our rotten and mortall bodies: to pamper and maintaine which wee vie so many vncharitable and cruell practises in this world.

 IIII.
 Of the name of the tree of Knowledge of good and euill: with fome other notes touching the Storie of ADAMS sinne.

Ow, as touching the sense of this tree of Knowledge of good and euill, and what operation the fruit thereof had, and as touching the propertie of the Tree it selfe, Moses Bar-cephas an ancient Syrian Doctor (translated by Masius) giveth this judgement : That the fruit of this tree had no fuch vertue or qualitie, as that by the tasting thereof, there was any fuch knowledge created in Adam, as if he had been ignorant before; but as Junius also noteth, Arbor (cientia boni & mali (idest) experientia boni & mali abenentu. The Tree of Knowledge of good and exill (that is) the experience of good and evill by the euent. For thus much we may conceiue, that Adam being made (according to the Hebrew phrase) by the workemanthip of Gods owne hand, in greater perfection then euer any man was produced by generation, being (as it were) the created plant, out of whose seede all men liuing haue growne vp; and hauing received immortalitie from the breath or spirit of God, he could not (for these respects) be ignorant, that the disobaying of Gods commandement was the fearfullest cuill, and the obseruation of his precepts the happiest good. But as men in perfect health doe (not-10 withstanding) conceine, that sicknesse is grieuous, and yet in no such degree of torment, as by the fuffering and experience in themselves they afterwards witnesse: so was it with Adam, who could not be ignorant of the punishments, due to neglect and disobedience; and yet felt by the proofe thereof in himselfe another terrour then he had forethought, or could imagine. For looking into the glaffe of his owne guiltie foule, he beheld therein the horrour of Gods judgements, to as he then knew, he feelingly knew, and had triall of the late good, which could not be prized, and of the new purchased cuill, which could not be exprest. He then saw himselfe naked both in bodie and minde; that is, deprined of Gods grace and former felicitie; and therefore was this tree called the tree of Knowledge, and not because the fruit thereof had 29 any fuch operation, by any felfe qualitie or effect: for the same phrase is vsed in many places of the Scriptures, and names are given to Signes and Sacraments, as to acts performed, and thinges done. In fuch fort as this tree was called the tree of Knowledge, by cause of the euent (as is aforesaid) so was the Well of contention therefore called Efek, and the Well of hatred Sitnath, because the Heardsmen of Isaac and Gerar contended for them; and the heape of stones, called the heape of witnesse, between Jacob and Laban, not that the stones bare witnesse, but for a memorie of the couenant. So Iacob called the house of God Bethel: and Hagar, the Well in the Defart, Vinentis. But Adam being both betrayed and maistered by his affections, ambitious of a 20

farther knowledge then he had perceived in himfelfe, and looking but flightly (as all his iffues doe) into the miferies and forrowes incident, and greatly affecting the fupposed glorie which he might obtaine by tasting the fruit forbidden, he was transported and blowne forward by the gentle winde of pleafing perfwafions vnawares; his progression being strengthened by the subtile arguments of Sathan, who laboured to poylon mankinde in the very roote, which he moiltned with the liquor of the fame ambition, by which himselfe perished for euer.

His word Nod or Naid St. Hierome and many others understand to fignific wandring, or incertaine habitation : vexation or agitation, faith Iunius; but the Seuentic conuert it otherwise, and take Nod for the proper name of a Countrie, and so doth Iosephus. But it seemeth to me, that Cain was rather a vagabond or wanderer in his cogitations. then any thing elfe, and that his thoughts and conscience had no quiet or rest, in re- 10

gard of the murther committed, justly fearing (by his owne words) the like violence: And who soeuer findeth me (faith CAIN) shall slay me. Now that 20 od or Naid was a Gen. 4. 14. Region wherein Cain inhabited, appeareth by the word (dwelt) for dwelling figni-fieth an abiding: and we call those people wanderers and vagabonds that have no dwelling place. And to make this dwelling and abiding more manifest, Moses teacheth in what part of the earth this his habitation was, which he affirmeth towards the East side of Eden. Secondly, it is said by Moses, that after Cain departed from the presence or fauour of God, he built a Cittie, and called it by the name of his first borne, Enoch; which sheweth that he feared to wander, and rather sought to fortifie tamfelfe against reuenge. Cyrillus faith, that Cain and Abel were figures of Christ 40 and of the Iewes; and that as Cain, after that he had flaine Abel vniustly, had thenceforth no certaine abiding in the world: fo the Iewes, after they had crucified the Sonne of God, became Runnegates: and it is true, that the Iewes had never fince any certaine Estate, Commonweale, or Prince of their owne vpon the earth. Now this land of Nod, Junior taketh to be in Arabia Deferta, a Region of Nomades; but Arabia the Defert is not Eastward, or on the East part of Eden, neither are these Nomades any particular people or Nation. For all these, in what part of the world soeuer, which in old time lived by pastorage, and fedde (as we call it in Ireland) youn white meate without tilling of the ground, are called by the Greekes Nomades, and by the Latines Pastores vagi, as the Northern Tartarians, the Getulians, and Numidians in 20 Africa, the ancient Brittans, and the Northern Irish: yea such were the inhabitants of Italie it selfe, till such time as Italies (who gave them that name) taught them the hulbandrie of tillage vsed at this day. But the Region Eastward from Eden is that part of Assyria, called by Ptolomic, Calena, which also might be derived of Carena, the Countrie of Cain. And that Cain inhabited in those parts it may be gathered by the first possession of his Father Adam; for thus it is written Gen. 3. Therefore the Lord God fent him forth from the barden of Eden to till the earth whence he was taken: and in the Verse following: Thus he east out man, &c. and at the East side of the garden of Edenhe fet the Cherubins: which sheweth that the entrie into Paradife was from the East, by which entrance Adam was cast out, and therefore inhabiting on that side of Paradise 40 which was Eastward, according to the Text. Cain also in the same Region sought his dwelling place. Now, if the word Nodor Naid doe fignific profugus, that is, a fugitine, wee can give no longer time to this vncertaine habitation of Cain, then till hee built the Cittie of Enoch, the first of the world, which he inclosed either for his owne defence, or (as Iolephus writeth) to oppreffe others thereby. So as for mine owne opinion I am resolued with the Septuagint that Nod was the proper name of a Region; and for the word (vagabond) which can vieth of himselfe, it seemeth by the perclose of the same Verse, that (vagabond) is therein understood for such an one as trauaileth infeare of reuengement: for who foeuer findeth me (faith C A I N) fhall flay me; or else (vagabond) is taken for a man without protection, and cast out from the sa- 50 nour of God.

And because these Henochians, so called of the Cittie Henoch, were the first societie and civill affemblie of all other, it is likely that the same of these people (either for crueltie, strength, or other actions) lived in the memorie of Noah and his sonnes; so that after the floud (as there were of all forts of natures, some vertuously, some impioufly disposed, and every active minde setting before it whom to follow or imitate) those people, which delighted in crueltie and oppression tooke on them their names whose natures they most liked and allowed; of whom these Henochians were not the least. Perchance the place it selfe where Henoch stood before the floud, and whereof the monuments might remaine (as the pillars or the foundation of Ioppe did) gaue occasion to the planters of that place to call themselues by the same names: for of those Henochians there were many Nations in the borders of Pontus, and Colchis in Iberia, Segdiana, and Bactria, and of the fame name many mountaines, as those to which are otherwise called Coraxio. And seeing that it is hard to finde out the truth Quotidie aliquid of these things, which the most aged time hath couered ouer or defaced, wee may in bee magno or-(according to the counfaile of Plate) exceedingly rejoyce, and therewith fatisfic our volum finds selves, if of so great and almost worne-out antiquitie, if of the eldest peoples names mentaininur, and nations there remaine any print or footesteps to posteritie. In * Plinie , P. Mela, Strabo , Valerius Flaccus, Lucan , Stephanus , we finde those the mon mibus Henochei described, though diverfly written, as in Plinie, sometimes Heniochi, in Mela primibus oriun. Emochi, in Flaceus Heniochi, in Lucan Enochii, all which inhabite vpon the Sea Euxinus, Albinum. but yet none of these are on the East side of Eden, or (according to Moses words) Fast- * Plan. 1.64.94 ward from Eden. For Moles, in all places where he describeth any Region, was to Mel. Liz.vlt. 20 exceeding precise, as sometime he vseth the word East or South without borrow- Strabo. Lii. ing or addition, at other times with a borrowing, as Eastward or Southward, or towards the East or South. In the place of Genesis the eleventh he writeth the word (East) simply and directly. And as they went from the East, they found a Plane in the v.s. land of Shinar, but in this of Cain he addeth the word (towards) as, in the land of Nod towards the East fide of Eden; which may be taken, as inclining some one point or two either to the North or to the South, of the East.

But as we may coniecture that these Nations tooke name of Henoch, the Cittie of Cain, or of the Region wherein it flood, when the fame was repeopled after the floud: fo it is probable that these Henochij of Colchis, and other parts adjoyning, were 30 not the first of that name, after the sonnes of Wood beganne to fill the world againe: because, had this Henbeh the Cittle of Cain stood in any of these parts, it had then beene feated North, and not East or Eastward from Eden. But as Plinie findeth their habitation towards Pontus, so afterwards he goeth on Eastward, till he tracke them or trace them out to their originall. For he calleth these of Colchis (now Mengrelia) Plin 1.6.c.4.5. Sanni Heniothis Protomic Zani; beyond which an hundred and fiftie mile Eastward Ptol,tab. Afe. 3 he findeth another Nation of them about Iberia and Albania; and beyond these againe he discouereth a third Nation, from whence all the rest tooke beginning, which inhabited on the West side of the mountaines of Para-panisus, between them and the great river of oxus, which bordereth Battria on the North fide; and these 40 Henoshy are due East from the Region of Eden; and Eastward from the very garden it felfe.

And although we cannot be affired, that these Henothis tooke name from the memorie of the Cittle of Enoch directly, yet beenule they inhabited due East from Paradife, and afterwards fored themselves Westward (as all Noahs sonnes did that came into Shinar) the conjecture is farre more probable, then that of Annius the Fryar, who fets Henoch in Phanicia, quite contrarie to Mofes word : Phanicia from all parts of Eden being directly West.

And befides these severall Nations of the Henochy, Stephanus findeth a Region cal- steph. de Vib. led Henochia; and the same also in the East, with divers mountaines about Baltria and 50 Sogdiana of the lame name. Only the Gracians (according to their fabulous inuentions of all things elfe) our of the word (Heniochi) which fignifieth Carts or Coachmen; make these Nations to have sprung from the Waggoners of Castor and Pollux Nat. comes cal-(to wit) Amphites and Telebius, who attended them in the enterprise of Ialon into leth them Rhe-

Vt of the remembrance and testimonies of the name of the Cittie of Henoch in prophane storie, thus much may suffice; Now it followeth to answere some few objections against certaine particulars in the fourth and sifth Chapter of Genesis: against which for the first it is demanded, how it was possible for Cairs shauing no other assistance then his sonne Henoch) to performe such a worke as the building of a Cittie, seeing there is thereto required fo many hands, and fo great a masse of all forts of Materials? To which it is answered, that we are first to consider, That of Cain (because he was the Parent of an impious race) Moses vseth no ample declaration; and so it best agreeth with his diuine reason, seeing that he containeth the whole storie of the first race, 20 which wasted by the least account 1656. yeares, in fine short Chapters. Yet thus much may every man borrow of his owne weakest reason, That seeing it pleased God to beltow on the first generations of mens lives so long a measure, as 800, and 900. yeares, that in fuch a space Cain had not want of leasure and meanes to build many fuch Citties as Henoch, be the capacitic answering to what other of the world foeuer: for in what age of Cains life he built it, the Scriptures are filent: as of whose times, and the times of his issues Moses had the least care. And as it was said of Cain, that he built a Cittie: fo was it faid of Noah, that his three fonnes peopled all the world; but in both the processe of time required to be understood: which adulse feeing Moses wheth where the space lesse requireth it, as knowing that hee writthe 10 Scriptures to reasonable men, we may easily understand, that such was his meaning also in all reports of like nature. For in making but a difference betweene the birth of Abel, and oblation of Cain, he spake it in this fort, Fuit autem post dies multos or à fine dierum (that is) in processe of time it came to passe that CAIN brought an oblation. And therefore it is in like fort to be understood of Cain, that many yeares fore-gone, and when his people were increased he built the Cittie of Enoch or Henoch.

And where it is written, as of Caim, that he built Enoch, so of Salomon, that he built the Temple of Hierufalem; yet it is well knowne of Salomon, that he employed in that worke 150000. labourers: for this phrase or speech is common with our selves to say, The King inuaded; when he caused an inuation to be made: and he built, so when he commanded such a building. And therefore seeing we finde, that Mose, it is not to be maruailed at, why he also passet to the our in a word the building of Enoch, without addition of any circumstance: for of Caim, Nose; writeth in this manner: Caim also knew his wife, who conceived and bare. Henoch, and he built a Cittie, and called the name of the Cittie after the name of his some Henoch. And to Henoch was borne Irad, and Irad begat Mehvirel, and Mehvirel begat Mehvirel.

Now of Seth, Moses writth sure otherwise, and in this manner. And Seth lived 103. seares, and begat Enoch, and Seth lived after he begat Enoch 807. 50 yeares, and begat Sonnes and Daughters: so as all the daies of Seth were 912. years, and he died: as for the yeares and times of the wicked they were not numbred in libro vinentium, suth Cyril. But in Seth was the Church of God established, from whom Christ descended, as touching his manhood: and sherefore this way and worke Mofes walked in, and finished it with care, passing ouer the reprobate generation (as a-forefaid) Of the line of Alam by Cain, Mose remembreth but eight generations, reckoming Alam for one, and of the line of Alam by Seth ten, counting Alam also therein, as followeth:

These be the generations of Adam by Cain, which the Scriptures mention: but 10 sphus giucth vnto Lamech three score and secunities of Lamech, Asofes ascribeth 20 the invention of Pattorage, of Musicke, and the working in mettall; for it seemeth that Inhal first gathered together, and made familiar those beasts which formerly were vntamed, and brought them into heards and droues: Tuhas muchted Musicke, Gailleand yron: the one being addicted to husbandrie, the other was Mechanicall, the third given to idlenesse and publication. ### d. IIII.

Second scruple hath beene made, How it came to passe that the Patriarch's begat their children at so divers ages, as Cainan or Cenasa at seven until yeares, Mahaleel and Enoch at three score and five yeares, Washaleel not any of his vntill he was 162. yeares old: Mathuslaten begat at 187. Lamech at 182. and Neah at 500. yeares. Now this difference hath beene the more enforced, because it cannot be coniectured, that either tared, Mathufalem, or Lamechabltained from marriage out of the religion of ab40 stimence, seeing that Enoch, who was translated by God for his singular sanctities, begat children before he was three score and ten yeares old.

The apparent difference hereof arifeth in this, that Mofes did not number the generations before the floud precifely, according to the first begotten and eldest some of the Patriarchs, but he drew downe the line of Noah from Seth, and afterward from Noah to Abraham, by their true Ancestors were they elder or younger as he sound them: for it is likely that Henoch was not the eldest of Iarad, nor Lamech the first borne of Mathusalm, nor Noah of Lamech; neither is there any thing knowne to the contraric, but that Noah might haue had many sonnes before Shem, Ham, and Iaphet, though these three were only named, and surviving, and which by God were reserved to be the Fathers of mankinde after the sloud; and therefore when we finde Mashalees to be begotten by Keman at three Ecoreand ten yeares who was the first sonne of Kenam, and then reckon that Mathusalem begat Lamech in the 187, yeare of his life, the difference seemeth strange, where Lamech is taken for the eldest. But Moses reiecteth all the other sonnes of Mathusalem but Lamech only, because he sather for Noah as a-

But as Moles counted the generations of the first age, and so to Abraham, and the children of the promise after him, so doth St. Matthew recite the Genealogie of Christ. not by the eldest fonnes, but from those whom God had chosen and blessed, without respect of the first borne, who have hereby the prerogative in Estates, worldly and transitorie only; and therefore the Euangelist nameth Isaac, and not Ismael, though I/mael were first in time : so doth he take Iacob the younger, and not E/au the elder; neither is Christ derived from any of the three eldest Patriarchs, Reuben, Simcon, or Leus, but from Iuda a fourth brother, and so from David a younger sonne of leffai; 10 and lastly we finde, that the Kingdome it selfe of Inda was not given to the Heire in nature, but to the Heire of grace, namely Salomon.

He third objection is, that the great difference of yeares between those of the first age, whereof some of them had well neare seene a thousand yeares, makes it disputable, whether the account of times were of the 20 same measure as in after-ages, seeing that soone after the floud men liued not a third part of that time, and in fucceeding ages and to this

Solin. Poli. bist . . 6. 3. Macrob. Satur.

They that have hereon resolved that those yeares were but Lunarie yeares, (to wit) of a Moneth or thereabouts, or £gyptian yeares, are easily confuted. For whereas Seth begat Enosh in the yeare of his life 105. if those yeares bee taken but for Moneths, then had Archanged but eight yeares and one Moneth when he begat Enolh; and if the time of Enolh have the same allowance, when he begat Kenan, then could Enoth at that time have beene but fixe yeares and fortie eight weekes old; and fo it may be gathered of the rest; excepting only Adam, who was created perfect in 30 his kinde, as were the trees in their kinde, bearing fruit and feede. But this were too ridiculous to imagine. For to giue an abilitie of generation at 6. 7. or 8. yeares, agreeth with the short lives of the Pigmies, and not with the constitutions of our first Fathers, who being descended from Adam, the workemanship of Gods hands, and begotten and borne in the strong youth of the world, had length of daies and abilitie of body agreeable. Againe, if we allow this idle conceit of the Lunarie yeares, then there would follow this extremitie, that those which lived longest, and vowards of nine hundred yeares, had by that accompt but the time of foure score and ten and odde yeares, which were not only leffe by farre then the Patriarch's lined after the floud, but short of many mens lives in this decrepit age of the world, wherein many 40 exceede foure score, and some hundred yeares. Further (if neede be) to disproue this reckoning, whereas it is written Gen. 25. That Abraham died in a good age, an old man, and of great yeares: all which (if the former account were of Lunaric yeares) makes but seuenteene and an halfe of our yeares.

And if we feeke for a cause of this long life in nature, then is it reasonable, that the first man, created in highest perfection, should also beget children of equals strength or little differing; for of the first and purest seede there must of necessitie spring up the fairest and fruitfullest Plants. Secondly, the earth it selfe was then much lesse corrupt, which yeelded her increase, and brought forth fruit and foode for man, without any fuch mixture of harmefull qualitie, as fince that time the curse of God for 50 the crueltie of mans heart brought on it and mankinde : Neither had the waters of the floud infused such an impuritie, as thereby the naturall and powerfull operation of all Plants, Hearbes, and fruits upon the earth received a qualification and harmefull change. And as all things vnder the Sunne haue one time of strength, and anof weakenesse, a youth and beautie, and then age and deformitie : so Time it felfe (woder the deathfull shade of whose winges all things decay and wither) hath walted and worne out that lively vertue of Nature in Man, and Bealts, and Plants; yea the Heauens themselves being of a most pure and cleansed matter shall waxe old as a garment; and then much more the power generative in inferiour Creatures, who Table 2, 2, 26. by the ordinance of God receive operative vertue from the superiour.

But besides the old age of the world, how farre doth our education and simplicia tie of liuing differ from that old time? the tender bringing vp of children, first fedde and nourished with the milke of a strange Dugge; an vnnaturall curiositie having taught all women (but the begger) to finde out Nurses, which necessitie only ought commend vnto them: The hastie marriages in tender yeares, wherein, Nature being but yet greene and growing, we rent from her and replant her branches, while her selfe hath not yet any roote sufficient to maintaine her owne toppe; and such halfe-ripe feedes (for the most part) in their growing vp wither in the budde, and waxe old euen in their infancie. But aboue all things the exceeding luxuriousnesse of this gluttonous age, wherein we presse nature with our waightie burdens, and sinding her strength defective we take the worke out of her hands, and commit it to the artificiall helpe of strong waters, hot spices, and prouoking sawces; of which Lucan hath these elegant Verses:

> -0 prodigarerum Luxurics, nunquam paruo contenta paratu: Et quesitorum terra pelagog, ciborum Ambitiosa fames, & lauta gloriamensa, Discite quam paruo liceat producere vitam: Et quantum Natura petat. Non auro myrrhâque bibunt : scd gurgite puro Vita redit : satis est populis fluniula, Cerefa.

O wallfull Riot, neuer vvell content With low-priz'd fare; hunger ambitious Of cates by land and fea farre fetcht and fent: Vaine glorie of a table sumptuous, Learne with how little life may be preferued. In Gold and Myrrhe they neede not to carroufe, But with the brooke the peoples thirst is serued: Who fedde with bread and water are not sterued.

The Agyptians affirme, that the longest time of mans life is a hundred yeares, be- Pier Hieroz 1,21 40 cause the heart in a perfect bodie waxeth and groweth to strength fiftie yeares, and afterwards by the same degree decaieth and withereth. Epigenes findeth in his Philofophie, that the life of man may reach to the period of an hundred and twentie yeares and Berofus to a hundred and scuenteen yeares. These opinions Plinie repeateth and reproueth, producing many examples to the contrarie. In the last taxation, number and review of the eighth Region of Italie, there were found in the roll (faith Plinie) Plini, 70,296 foureand fiftie persons of an hundred yeares of age: seuen and fiftie of an hundred and ten: two, of an hundred and five and twentie: foure, of an hundred and thirtie: as many that were hundred and fine and thirtie, or hundred and feuen and thirtie yeares old: and last of all three men of an hundred and fortie: and this search was 50 made in the times of Velpalian the Father and the Sonne.

The simple diet and temperate life of the Essans gaue them long account of ma- tolep.antin.l.1. ny yeares: so did it to the Secretaries of Egyptian ceremonies, to the Persians, Ma- cap.8. gicians and Indian Brachmans. The Greekes affirme out of Homer, that Nestor lived Plin.1.7.c.48. three ages, and Tirefias fixe, Sybilla three hundred yeares, Endymion of the leffe Afia little leffe: Alfo Masinista of Numidia lived very long, and Dando of Illyria. Among the Kings of Arcadia many lived three hundred yeares (faith Ephorus ) Hellatities atfirmeth of the Epeians, that some of them live full two hundred yeares: and so doth Diodorus Siculus of the Agyptians; and that these reports are not fabulous; tosephus bringeth many witnesses with himselfe, as, Marethon, Berofus, Mochus, Estius, Hieronymus Ægyptius, Hecataus, Ephorus, and others. And Inthonie Fume an Histoflan of good reputation reporteth, that in the yeare 1570, there was an Indian prefented to Solyman, Generall of the Turkes Armie, who had out-lived three hundred yeares. I my felfe knew the old Counteffe of Defmond of Inchiquin in Munfter, who lived in the yeare 1589, and many yeares fince, who was married in Edward the 10 fourths time, and held her Ioynture from all the Earles of Desmond fince then; and that this is true, all the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Munster can witnesse. Strozzius Cigogna, out of Torquemada Maffaus, and the like Authours, telleth of some that have not only farre exceeded the terme prescribed by Epigenes; but been repaired from the withered estate of decrepit age to fresh youth. But for length of life, if we note but the difference betweene the abilitie of men in those daies wherein Galen the Philition lived, it may easily prove vnto vs what reedes we are in respect of those Cedars of the first age. For Galen did ordinarily let bloud fixe pound weight. whereas we (for the most part) stoppe at fixe ounces. But to conclude this part, there are three thinges (not counting Constellations) which are the naturall causes 20 of a long and healthfull life; (to wit) ftrong Parents, a pure and thinne airc, and temperate vse of diet, pleasure, and rest: for those which are built of rotten timber, or mouldring stone, cannot stand long vpright; on aire we feede alwaies and in euery instant, and on meates but at times : and yet the heauic loade of abundance, wherewith we oppresse and ouercharge Nature, maketh her to sinke vnawares in the midway; and therefore with a good constitution, a pure aire, and a temperate vse of those thinges which Nature wanteth, are the only friends and companions of a

Of the Patriarchs delivering their knowledge by Tradition: and that ENOCH writ before the floud.

Fourth scruple hath beene made, How the certaine knowledge of the Creation came to Moses, seeing there was no Storic thereof written, and if any fuch had beene, yet it is conceiued, that all memorie of Antiquitie perished in the vniuerfall floud.

But if we consider the curiositie and policie of elder ages, we shall find that knowledge was the greatest treasure that men sought for, and which they also couered 40 and hid from the vulgar fort, as iewels of inestimable price, searing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious: so as what socuer was attained vnto concerning God, and his working in nature, the same was not left to publike dispute, but deliuered ouer by heart and tradition from wife men to a posteritie equally zealous, Ex animo in animum sine literis, medio intercedente verbo, From minde to minde without Letters, by way of tradition or word of mouth. And it was thought by Efdras, Origen, and Hilarius, (as Mirandula conceineth) that Moses did not onely youn the Mount receiue the Law from God, but withall secretiorem & veramlegis enarrationem, a more fecret and true explanation of the Law, which (faith he out of the fame Authors,) he delivered by mouth to Iosuah, and Iosuah to the Elders: For to teach these mysteries, 50 which he called fecretiora to the rude multitude were no other quam dare fanctum canibus, & inter porcos spargere margaritas, then to give holy things to Dogges, and to cast pearles before swine. In succeeding times this understanding and wisedome began to be written in Ciphers, and Characters, and letters bearing the forme of beaftes, birds, and other creatures; and to be taught onely to fuch, as ferued in their Temples, and to their Kings and Priefts. Of the first the Cabala of the Jewes was an imitation: the invention of the other is alcribed to Zoroafter, Mercurius, Cadmiss, and others; but falfely. This Cabala importeth a Law received by tradition and vnwritten. Cabala in He- Cabala of fei-brew is receptio in Latine, and a reciuing in English. And this custome was also held entia 1 heologia non renelata. by the Druids & Bards of our ancient Brittaines, and of latter times by the Irifh Chro- P. M. 83. niclers called Rymers. If then fuch as would feeme wifeft in the vie of reason wil not Mirand. 110 fet acknowledge, that the storie of the Creation or beginning of all things was written 10 by inspiration, the holy Ghost guiding the hand of Moses; yet it is manifest, that the knowledge thereof might by tradition (then vsed) be delinered vnto him by a more certaine prefumption, then any or all the testimonies which prophane antiquitie had preserved and left to their successours: which their wife men (as they terme them) did lay vp and defend from the iniurie of the time and other hazards. For, leauing to remember that Adam instructed Seth, and Seth his children and succesfours, which cannot be doubted of, it is manifest, that Methusalem lived together with Adam himselfe two hundred fortie and three yeeres, and Noah with Methu-Salem no lesse then five hundred yeeres: and before Noah died Abraham was fiftie and eight yeeres old; from whence this knowledge by an easie and ordinarie way 20 might come to Ifrael, and fo to Mofes.

But belides this tradition, it is questionlesse, that the vse of letters was found out in the very infancie of the world, proued by those prophecies written on pillars of ftone and Bricke by Enoch: of which Infephius affirmeth, that one of them remained euen in his time, (meaning belike some ruine or foundation thereof) which pillars by others are ascribed to Seth. But of these prophecies of Enoch Saint Inde testifietth; and some part of his Bookes (which contained the course of the Starres, their names and motions) were afterward found in Arabia falix in the Dominion of the Queene of Saba: (faith Origen) of which Tertullian affirmeth that hee had feene and read some whole pages. It is not therfore strange, that Moses came to the know- arigen. Homil & 30 ledge of the Creation and storie of the first age, seeing hee might receive it both by tradition and letters, had not the spirit of God instructed and inspired him as it did:

which also his many and strange miracles (performed before hee wrote the Scrip-

membred out of them, the same was deliuered by Tradition from the Iewes. But 40 Irather thinke with Pererius that such a Booke there was, and that the same was corrupted after the death of the Apostles, and many things added thereunto by heretikes, who tooke occasion upon the antiquitie thereof, and out of that place of Michael contending with the deuill about the body of Moses, to frame and adde thereunto many inventions of their owne. One of the greatest arguments against these Bookes, is that neither Philo, nor Iosephus (the most diligent searchers of Antiquitie) make mention thereof. But against it I will set this opinion of Saint A v-CVSTINE, Scripfisse quidem nonnulla diuina ENOCH ellum septimum ab ADAM negare non possumus: That ENOCH the sewenth from ADAM did write divers divine things we cannot denie. Now his writings which came afterwards to light, were suspected because of the antiquitie, & of fables of Giants supposed to be begotten of Angels, and 50 others; and by so much the more, because no such Booke was found amongst those Canonicall Scriptures, kept by the diligence of the Hebrew Priests in Armario Indaico (faith Tertullian) who yet affirmeth that this Booke might bee preferued by Tertul de babit. Noah. Surely that Enoch wrote the prophecies remembred by Inde no man can mulierum, denie; how they were delinered to posteritie I know not, whether by the Ierres Cabala, or by what other meanes, the same is but mans coniccture. And (certainly) by the knowledge ascribed to Noah of the motions of the heavens, and of the natures and conjunctions of the Starres; and afterwards to some of his sonnes, to Zoroaster. and then to Abraham, it is very probable that Noah had seene and might preserve this booke. For it is not likely, that so exquisite knowledge therein (as these men had) was fuddenly invented and found, out, but left by Seth to Enoch, and by Enoch to Noah, as hath beene faid before. And therefore if letters and arts were knowne from the time of Seth to Enoch, and that Noah lived with Methusalem, who lived with Adam, and Abraham lived with Noah, it is not strange (I say) to conceive how Moses 10. came to the knowledge of the first Age, be it by letters, or by Cabala and Tradition, had the vindoubted word of God neede of any other proofe then selfe-authoritie.

Ow let vs consider the relation of Moses, who nameth seuen descents of Cains children, and of Adam by Sethten: Seth being given by God in ftead of Abel; and of Seth was Enosh begotten, in whose time men be- 20 ganne to professe Religion, and to offer sacrifice in publike. For although Adam instructed his children in the knowledge of God their

Creatour, as appeared by the facrifice offered by Cain and Abel; yet it feemeth that after the birth of Enosh men beganne publikely to call on the name of the Lord, that is, they ferued and praifed God by Communion and in publike manner, or calling ypon the name of the Lord, and thereby were the sonnes of God or the godly distinguished from the wicked. From the birth of Enosh the sonne of Seth to the time of Henoch the sonne of Inred there is nothing remembred by Moses, but their owne births, the births of their sonnes, the length of their lives, and deaths. But of Henoch it is written, that he walked with God, and he was no more feene : for God tooke him a- 30 way. By that, that he walked with God, was meant, that he was a just and vpright man, and that he feared loued and obayed God. For the same phrase Moles vieth of Noah. NOAH was a just and vpright man in his time, and NOAH walked with God. The Scuentie conuert it, ENOCH placuit Deo; HENOCH pleased God. And although Aben-Ezraand others understand this place, (tuliteum Deus:) scilicet, mortuus est, God tooke him away (that is ) he died, which (indeede) agreeth both with the phrase of the Scripture, and with our manner of speech to this day, to say, God tookehimaway, when he died, yet the difference which Moles maketh betweene the pietie of Henoch and the rest of the Patriarchs, and by omitting the word (death) which heyfeth to all elfe, makes it manifest, that Henoch was not dissolved as the rest. For to all 40 the rest of the Patriarchs, Moses vseth these wordes, And he died; but of Henoch he spake otherwise, saying only, he was missing, or he was not seene. Et non inueniebatur (faith the Epistle to the Hebrewes) quia Deus eum transsulit, And he was not found, for the Lord tooke him away. In the same place it is expresly added, that he saw not death.

But whether this taking away of Enoch were not with the same kinde of changing, which St. Paul promifeth when he faith, that when the end shall come, we shall not all die, but all shall be changed, I leave it to the learned Divines.

After Henoch, Moles passeth ouer to Methusalem and Lamech, remembring (as of the rest) the times of their birth and death: saving that Lamech prophecied of his fonne Noah, faying, This same shall comfort us concerning our worke, and forrow of our 50 hands, as touching the earth which the Lord hath curfed, Of Noah, Moles writeth more amply, then of any of the rest of Adams children by Seth, being the last of the ten generations of the first Age, whom God (with his familie) preserved, because he was an vpright man in his time, and feared God.

But of the warre, peace, gouernement, and pollicie of these strong and mightie men, so able both in bodie and wit, there is no memorie remaining: whose Stories if they had beene preserved, and what else was then performed in that newnesse of the world, there could nothing of more delight have beene left to posteritie. For the exceeding long liues of men (who to their strength of body and naturall wits had the experience added of 800. and 900. yeares) how much of necessity must the same adde of wisedome and vndertakings? Likely it is, that their works excelled all whatfocuer can be told of after-times, especially in respect of this old age of the world, when we no fooner beginne to know, but we beginne to die; according to Hippocrates.

10 Vita breuis, ars longa, tempus praceps, (which is) Life is short, Art is long, and Time is Aphor.t. headlong. And that those people of the first age performed many things worthy admiration, it may be gathered out of these words of Moses, These were mighty men, Gen, 44 which in old time were men of renowne. But these men of renowne (whom the Scripture afterwards calleth Giants, both for strength of bodie and crueltie of minde) trufled so much to their owne abilities, as they forgat altogether the pietie of Seth, and the waies wherein Henoch walked : for all the imaginations of their hearts were enill, only V. 5. euill, and continually euill. And this wickednesse was not only found in the issues of Cain, but it was then vniuerfall, when the children and somes of God, (or of the godly) were corrupted and mifted by their idolatrous wives, the Daughters of Cain, or 20 of those other men louing themselves and the world only.

That these fonnes of God were Angels, which being taken with the beautie of wo- Gon, s. v. 24 men accompanied them and begat Giants, some of the Fathers supposed, namely Lactantius and Eusebius missed by Iosephus: of whom I cannot doubt, but that they afterward changed their former opinions. And of this miftaking many Writers haue taken great aduantage, and haue troubled themselves with large answeres and very needlesse: the question being vncapable of disputes, especially since St. Chrysoflome and St. Augustine have answered it largely long agoe. For, that good and godly men were honoured with the title of Gods children, it doth every where appeare in the Scripture; and on the contrarie, to thinke that Angels, who (as Christ 30 witneffeth) behold the face of God, (that is) alwaies attend his commandements. should after a separation from the rest which fell with Lucifer for sake the glorious presence of their Creatour, and become Incubi, or Succubi, contrarie both to nature and grace, were more then madneffe to imagine.

d. VIII.

That the Giants by Moses so called were indeed emen of huge bodies: as also divers in latter times.

F these Giants which Moses calleth mightie men, Goropius Becanus an Antuerpian (who thought his owne wit more Giganticall then the bodies of Nimrod or Hercules) hath written a large discourse, intituled Gigantomachia, and strained his braines to proue, that there were neuer any fuch men: his reasons (whosoeuer delires to loose time) he may finde them in the Treatises before named. It is true that Cyrillus reproues the Gracian Poets for their monstrous fictions: who affirme shamelesly, That the Giants haue in elder times not only cast vp mountaines vpon mountaines, but remoued Islands out of the Sea, with like fooleries. And for that invention of casting up hils, 50 and making warre with the Gods, no doubt but that the same was borrowed out of the storie of Numrod, as before remembred; and even out of this Scripture, That the Sonnes of God faw the Daughters of Men, of whom the first Giants were begotten, was that conceittaken of Orpheus and Hesiodus, That Giants were the sonnes of the Heauen and the Earth; meaning by the Heauens the sonnes of God, and by the Earth the daughters ofmen: which verses of Orpheus are by Iohn Cassam (who hath written a wittie discourse of this subject) thus changed into Latine.

From the Earth, and from thy bloud, O heaven, they came, Whome thereupon the Gods did Giants name.

But what will not Opiniators and felfe-beleeuing men dispute of, and make doubt 10 of, if they cannot conceive that there were in the first Age such kind of men; and of which there have beene in all times fince? Seeing the Scriptures auow the one manifeltly, and common experience the other?

And for that superlative straining of words, and the meaning of them, that the name of Giants was given to oppressours and Tyrants, and not to strength of body and eminent stature: such men might with better reason call them oppressours because they were Giants, and therefore had abilitie to oppresse, then say, That they were called Giants onely, because oppressours. For first Moses himselfe calleth them mightie men; which sheweth a strength surpassing others: and afterwards, men of renowne, (that is) of great vndertaking and aduenturous action. And if the 20 fame stature of body, and abilitie had not beene found among divers Nations after the generall floud, then might this place of Mofes have more willingly hearkned to a dispute, and yeelded to interpretation. But besides all these famous Giants found in prophane Histories (which I will re-

ferue to accompanie the Giants of Albion in the Storie of Britanie) the Scriptures doe clearely and without all allegoricall confiruction anow, That, befides Nimrod, there were found of these Giants in the time of Abraham, of Moses, of Iosua, and of David; namely the Rephains in Afteroth, the Zuzai or Zanzummins in Ham, and the pareth with the Anakims, which dwelt in Hebron; for they also were taken for Giants 30 as the Anakims: Likewise where Moses speaketh of the land of Ammon, he vseth these words. That also was taken for a land of Giants, for Giants dwelt therein aforetimes: and, whome the Ammonites call Zamzummims: a people that was great, and many, and tall as the Anakims. And these Giants called Rephaims in Asteroth and Karnaim, and the Zuzei or Zanzummims, Chedorlaomer King of Elam ouerthrew, affifted by other Kings his affociates. Also the Prophet Amos found among the Ammonites men of Giantlike stature, whome he compareth to the Cedar, and whose strength to the Oakes; and the Prophet BARVCH, These were the Giants famous from the beginning, that were Bar.3.v.16. of so great stature, and so expert in warre. Particularly it is written of og, King of Deut.3. v.11. Basan, that his bedde of yron was nine cubits long, and source cubits broad: for only 40 Og King of Basan remained of the remnants of the Giants, who commanded the Kingdome of Basan, source hundred yeares after the expedition of Chedorlaomer. Moreover those discoverers and searchers of the Land of promise (sent by Moses from Cadesbarre in Paran) made report at their returne of the great stature of those

Numb.13.0.34. people in generall, and especially of the sonnes of Anak, in these wordes. All the people which we saw in it are men of great stature: for there we saw Giants, the sonnes of A N AK which come of the Giants, so that we seemed in our sights like grasse-hoppers, and so we were in their fight, (that is) the fearchers found in their owne judgements a meruallous difference betweene the Inakims and themselues: insomuch that the Israelites were fo stricken with feare, as they rather fought and defired to returne againe into 50 Ægypt, and were more willing to endure their former flauerie, then to fall by the

6.14.4 strokes of those searcfull Nations. Furthermore the Scriptures put vs out of doubt, z.Sam.17.4. that Goliah the Philistine of Gath was a Giant of fixe cubits and a spanne long : the armour which he wore waighed five thousand shickles of brasse: the shaft of his speare was like a weaters beame, and his speare head waighed fixe hundred shickles of yron. Alfo in Samuel there is mention of another Goliah firnamed Getheus, because he was 3. Sam 31, 2. 19. of Gath; and of three other Giants; of which the first was slaine by Iehonathan, Da- 1. thron. 20, 21. uids Nephew, who had twelve fingers, and as many toes: a man of great stature, and his fingers were by fixes, euen foure and twentie.

Also that Sampson was of surpassing strength no man doubteth, who tore a Lion Ind. 14.6. as it had beene a Kidde, and after flew thirtie of the Philistines, and (after that) a 14-19. thousand more of them with a jawbone of an Alle; And lastly he tookethegates 16.3. of Azzah, and the two posts, and lifted them away with the barres, and put them

ypon his shoulders, and carried them to the toppe of the Mountaine before Ebron. If then it be approued by every judgement, that both Nature and the Heavens' waxe old, and that the great age of time hath ( with it felfe) infeebled and almost worne out the vertue of all things, then I say, That as in all other kindes the Earth (before that Sinne had increased the curse and corruption) brought forth her young ones more strong and beautifull then it did in after-ages : so also those Giants, those mightie men, and men of renowne as farre exceeded the proportion, nature and ftrength of those Giants remembred by Moles of his owne time, and after him their fucceffours, as the ordinarie proportion of all men ingenerall, foone after the floud and in times farre off, exceeded the bulkes and bodies of men which are now borne 20 in the withered quarter and Winter of the world: If therefore Giants were common in the third and fourth age, much more in the first flourishing youth and newneffe of the world.

But the wickednesse (especially in crueltie and oppression) of these men was such, as God therefore by the floud gaue end to all flesh, but to the full Woah and his familie. And Godrepented him that he had made man, which St. Augustine thus expound Gen. 6.6. deth : Neque enim sicut hominem, ita Deum facti sui panitet , cuius est de omnibus om- De ciuit. Del &

ERE before we proceede any further, the occasion offereth it selfe for vs to consider, how the Greekes and other more ancient Nations, by fabulous inventions, 20 and by breaking into parts the Storie of the Creation, and by deliuering it ouer in a mysticall sense, wrapping it vp mixed with other their owne trumperie, haue fought to obscure the truth thereof; and have hoped, that after-ages, being thereby brought into many doubts, might receive those intermixt discourses of God and Nature for the inventions of Poets and Philosophers, and not as any thing borrowed or stolne out of the bookes of God. But as a skilfull and learned Chymist can aswell by separation of visible elements draw helpfull medicines out of poyson, as poyson out of 30 the most healthfull hearbs and plants (all things having in themselves both life and death) so, contrarie to the purposes and hopes of the Heathen, may those which sceke after God and Truth finde out everywhere, and in all the ancient Poets and Philosophers, the Storie of the first Age, with all the workes and maruailes thereof, amply and liuely exprest.

That the corruptions themselves were very ancient : as in the familie of NOAH, and in the old Agyptians.

Vt this defection and falling away from God, which was first found in Angels, and afterwards in Men (the one hauing erred but once, the other ener) as concerning mankinde it tooke fuch effect, that thereby (the liberall grace of God being withdrawne) all the posteritie of our first Parents were afterwards borne and bred in a world, suffering a perpetuall Eclipse of spirituall light. Hence it was that it produced plants of such imperfection and harmefull qualitie, as the waters of the generall floud could not fo wash out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankinde. Yea, euen among the few sonnes of Noah there 30 were found ftrong effects of the former poylon. For as the children of Sem did inherit the vertues of Seth, Enoch, and Wosh; so the sonnes of Cham did possesse the vices of the sonnes of Cain, and of those wicked Giants of the first Age. Whence the Chaldeans beganne foone after the floud to ascribe divine power and honour to the creature, which was only due to the Creatour. First, they worshipped the Sunne, and then the fire. So the Agyptians and Phanicians did not only learne to leave the true God, but created twelue feuerall Gods, and divine powers, whom they worshipped; and vnto whom they built Altars and Temples. Vt in fo great a confusion of vanities, where among the Heathens themselues there is no agreement or certaintie, it were hard to find out from what example the beginnings of these inuentions were borowed or after what ancient patterne they erected their building, were it not 10 certaine, that the Ægyptians had knowledge of the first Age, and of what focuer was done therein, partly from fome inscriptions upon stone or mettall remayning after the floud, and partly from Mizraim the fonne of Cham, who had learnt the same of Cham, and Cham of his father Noah. For all that the Agyptians write of their ancient Kings and date of times cannot be fained. And though other Nations after them had by imitation their Inpiters also, their Saturnes, Vulcans, and Aug. 1.19.2.22. And belides this Cittie of Henoch, Philo Iudeus conceineth that Cain built fixe others, as Maich, Iared, Tehe, 40 Gr.4.20.21.22 Iesca, Selet and Gebat: but where Philo had this I know not. Now as Cain was the first Inpiter, and from whome also the Ethnickes had the invention of facrifice: fo were Jubal, Tubal and Tubalcain (inuentors of pastorage, smiths-craft, and musick) the same. which were called by the ancient prophane writers Mercurius, Vulcan and Apollo; and as there is a likelihood of name betweene Tubalcain and Vulcan: fo doth Augufline expound the name of Noema or Naamath, the fifter of Tubalcain, to fignific Venusta, or beautifull Voluptas, or pleafure; as the wife of Vulcan is faid to be Venus, the Lady of pleasure and beautie. But herein was the memoric of Plut in Ifide. Seth most manifestly preserved, that the Agyptians worshipped Seth, as their most ancient parent, and of the first tradition: in honour of whome they called a principall Prouince Setheitica. We also find in Bithynia the Cittie of Sethia, and others of Strabol.17. the same name elsewhere. And sure from the Agyptians did the Gracians borrow,

Of the three chiefest IVPITERS; and the strange storie of the third.

Vt of all those Armies of Iupiters remembred by the Ancients, Cicero maketh but three, because those were of most fame: which other writers have also done, who sought out, and laboured in their 10

The first was Impiter, the sonne of Ather and Dies, so called because the one had reference to his calestiall conditions (for ether is as much as shining or pure fire) the other discouered his naturall vertues, which daies and times make more perfect, and are the witnesses of mens actions.

The second was said to bee the sonne of Coelum or Heauen, for the same former respect; and this Supiter was an Arcadian, and King of Athens.

The third of whom all the Græcian fables were deuised, was of Creete (now Candie) the sonne of Saturne and Ops. The name derived from the Latine is taken of fauans Pater, from the Greeke word Zeus, it signifieth life, but somewhat strayned. 20 Boccas in his genealogic of the Gods conceineth, that his name was borrowed from Jupiter the Planet; but whether that starre had such a name, before the same was ginento men, I know not. Iupiter is hot and moist, temperate, modest, honest, aduenturous, liberall, mercifull, louing, and faithfull, (that is) giving these inclinations. And therefore those ancient Kings beautified with these conditions might be called there after Iupiter; but how soener they were, or were not with those vertues enriched, yet, by imitation, all Kings in the eldest times assumed those titles and sirnames: great Princes affecting as high titles of honour and reputation in the world, (howfoeuer deserued) as the worthiest, that cuer were, acquired by their well deseruings. Joues omnes Reges vocarunt antiqui, The Ancients called all Kinges IVPITERS as 30 TZETZES in his Variahistoria confirmeth: Reges olim Ioues vocarunt omnes: Inold times all Nations called their Kings IVPITERS. But where this last and most remembred Jupiter was borne it is vncertaine. Some there are that make him of Creet: o-Nat. com. Li.c.7 thers, that he was but fent thither by his mother Ops or Opis, to be follered and hidden from the fury of Titan his vncle: because it was conditioned betweene Saturne and Titan, that Saturne being a yonger brother, and raigning (for his ownelife) by Titans permiffion, he should put to death all his male children, least the Titans might be interrupted by any of them in their fuccession, which agreement because Saturne performed in his first borne, it is fained that Saturne denoured his owne children.

But Opis, the mother of Jupiter, being delivered at once both of Jupiter and June. connected Impiter (first called Lyfanias) into Crete, as thee did afterwards his two brothers, Neptune and Pluto: where hee was brought vp in Gnoffus, the chiefe Citie of that Island, by Cresta the King, or by the Curetes, a people and nation thereof. Enfet, in Temps Others challenge him to be of Thebes, and a Thebane: others call him an Arcadian:

others make him of Meffena. The like contention is found among the Greekes touching his education and first fostering. Some affirme, that he was fed by honie-bees: in recompence whereof he changed their black coats and skinnes into yellow, a reward well fitting fuch a God: others, that he was nourished by Beares: others, by Goats: and of all thefe the idle Greekes have many prettie tales. But in the end when Titan had knowledge, that Saturne had broken his faith, he set on him, and tooke him and his wife prisoners, whom Iupiter againe rescued and delivered.

But lastly, the Father and the Sonne aqually ambitious, the one doubted the other. Saturne being the leffe powerfull fled into Italie, and left his Kingdomes in Greece to his fonne. And although this Prince at the first purchased great honour. and for his many vertues the name of Iupiter was given him; yet, after he was once fetled and became potent, he gave himfelfe over wholly to palliardize and adulterie. without all respect of honour, law, or religion. And it is reported by such, as doe as cribe the actions of many to one Jupiter, that not therewith fatified, he was after-20 wardes knowne to offend in the sinne of Sodome with Ganimedes and others; and did not onely begin with incest, marrying his owne fifter Iuno, but he rauished, betrayed, stole away, and tooke by strong hand all the beautifull women borne in his time. within the limits of his owne kingdomes, or bordering them. Among whom these hereafter written were of greatest fame, Niobe, Laodemia, and Alemena the wife of Amphitryon, by whom he had Pelafgus, Sarpedon, Argus, and Hercules: by Taygete he had Taygetus, of whom the mountaine Taygetus tooke name, with another sonne called Saon, of whom Sauona: by Antiope he had Amphion and Zetus: by Lada, Castor & Pollux, Helen & Clytemnestra: by Danae Perseus: by Iordana Deucalion: by Charme (the daughter of Eubulus) Britomartis, by Protogenia he had Athlius the fa-20 ther of Endymion; and by 10 (the daughter of Inachus) Epaphus, the Founder of Memphis in Agypt: which Epaphus married Lybia, of whom that Countrie tooke name, for so the Greekes afterward called Africa. He ravished Agina, the daughter of Afopus, and carried her into the Island Oenopia or Oenotria, afterward called Ægina, on whom he begat Æacus: by Torrhebia he had Archesilaus and Carbius: by Ora Colaxes: he had also Dardanus by Electra, who built Dardanium, afterward Ilum and Troy. Hee begat the brothers Talici, on Thalia, and on Garamantis Hiarhas. Hee had befides these (if they belie not their chiefe God) Phileus and Pilummus, inuentors of Bakers craft; and I know not how many more; but I know well that hee could not bee father to all these, who were borne in ages so farre differing. And of these his seuerall rauishments, betrayings, stealing away of mens wines, daughters and fonnes, buying of virgins, and the like came in all those ancient fables of his transformations into showers of gold, Eagles, Buls, birds, and beafts; and of him, and by him (in effect) all that rabble of Græcian forgeries. And yet did not the Greekes and Romanes feare to entitle this monster, Optimus Maximus, though Cisero in his second booke de natura Deorum affirme, that he descrued nothing leffe, and in his Oration pro domo fus reprocheth Clodius for his incest, by the Lucin factly. name of Iupiter. His buriall was in Crete (faith Lucian) Cretenfes non folum natum apud se & sepultum I O V E M testantur, sed etiam sepulchrum eius oftendunt. Diodorus Siculus tels by way of report from the Lybian fables, confirmed (as he faith) by fome Greeke writers that the original of these Gods was from the westerne parts of Africk. For there among the Atlantida raigned one Vranus (which fignifieth heauen) called fo for his great skill in Aftrologie, and for his knowledge, and benefits to the people, honoured by them as a God after his death. He had by many wines 45. fonnes; but by his principall wife Titea he had 17. fonnes and two daughters, all which were called after their mothers name the Titanes. Of Titealikewife it is faid. that thee for her goodnesse was canonized as a Goddesse, being dead, and called the Earth, as her husband was stiled Heauen. But of all the children of Tites, her daughter Baliles (which name founding as Queene in English, shee is by the Latine tran-10 flator of Diodorus called Regina) excelling the rest as far in vertue as in yeeres, was by generall confent of her brethren, and of the people, appointed to rule as Queene after her fathers death, being as yet a virgin. Shee tooke to husband her brother Hyperion, to whom thee bare a fonne and a daughter, called Sun and Moone. The beautie and towardlinesse of these children mooued her brethren to enuie, and bred in them a feare of being excluded from the succession: wherefore they tooke the boy and drowned him in the river Eridanus, now called Poe. The loffe of this childe caused his lister to breake her owne neck; and the losse of both her children made the mother to play many mad prankes, dancing with Cymbals, after a wilde fashion. in fight of all the people, before whom shee is faid to have vanished away. Ere shee 10 died, her sonne (as the fable hath it) fignified vnto her in a dreame, that he and his fifter by the providence of God should become immortall, that also the Sun and Moone should be called by their names, and that their death should be reucaged vpon the murderers. According to which it is faid, that the people did so call those two Planets, and withall held her felfe as a Goddesse, and tearmed her the great mother, which name they had formerly given to her, for her motherly care in cherithing her brethren whilest they were yong. Hyperion and his race being extinguished, the other sonnes of Vranus divided the kingdome. Of these Atlas and Sa. turne were chiefe. Atlas raigned over the Countries lying about the mountaines, which afterward bare his name; a just and wife Prince, deeply skilfull in Aftrologie, 30 and for invention of the Sphere faid to have supported Heaven. He had many fonnes; but the principall of them called Hefterus, being of his fathers qualities and studies, was said to have beene carried away by the winde, from the top of an high hill in the midst of his contemplations, and his name in honour of him, imposed by the people vpon the morning starre. The seuen daughters of Atlas were also said to have beene excellent Ladies, who accompanying fuch as came to be deified, or registred among the Worthies, brought foorth children, answerable in qualitie to those that begat them. Of these it is held, that the seuen starres called Pleiades tooke name. Saturne the brother of Atlas raigned in Sicilia, part of Africk and Italie. Iupiter another of the sonnes of Vranus, raigned in Crete; who had tenne sonnes which he 40 called Curetes; he called that Iland after his wives name Idea; in which Ile he died, and was buried. But this Iupiter must not have beene that great one, but vncle to the great Jupiter, if these fables of the Lybians were true. Saturne (as these Lybians tell the tale (was a great tyrant, and fortified strong places, the better to keepe his people in Subjection. His fifter Rhea was married to Hammon, who raigned in some part of Africk. Hammon louing others as well as his wife, or better, got a daughter, called Minerua, neere to the river Triton, who thereupon was called Tritonia. Hee also begat on Amalthea a sonne called Bacchus, whom he caused secretly for feare of his life to be brought up at Nyla, an Iland in the river Triton, under the tuition of his daughter Minerua, and certaine Nymphes. To Amalthea he gaue in reward a goodly 50 Countrie, that lay on the Sea coast, bending in forme of a horne, whence grew the tale of Amaltheas plentifull horne, famous among the Poets. When Rhea heard these newes, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturne, who not onely entertained her as a lifter, but tooke her to wife, and at her infligation made warre vpon

Hammon, vanquilhed him by affiftance of the Titanes, and made him flie into Crete. The Curetes, Jupiters children before mentioned, held the Iland at that time; which was new named Crete by Hammon, after the name of Creta the Kings daughter, whom he tooke to wife, and had with her (women as may feeme being very gratious in those times) the kingdome. Bacchus was growne a proper yong man, had found out the making of wine, the art of planting trees, and many things elfe commodious for mankinde, before the flight of his mother in law. Now therefore hearing report of all that had happened, and that Saturne was comming against him with the Titanes; heleuied an Armie, to which the Amazons living not farre from 10 Nyla, added great forces, in lone of Minerua, who was entred into their profession. So Bacchus leading the men, and Minerua the women, they fet forward against Saturne, met him, ouerthrew him, and taking many of the Titanes prisoners, returned to My/a; where pardoning the prisoners, that promised to become his true followers, he præpared for a second expedition. In the second expedition he behaued himselfe so well, that he wanne the loue of all the people by whom he passed; insomuch that partly for good affection to him, partly in hatred of Saturnes rigorous gouernment, he was greatly strengthened, and the enemie as much enfeebled by daily revoltes. Comming to the Cittie of Hammon, he wanne a battaile of Saturne, before the very wals. After which Saturne with his wife Rhea fled by night, fetting 20 the Towne on fire to despight Bacchus. But they were caught in their flight, pardoned by Buchus, and kindly entreated. Saturne had a yong forme by Rhea, called Jupiter. This childe Bacches tooke with him in a great expedition that he made into the East countries; and comming into Egypt, he left this Iupiter, being then a boy, gouernour of the Countrie; but appointed vnto him as an Overseer, one Olympus, of whom Iupiter grew to be called Olympius. Whilest Bacchus travailed through all nations, as far as into India, dooing good in all places, and teaching many things profitable to the life of man; the Titanes had found out his father Hammon in Crete, and began to warre vpon him. But Bacthus returned out of India; with whom Iupiter from Agypt, and his fifter Minerua, together with the rest that afterwards were held 30 as Gods, joining all their forces, went into Crete, ouerthrew the Titanes, chafed them. tooke, and flew them, and freed the world of them all. After all this, when Hammon and Bacchus were dead, they were deified; and the great Jupiter the sonne of Saturne fucceeding them, raigned Lord alone ouer all the world, having none of the Titanes left aliue, nor any other to disturbe him. Betweene this tale of the Lybian Gods, and the Egyptian fables of Oliris, there is a rude refemblance, that may cause them both to be taken for the crooked images of some one true historie. For the expeditions of Ofiris, and of Bacehus; the warres of the Giants in the one storie, of the Titanes in the other; the kingdome of Agypt given by Hercules Lybicus to Orus, by Bacchus to Iupiter, the rattles of Isis, and the Cymbals of Basilea, with many pettie circumstan-40 ces, nearely enough refemble each other, howfoeuer not alike fitted to the right persons. Sanchoniato (as Eusebius cites him) would have all these to be Phanicians, Euseb Elect and is earnest in saying, that it is a true storie, and no Allegorie. Yet he makes it seeme the more allegoricall, by giving to Vranus or Heaven for daughters, Fate and Beautie, and the like, with addition of much fabulous matter, omitted by Diodorus, though Diodorus haue enough. To the genealogie he addes Elius or the Sun, as father of Vranus; and among the children of Vranus, Iapetus, Batilus, and Dagon, (whom Diodorus doth not mention by their names) giving withall to Vranus the proper name of Terrenus or Indigena, and of Illus to Saturne, but omitting Iupiter of Crete, The Pedigree of them is this.

VI.

Of CHAM, and other wicked ones, whereof some gat, some affected the name of Gods.

F Iupiter Belus, the sonne of Saturnus Babylonicus, otherwise Nimrod, it feemeth that Cicero had not heard, (at least by that name) who was more ancient than any of the former three by him remembred : for long after these times were the Greekes but Saluages, if they seeke no farther off for their Gods.

But the Agyptians, even after the floud, began (somewhat before this Chaldaan Jupiter) to intitle Cham, the parent of their owne Mizraim, Jupiter Chammon, or Hammon. For the Etymologie of this word (Hammon) which the Greekes deduce ab arenis, from the fandes, is ridiculous (faith Pencer); neither yet is his owne much better, who brings it from Hammath, which fignifieth heate: because the faid Temple of Jupiter Hammon was feated in Lybia, where the ayre is exceeding hote and fcortching. And as for the antiquitie of the latter Iupiter (among the Greekes and Romans the most renowned) it is certain that he was borne not long before the war of Troy, as by many of his fonnes is made manifest; namely, Castor, Pollux, Hercules, Sarpedon, and others, which lived in that age of Priamus, vnder whom, and with whom Troy was destroied.

Now feeing that mortall men, and the most wicked, were esteemed immortall among the Heathen; it was not to be wondred at, that Alexander Macedon, Tyberius, 10 Nero, Caligula, and others fought to be numbred among them, who were as deformed monsters as the rest: For by what reason could the same Deitie be denied vnto Laurentia and Flora, which was given to Venus? seeing they were as notorious and famous harlots as the was.

٥. VII.

That the wifer of the ancient Heathen had farre better opinions of God.

Vt that euer Pythagoras, or Plato, or Orpheus, with many other ancient and excellently learned, belieued in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected, though some of them (ouer bussly) have mixed their owne inuentions with the Scriptures: for, in punishment for their fictions, did Pythagoras hang both Homer and Hesiodus in Hell, where hee fained that they were perpetually stung and pinched with Serpents. Yet it cannot be doubted, but that Homer had read ouer all the bookes of Moses, as by places stolne thence, almost word for word, may appeare; of which Iustine Martyr remembreth many in that Treatife converted by Mirandula. As for Plato, though he difsembled in some things, for feare of the inquisition of the Areopagites, yet St Augu-30 stine hath already answered for him (as before remembred) Et mirifice ijs delect atus est, qua de uno Deo tradita fuerant, And he was greatly delighted in the doctrine of one God, faith Infline Martyr. Now howfoeuer Lactantius pleafed to reprehend Plato, because (faith he) Plato sought knowledge from the Agyptians, and the Chaldeans, neglecting the Iewes, and the bookes of Moses: Eusebius, Cyrillus, and Origen, finde Euseb. Trap. ereasonto belecuethe contrarie, thinking that from thence he tooke the grounds of gril, tent, Juall by him written of God, or fauouring of Diuinitie; and the same opinion had St. lian.

But whether it were out of the same vanitie, which possessall those learned Phi- Ambr. ad Iren. losophers and Poets, that Plate also published (not under the right Authors names) 19.6.4.2. 40 those things which he had read in the Scriptures; or fearing the securitie of the A- Arespagns, or reopagites, and the example of his Master Socrates, by them put to death by poylon, domai few mons I cannot judge. Justine Martyr (as it feemeth) afcribethit wholly to Platees feare, his hillia house whose wordes among many other of the same effect, are these; PLATO Mosis wherein capimentionem facere, ob id, quod vnum solumo, Deum docuerat, sihi apud Athenienses tutum were tried so non putanit, veritus Areopagum, PLATO fearing the Areopagites thought it not fafe called at first: for him among the Athenians to make mention of Moses, that he taught that there is but therein first one God. But for that Divinitie which he hath written in TIMAEO; id ip fum de Deo pleaded his disseruit quod & Moses he discoursed and taught the same of God (saith Iustine Martyr) cause for the which Moses did. For where it pleased God by his Angell to answere Moses, lirrothes. 50 Ego sum existens (which is) I am; and existens missi me advos. I am hath sent me wnto Paulaniu Attie. he giueth this testimonie: Genitorem Vniuersitatis tam difficile est inuenire, quam inuentum impossibile digne profari, It is as hard to finde out the Creatour of the Vniver all, as it is imposible, if he were found, to speake of him worthily. And what can be more agreable De Legib.1.10. to the Maiestie of Gods nature, then this propertie by Plato acknowledged ? Deus bonus, & quidem, Deus caufa bonorum : malorum autem omnium non caufa, God is absolutely good, and so (assuredly) the cause of all that is good: but of any thing that is enill he is no cause at all: and againc, Charitas Dei fuit causa factionis mundi, & originis omnium rerum, The love of God was the cause of the worlds creating, and the originall of all things. Apuleius the Platonist. Summus Deus infinitus est, non solum loci exclusione sed etiam natura dignitate: Et nihilest Deo similius & gratius, quam vir animo perfecto bonus, The 10 most high God is also an infinite God, not only by exclusion of place, but by the dignitie of nature : neither is there any thing more like or more acceptable to God then a man of a perfect heart. Thales affirmed that God comprehended all thinges, and that God was of all thinges the most ancient, quia nunquam esse capit, because hee neuer had any beginning: Zeno, that God beheld even the thoughts of men: Athenodorus, that therefore all men ought to bee carefull in the actions of their life, because God was every where present, and beheld all done. But what can be more agreable to Moses storie of the creation, then this opinion and description of the worldes beginning in Euripides, Scholler of Anaxagor as?

Heauen and Earth one forme did beare: But when disioyned once they were From mutuall embraces? All thinges to light appeared then, Of trees, birds, beafts, fishes, and men The still-remayning races.

And as in Pythagoras, in Socrates, and in Plato: fo we finde the same excellent understanding in Orpheus, who every where expressed the infinite and sole power of one God, though heevse the name of Iupiter, thereby to avoide the envie and danger of the time; but that he could attribute those thinges to the Sonnes of men and mortall creatures, which he doth to this Iupiter, there is no man who hath euer heard of God, that can imagine.

Now besides these former testimonies, that all the learned men of ancient times were not so stupid and ignorant, as the Agyptians, Gracians, and other Nations by them infected were, I will only repeate two or three other opinions, and leaue the Reader to those large and learned Collections of Justine Martyr, Clemens, Lattantius, Eusebius, Eugubinus, Peucer, Plesis, Danaus, and others. For Cleanthes the Stock, being demaunded of what nature God was, described him by these attributes and 30 properties. And this is certaine, that if we looke into the wifedome of all ages, wee shall finde that there never was man of folid understanding or excellent judgement: never any man whose minde the art of education hath not bended; whose eyes a foolish superstition hath not afterward blinded; whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensiue inspection aduised; but 10 that he hath found by an wirefillable necessitie, one true God, and cuerlasting being, all for euer caufing, and all for cuer fullaining, which no man among the Heathen hath with more reuerence acknowledged, or more learnedly exprest, then that Agyptian Hermes, howfocuer it failed afterward in his posteritie: all being at length by deuilish pollicie of the Agyrian Priests purposely obscured; who inuented new Gods, and those innumerable, bell forting (asthe Deuill perswaded them) with vulgar capacities, and fittell to keepe in awe and order their common people.

That Heathenisme and Iudaisme, after many wounds were at length about the same time valer Iv LIAN miraculously consounded.

Vt all these are againe wansheed; for the inuentions of mortall men are no lesse mortall then themselves. The Fire, which the Chaldans worthipped for a God; is crept into every mans chimney, which the lacke of sevel stances, water quencheth; and want of aire suffocateth. Jupiter is no more every with sunoes selousies; Death hath perfwaded him to chaptitie, and her to parience; and that Time which hath denoured it selfe, hathalfo caten up both the bodies and images of him and his : yea, their 30 starely Temples of Rome and durefull Marble. The houses and sumptuous buildings creeted to Baal, can no where bee found upon the earth; nor any monument of that glorious Temple confecrated to Diana. There are none now in Phanicia, that lament the death of Adoris; nor any in Lybia, Creta, Thessalia, or elsewhere, that can aske counfaile or helpe from Impiter. The great God Pan hath broken his Pipes, Apolloes Priests are become speechlesse; and the Trade of riddles in Oracles, with the Deuils telling mens fortunes therein, is taken up by counterfait Agyptians, and cousening Astrologers.

But it was long ere the Denill gaue way to these his ouerthrowes and dishonours: for after the Temple of Apollo at Delphos (one of his chiefe Mansions) was to many times robbed, burnt, and destroyed; yet by his diligence the same was often enriched, repaired, and reedified againe, till by the hand of God himfelfe it received the last and otter subuersion. For it was first robbed of all the Idols and ornaments therein by the Eubwan Pyrates: Secondly, by the Phlegians vtterly fackt: Thirdly, by Pyrrhus the Sonne of Achilles: Fourthly, by the Armie of Xerxes: Fiftly, by the Captaines of the Phocenses: Sixtly, by Nero, who carried thence fine hundred brazen images : all which were new made, and therein againe fet vp at the common charge. But what soeuer was gathered betweene the time of Nero and Constantine, the Christian Armie made spoile of, defacing as much as the time permitted them; notwithstanding all this it was againe gloriously rebuilt, and so remained till such so time as Iulian the Apollata sent thither to know the successe of his Parthian enterprife, at which time it was veterly burnt and confumed with fire from Heauen; and the image of Apollo himselfe, and all the rest of the Idols therein molten downe and loft in the earth.

F this destruction it pleased God to give warning vnto Woah: who (faith Iolephus) fearing to perish among the rest, secedens cum suis in aliam regionem migrauit. He departed with his children, and travailed into another Region. And of these Giants from whom Noah withdrew himselfe, Berosus writeth in this manner, That they exceeded in all forts of inhumane and unnaturall wiskednesse, and that they were contemptores & religionis & Deorum , contemners of religion and of the Gods : a- 23 mong which mightie men (faith Berofus) vnus erat qui Deorum venerantior, & prudentior cunctis, &c. huic

This Arke God commanded Noah to prepare: And God said unto No AH, make thee an Arke of pine trees: thou shalt make cabines in the Arke, and shalt pitch it within, and without, with pitch. For God made 27 och to know that an end of all flesh was at hand, and that the graues of the rebellious and cruell generations were already fashioned in the cloudes, which soone after 38 should swallow up and couer all living creatures, which breathed in the aire: Woah and his familie excepted.

Many there are who have disputed against the vniuerfalitie of this ouerflowing, and have judged that this floud of Woah fell but on some particular places and Kingdomes: moued so to thinke, because in elder ages there have beene many other floudes (as they suppose) of that nature. Hereof Nicholaus Damascenus writeth in this manner, as his wordes are cited by I o sephvs. 49 Issepant Li.c.a. Est super Minyadam excelsus mons in Armenia, qui Baris appellatur, in que multos consugientes sermo est diluui tempore liberatos, & quendam simul in Arca deuectum in huius vertice hasiffe, lignoruma, relliquias multo tempore conservatas, qui fortasse is fuit, de quo etiam Moses Indeorum Legislator scribit : thus farre this Authour. Of the floud in the time of OGYGES: and that this was not NOAHS floud.

Vt from the vanity of the Greekes, the corrupters of all truth (faith Lactantius) who without all ground of certainty vaunt their Antiquitie, came the errour first of all: who therein flattering themselues also, sought to perswade the world, that there was no floud præceded the floud of Ogyges, King of the Thebans in Baotia, or rather of Attica; and therefore faith Rhodoginus Ogygiumid appellant Poeta, tanquam peruetus dixeris, Rhollis, c. 33

ab OGYGE vetuftisimo. The Poets gaue the name of OGYGIA to things exceeding ancient, as of OGYGES the most ancient.

But let ogyges be as ancient as those men can make him, yet it is manifest that he 20 lived but in Iacobs time (though Eufebius makes him later, and in Mofes time) and Eufebide pres. was borne 67. yeares after him. There is also an opinion, that ogyges was Cadmus cuang. li. to. (and then was he faire later) as Rhodoginus in the ninth booke of his antiquities remembreth : sunt tamen qui in Ægypto regnasse autument hunc : unde sit CADMVS qui in Graciam profectus Thebas condidit, a boue ingulato sic nuncupatas; quoniam Syrorum lingua bos dicitur Thebe. There are (faith hee) who thinke that this OGYGES did raigne in Ægypt, whereby he should be CADMVS, who traveling into Greece built Thebes, so named of a beefe slaine: because in the Syrian language a beefe is called Thebe. But this floud of Ogyges fell in the years of the world 3440, according to Eulebius, who followed the account of the Septuagint: and the floud of Noah in the yeare 30 2242. after the same account; and so there came 1200. yeares betweene these flouds, wanting but two, though heerein Eufebius was much mistaken, and corrected this opinion in his Chronologie. Now although the very yeare and time of this ouerflowing in Achaia, or rather Attica, be not practifely let downe, but that there is a great difference among writers, yet who foeuer makes it most ancient, findes aboue 500. yeares difference betweene that and the generall floud.

For Paulus Orofius affirmes, that this tempest fell vpon the Athenians but 1040. Eilsaz. yeares before Rome built. Bucholzerus faith it was 1043. elder then Rome; which was founded (according to the same Bucholzerus) in the worlds yeare 2210: though after the account which I follow (and whereof I will give my reasons in the storic of 40 Abraham) it was built in the worlds yeare 3280. Now the generall floud præceded the building of Rome (faith Bucholzerus) 1563. yeares: and the floud of Ogyges (as before) 1043. Hence it followeth by casie calculation, that (if he place Ogrges in his true age) the difference betweene these two flouds must be 520, yeares, to which we (allowing 60.more) finde 580. And that this of ogyges was not the same of Noah (except we call Noah Ogyges prifcus, as some doe) it appeares by this, that Xenophon, Anthe floud of Ogyges then king of Attica or Ogygia, did not extend it selfe any further mianus. then the bankes of Archi-pelago, or the Agwan Sea. For whereas Mela, Plinie, and Mela list. Solinus witnesse, that the Cittie of Joppe in Judea was founded before the floud; and Plindis.

that (notwithstanding the waight of waters) there remained on certaine Altars Solea 47. 50 of stone the title of the King, and of his brother Phineus, with many of the antiquissimum grounds of their religion: fure, it is no where found among prophane Historians or to ante inundanor in the scriptures, that ever the floud of ogyges spreadit selfe over any part of Sy-tionem terraria, much leffe ouer all the earth. But that it drowned both the Regions of Attica rum conditum. about Athens, and that of Achaia in Peloponnesus, it is very probable. For it see-

Of this floud of Ogyges was invented the fable of Apollo and Diana. For Latona 10 the daughter of Caus, the fonne of Titan, being beloued and forced by Inpiter, and by him gotten with childe, Juno thereat enraged permitted her (as they fay) no part of the earth to be deliuered on; and withall caused the monstrons serpent Python to follow and affright her, wherefocuer the trauailed, till at length arriving at the Ile of Ortygio she was there received: in which she was delivered, first of Diana, and then of Apollo, being Twinnes; whereof Barlaam makes this exposition: That at fuch time as the deluge (which happened in Ogyges his raigne) cealed, out of the abundant moisture of the earth (heat by putrefaction being thereto mixed) there were exhaled fuch thicke mists and fogges, that in Attica, and along the coasts of the Egean fea, neither the beames of the Sunne by day, nor of the Moone by 20 night could pierce the ayer, or be perceived by the inhabitants: so as when at length (the earth being dried, and these vapours diffipated) the aver began to be cleare, and the people of ortygia espied the light of the Moone somewhat before day, and Plin.li.4.ca.11. and in the same morning the Sunne also appeared : fabulously (because Diana repræsented the Moone, and Apollo the Sunne) they were reported to be borne in the Ite of Ortygia thereof afterwardes called Delos : which fignifieth manife-

And furely it is not improbable, that the floud of ogyges, being fo great, as Histories have reported it, was accompanied with much alteration of the ayre fensibly differenced in those parts, and some vnusuall face of the skies. Varro iff his bookes De 20 gente populi Romani (as he is cited by S. Augustine) reporteth out of Castor, that so Aug.de ciu.dei great a miracle happened in the starre of Venus, as neuer was seene before, nor in after times: For the colour, the greatnesse, the figure, and the course of it, were changed. This fell out as Adraftus Cy zicenus, and Dion Neapolites, famous Mathematicians af-

Now concerning the course of that or any other planet, I doe not remember, that Thaue any where read, of so good Astrologers flourishing among the Greekes, or else where in those daies as were likely to make any calculation of the revolutions of the Planets so exact, that it should neede no reformation. Of the colour and magnitude. I see no reason why the difference found in the starre of Venus should bee 40 held miraculous; confidering that leffer miftes and fogges, than those which couered Greece with folong darkneffe doe familiarly present our senses, with as great alterations in the Sunneand Moone. That the figure should vary, questionlesse it was very strange: Yet I cannot hold it any prodigie: for it stands well with good reason, that the side of Venus which the Sunne beholdes, being enlightened by him, the opposite halfe should remaine shadowed; whereby that Planet, would vnto our cies, descrying onely that part whereon the light falleth, appeare to bee horned, as the Moone doth sceme; if distance (as in other things) did not hinder the apprehension

Galileus, Galileus, a worthy Astrologer now living, who by the helpe of perspective 50 glaffes hath found in the starres many things vnknown to the ancients, affirmeth fo much to have beene discouered in Fenus by his late observations. Whether some waterie disposition of the aire might present as much to them that lived with Ogyges as Galileus hath seene through his instrument; I cannot tell: sure I am, that the dif-couerie of a truth formerly vnknowne, doth rather conuince man of ignorance, then nature of errour. One thing herein is worthy to be noted, that this great, but particular floud of Ogyges, was (as appeareth by this of St. Augustine) accompanied with fuch vnufuall (and therefore the more dreadfull, though naturall) fignes teftifving the concurrence of causes with effects in that inundation; whereas the floud of Nosh which was generall and altogether miraculous, may feeme to have had no other token, or forelhewing, then the long preaching of Noah himselfe, which was not regarded : for they were eating and drinking, when the floud came fodainely, and Luke 17.0.27. tooke them all away.

of Devealions floud: and that this was not Noams floud: nor the Vmbri in Italie a remnant of any vniuer fall floud.

Second floud of great fame, and of which the time is more certaine. was that of Deucalion in Thessalia, of which S. Augustine out of Varro. His temporibus (vt V ARRO scribit) regnante Atheniensibus CRANAO, Juccessore Cecropis (vt autem nostri, Evsebivs & Hierony-

MVS) adhuceodem CECROPE permanente, diluuium fuit, quod appellatumest Deucalionis: (that is) In these times (as VARRO reporteth) CRANAVS the Successfour of CECROPS governing the Athenians, or (as our EVSEBIVS and HIE-

ROME Say) CECROPS yet living, that floud (called Deucalions) happened.

And in the beginning of the cleuenth Chapter of the same eighteenth Booke, he vseth these wordes. Eduxit ergo Moses ex Agypto populum Dei nouissimo tempore CECROPIS Atheniensium Regis, cum apud Assyrios regnaret ASCATADES, apud Sicyonios MARATHVS, apud Arginos TRIOPAS. MosEs led the people of God out of Agypt about the latter times of CECROPS King of the Athenians, ASCATADES raigning over the Assyrians, over the Sicyonians MARATHVS, and over the Argives 30 TRIOPAS: fo as leaving the curiofitic of a few yeares, more or leffe, it appeareth, that this floud of Deucalion was either at the egreffion of the children of Ifrael out of Agypt, or neare it: and then after Noah 753. yeares, according to Functions, who makes Cecrops to live in the yeare of the world 2409. or if we follow Mercator, then 739 yeares after Noah, and in the yeare of the world 2395. But if Deucalion were borne in the age of the world 2356. according to Codoman; then giving vnto Deucalion fourtie yeares of age when this floud happened, it falleth within one yeare of Mercators account. But Deucation by all approved Historians is faid to have beene 82. yeares old at that time. Now Clemens Alexandrinus dates the time of this floud of Deucalion, and the conflagration and burning in Phaetons time, by the raigne of 40 Crosopus King of the Argines; but Crotopus lived King of the Argines fixe yeares after Ifrael departed Agypt, which makes twentie yeares difference according to Funelius, who will have this floud and burning to have fallen fourteene yeares before Moses left £gypt: for hee gaue of the worldes yeares to the floud and burning the yeare 2440 and to Mofes his egression the yeare 2454. And yet Cedrenes thinks that cedrond 134 Moses was more ancient, and lived with Inachus; but that cannot be true; for then had the floud of Deucation, and the burning of Phaeton, preceded the floud of Ogyges, which is denyed by all: for that of Theffalie (called Deucalions) followed that of Attica (called Ogygia) at least 250. yeares or thereabouts. Eitsebius in his Chronologie makes it 230. and so doth P. Orosius: Eusebius about the 50. yeare of Moses life, and 50 Cyrillus about the 67. and both after Woshs floud 770. yeares: for these bee Clemens Alexandrinus his wordes. Fuit autem in Gracia tempore quidem PHORONEI, qui clem. Alexa. fuit post INACHVM, inundatio qua fuit tempore Ogygis, There happened in Greece in the Iroax cof.

cording to Eulebius and Orofius; (as before) then is it manifelt, that taking 763.out of this number of 1020 it fals out that ogyges floud happened before the Hebrewes left Agypt 250. yeares, or 260. yeares, according to the difference between the opinions of Eufebius and Orofius. And for my felte (who rather follow those Chronologers, which give 60. yeares more to Abraham after the floud, then the rest) I reckon the times which come betweene these flouds in this fort. The generall floud was in the yeare of the world 1656. Incob was borne in the yeare of the world 2169. fo as from the beginning of the floud to Iacobs birth there were confumed 513. yeares. Ogyges floud happened 100. yeares after Iacob was borne; and therefore after the generall floud 613, yeares. Now Deucalion was borne in the yeare of the 10 world 2356. and hadlined 82. yeares, when his Kingdome of Theffalie was ouerwhelmed; (which added to 2356. make 2438) his floud was after Weshs floud ended 782. yeares. And hereto Annius his Xenophon agreeth, who makes 700 yeares betweene the generall floud and Deucalions birth; to which adde 82. yeares of his age(as before) and then the floud of Thessale followed the general 782. yeares. The wordes of that Xenophon are these. Ab inundatione terrarum ad ortum Devealionis. secundo anno Spheri, septingenti supputantur anni, qui natus annos duos & octoginta Thesfaliam vidit inundatam, From the drowning of the world to the birth of DEVCALION. in the second yeare of Spherus, are numbred 700. yeares, and when DEVCALION was 82. yeares old, he (aw Thessalia drowned. This floud happened in the winter time a- 23 bout Parnassius: witnesse Aristotle in the first of his Meteors. And Varro (whom St. Augustine so often citeth for his excellent learning, especially in antiquities) findeth this floud of Deucalion to have happened in the time of Cranaus, who succeeded Ceerops: Orofus thinkes it somewhat later, Amphitryon raigning in Athens, the third from Cecrops. Onely this of Deucalion was very great, and reached not only ouer Theffalie it felfe, and the Regions adioyning Westward; but it couered the greatest part of Italie: and either the same, or some other particular floud then happening opprest Agypt, saith Eusebius. And therefore did the Greekes either thinke it, or faine it to be vniuerfall; and Deucalion, then King, fauing himfelfe and fome others on the mountaines of Thessale (ot all other the highest, faith Solinus) was by reason 38 thereof (as Strabo witneffeth) faid to be the preserver of mankinde. That this floud couered a great part of Italie, Plinie and Solinus make it probable: who affirme that the people then inhabiting Italie were therefore called 548pm; quia ab imbribus diluuij fuperfuissent; and therefore also were they esteemed the most ancient Nation, as Strabo confirmeth in his first Booke, and Trezenius in his second: which Vmbrithese

But that these Vmbri were not the inhabiters of Italie before the floud of Nosh, and so tooke name by sauing themselves upon the Appenine mountaines, the Scriptures teach vs: shewing who, and who only then were preserued, 40 which is fufficient. Aint Augustine out of Varro affirmeth that the Greekes and Latines made not any mention of the vniuerfall floud, because they had nothing of antiquitie foregoing that of ogyges; and therefore (according to Rhodoginus before remembred) were all thinges among the Greekes(which antiquitie had worne out of knowledge) called Ogygia, which we in English commonly call (worme-caten) or of defaced date. But as all the parts of the earth were successfuely planted and peopled; and as all Nations had their proper times, and not their beginning at once and at the instant: so did every familie which afterward became a great people, with whom the knowledge of di-

But the Chaldeans had certaine knowledge of Noahs floud, as Berofus witnesseth; and Nicolaus Damascenus maketh particular mention thereof (as is aforefaid) though healfo affirme by heare-fay, that some Giants faued themselues upon the mountains Baris in Armenia, but speaketh not thereof as from any authoritie approued : vling the word fermo est, that fuch a speech there Euf. de prap. E. Was. And Eufebius remembreth a place out of the ancient Historian Abydenus: who writeth that Sissithrus to preserve himselfe from a floud foretold him by Saturnus, 10 fled to the hils of Armenia by ship, ad Armenian nauigio confugiebat: who the third day (after the waters were fallen) fent forth birds, that finding no land to rest on, returned againe; which hee also did a second time, but at the third returne the birdes feete were couered with mudde and flime. To this effect are Eufebius wordes out of Abydenus, which may seeme a true description (though in other termes) of Noahs

Cyrillus also affirmeth, that Alex. Polyhistor maketh mention of this generall floud. And Plato in Times produceth an Agyptian Prieft, who recounted to Solon out of the holy Bookes of Agypt, the storie of the floud vniuerfall, which (saith he) happened long before the Gracian inundations. Fryer Annius his Xenophon remembreth 20 a third floud, which also Diodorus Siculus confirmeth, somewhat more ancient then that of Ogyges in Attica. For he named the generall floud : for the first, which happened (faith he) under the old ogyges, sub prisco ogyge, which was Woah; he calleth the second Niliaca: Hercules and Prometheus then living, 44. yeares before that of Attica, in the 34. years of Belochus King of the Affyrians, though I doe not beleeue him as touching the time. But this floud couered a great part of the nether Agypt, especially all that Region subject to Prometheus; and hereof came the fable of the Diod. Siculus deliuereth in these wordes: Flunium propter cursus velocitatem, prosun-

Wat, comiliar of Vulture on Prometheus his liver, afterward flaine by Hercules of Egypt: which fiction ditatemá, aquarum Aquilam tune appellatum, HERCVLEM cum consilij magnitudine, 30 tum virtute, volunt è vestigio compressife, & aquarum impetum ad priorem cur sum conuertisse . Vnde & Graci quidam Poeta rem gestam in fabulam vertentes , HERCVLEM tradunt Aquilam PROMETHEI jecur depascentem occidisse, This floud (meaning of Nilus) for the swiftnesse of his course, as also for the depth, was in those dayes called the Eagle: but HERCVLES by his great indgement and vertue did againe compresse and straighten this River, so farre extended and overspred, turning it into the old channels: Whence certaine Greeke Poets (converting this labour and worke of HERCVLES into a fable) denifed that HERCVLES flow the Eagle, which fed on PROMETHEVS liner; meaning that he deliuered Prometheus of that forrow and torment, which for the losse of his people and Countrie (by the waters destroyed and coucred ouer) hee 40 fuffered.

A fourth floud chanced about Pharus in Agypt, where Alexander Macedon built Alexandria, as Annius conceineth out of his Xenophon, who in this briefe fort Kenop. de aquiu. Writeth of all these inundations. Inundationes plures fuere: prima noumestris inundacomm. per An- tio terrarum sub prisco Ogyge : secunda Niliaca, &c. There were many inundations (faith this same Xenophon) the first which was wniner sall of nine Moneths, and this happened under the first Ogyges: the second was Niliaca, and of one Moneths continuance in the time of Hercules and Prometheus Agyptians: a third of two Moneths under Ogyges Atticus: the fourth of three Moneths in Thessalia vnder Deucalion; and a fift of the like continuance (called Pharonica) under Proteus of Agypt, about the time of Helens 50 rape. Diodorus in his fift booke and eleventh Chapter, taking the Samothraces for his Authours, remembreth a floud in Asia the lesse and elsewhere, of no lesse destruction then any of the other particular inundations, faying, that the same happened before that of Descalion: the Sea of Pontus and Hellespont breaking in ouer the land.

But there have been many flouds in divers times, and ages, not inferiour to any of these two last remembred, Niliaca and Pharonica in Agypt: as in the yeare of our redemption 590. when in October of the same yeare, Gregorie then being Bishop of Rome, there happened a maruailous overflowing in Italie, and especially in the Venetian territorie, and in Lyguria, accompanied with a most fearefull storme of thunder and lightning: after which followed the great plague at Rome, by reason of the many dead Serpents cast vp and left vpon the land, after the waters decreased and returned. And in the yeare 1446 there perished 10000 people, by the breaking Muniter, in of the Sea at Dordroch in Holland: of which kinde I take that floud to be of Achaia or Attica. Before that and in the yeare 1238. Trithemius speaketh of an earthquake Echiplis, & terwhich swallowed many thousands: and after that of a floud in Friseland, in which remotes cottones which I wandwed many thousands and atter trace of a node in 111 jenures, in which multa hom num there perished 100000 persons. Strezius Sigog. in his Magia omnifaria, telleth of milita appellian inundation in Italie, in the time of Pope Damasus, in which also many Citties of runt. Friha quoq an inundation in traue, in the time of rope Damajno, in which are limited spear per maritimes. Sicile were swallowed: another in the Papacie of Alexander the sixth: also in the year per maritimes. 1515. Maximilian being Emperour. Hee also remembreth a perilous overflowing submerta suit of in Polonia, about Cracouia, by which many people perished. Likewise Viginier a perieruni plus-French Historian speaketh of a great floud in the South part of Languedoc, which fell quam 100000. in the yeare of our Lord 1557. with so dreadfull a tempest, as all the people attended therein the very end of the world, and judgement day; faying, that by the vio-20 lent descent of the waters from the mountaines, about Nismes there were removed divers old heapes and mountures of ground, and many other places torne vp and rent: by which accident there was found both coyne of filuer and gold, divers pecces of plate, and veffels of other mettall, supposed to be hidden at such time as the Goths inuaded that Prouince, in the yeare 1156.

Q. V.

That the floud of NOAH was supernatural, though some say it might have beene foreseene by the Starres.

Ow howfocuer all these flouds and many other, which have coursed at several times several Regions, not only in these parts of the world, but in America alfo, (as I haue learned of fome ancient Southfayers among them) may be afcribed to naturall causes and accidents, yet that vniucrfall floud (in the time of Noah) was powred ouer the whole face of the earth by a power aboue nature, and by the especiall commandement of God himselfe, who at that time gaue strength of influence to the Starres, and abundance to the Fountaines of the deepe: whereby the irruption of waters was made more forcible, then any abilitic of nature could effect, or any fecond causes by what soeuer vnion could performe, without receiving from the Fountaine of all power, 40 strength, and faculties supernaturall. Henricus Mecliniensis, a Scholler of Albertus Magnus, in his Commentaries upon the great conjunctions of Albu Mafar obserueth, that before the floud of Woah, the like conjunction of Iupiter and Saturne, happened in the last degree of Cancer, against that constellation since called the ship of Argos; by which the floud of Noah might be foretold, because Cancer is both a waterie figne, and the house of the Moone, which is the Ladie of the Sea, and of moisture, according to the rules of Astronomie, and common experience. And this opinion Petrus de Aliaco vpon Genesis confirmeth, affirming that although Alia de concor-Woah did well know this floud by dinine reuelation, yet (this conjunction being no- dia 1 beolog. & torious) he could not be ignorant of the second causes thereof: for those were not 50 only signes, but also working causes, by strength received from the first cause, which is God himselfe: and further that by * Catarraste earli (Englished the windores of * The word

properly fignifieth any place of stoppage, against which the force of the water being naturally carried downewards, dasheth and breaketh; of aparos allide or frange. Hence, because windores doe not only open but also shut, the word hath been expounded (Windores) for barres or floud gates.

But

heauen) Moses meant this great and waterie conjunction; the word (Catarrasta) fignifying flowing downe or comming downe. Now(faith P. de Aliaco ) it pleased God to ordaine by the course of the Heauens such a constellation, by which all men might behold therein their destruction towards, and thereby for sake those wicked waies wherein they walked, and call vnto God for mercie.

Of this judgement was Gul. Parifienfis, who vnderstood that the wordes Catarratta cali, or windores of heaven were to be taken for the former conjunction, or for these wateriesignes, Cancer, Pisces, Pleiades, Hyades, and Orion, and of the Planets, Mars, Venus, and the Moone: which are the forcible causes of the greatest inundations. His owne words are thefe, Nondum intelligo Prophetam Hebraorum catarract as 10 cœlivocâsse, nisi partes illas cœli, qua generativa sunt pluviarum & inundationum aquarum. quales (unt figna aquatica, ot Cancer &c. as aforefaid. As yet (faith he) I perceive not what the Prophet of the Hebrews meaneth by those words, (Catarralt a cali, or windores of Heauen) unlesse he thereby understand those calestial powers, by whose influences are engendred the raine, and inundations of waters, such as are the waterie Signes of Can-

But in a word, as it might please God, that in the course of his vnsearchable wisedome this conjunction should at such time be: so did he (as aforesaid) adde vigour and facultie, and gaue to every operation increase of vertues, violent cruptions to Springs and fountaines, commaunding them to cast out the whole treasure and 20 heape of their waters; taking retention from the Cloudes, and condenling ayer into water by the ministeric of his Angels, or howfocuer else best pleased his Al-powerfulnesse.

ð. V I.

That there was no neede of any new creation of matter to make the universall flored : and what are Catarract & Cali.

Gen. 7. verf. 11.

Ow if it be objected, that God doth not create any thing of new; (for God resteth the seventh day: (that is) he did not then after create any new (pecies) which graunted, it may feeme that then all the earth & ayre had not waters sufficient to couer the habitable world fifteene cubites aboue the highest mountaines. Of this proposition whether

God hath so restrained himselfe or no, I will not dispute; but for the consequent (which is) that the world had want of water to ouercouer the highest mountaines, I take that conceit to be vnlearned and foolish; for it is written, that the fountaines of the great deepe were broken up (that is) the waters for fook the very bowels of the earth; 40 and all what focuer was difperst therein peirced and brake through the face thereof. Then let vs confider that the Earth had aboue one and twentie thousand miles: the Diameter of the Earth according to that circle seuen thousand mile, and then from the Superficies to the Center some three thousand fine hundred miles: Take then the highest mountaine of the world, Caucasus, Taurus, Olympus, or Atlas, the mountaines of Armenia or Scythia, or that (of all other the highest) in Tenuerif, and I doc not finde, that he that looketh highest stretcheth aboue thirtie miles vpright. It is not then impossible, answering reason with reason, that all those waters mixed within the earth three thousand fine hundred miles deepe should not well helpe to couer the space of thirtie miles in height, this thirty miles vpright being found in the 59 depths of the earth one hundred and fixteene times: for the fountaines of the great Deepe were broken vp, and the waters drawen out of the bowels of the earth. Secondly if we consider what proportion the earth beareth to the extension of the ayre ouer and aboue it, we shall finde the difference exceeding great. If then it pleaCHAP.7. fed God to condense but so much of this ayre as every-where compasseth and embraceth the earth, which condensation is a conversion of averinto water, a change familiar in those elements, it will not seeme strange to men of judgement, yea but of ordinarie vnderstanding, that the Earth (God so pleasing) was coursed ouer with waters without any new Creation.

Lastly, for the opinions of Gulielmus Paristensis, and Aliacensis, to which I may adde Berofus and others, That fuch a conjunction there was, foreshewing that destruction by waters which followed; and that by the word Catarracta cali, or Windores of heauen, was meant this conjunction; there needes no other answere then 10 that observation of Ludouicus Vines, who affirmeth that by the gravest Astrologians it was obserued, that in the yeare 1524 there should happen the like conjunction, as at Noahs floud, then which (faith he) there was never a more faire, drie, and feafonable yeare: the like destruction was prophecied of the yeare 1588. But Pieus Earle of Mirandula proueth that there could not bee any fuch conjunction at that time.

To conclude, I finde no other mysterie in the word Catarracta cali, then that the clowdes were meant thereby: Moles vling the word Windores of Heauen (if that bee the sense of the word) to expresse the violence of the raines, and powring downe of waters. For whofocuer hath feene those fallings of water, which sometimes hap-20 pen in the Indies, which are called the Spowts (where clowdes doe not breake into drops, but fall with a refiftleffe violence in one body) may properly vie that manner of speech which Moses did; That the windores or floud-gates of heauen opened: (which is) That waters fell, contrarie to custome, and that order which we call naturall. God then loofened the power retentiue in the vppermost aire, and the waters fell in abundance : Behold (faith I o B) he which heldeth the waters, and they drie 100 6,12,1,181 vp, or better in Latine, Et omnia siccantur, and all things are dried vp; but when hee sendeth them out, they destroy the earth: and in the 26. Chapter. Hee bindeth the waters in the dowdes; but these bonds God loosed at that time of the generall floud, and called up the waters which flept in the great deep: and these joyning together couered 30 the earth, till they had performed the worke of his will: which done, hee then com- Gon 8.1; maunded them to returne into their darke and vast caues, and the rest (by a winde) rarified againe into aire, formerly condensed into drops.

Of some remainder of the memorie of No AH among the Heathen.

O A H commaunded by God, before the fall of those waters, entred the Arke which he had built, with his owne wife, and his fonnes, and his fonnes wiues, taking with them of euerie creature, which tooke life by generation, feuen of the cleane, and of the vncleane, two. Woah, according to Philo, fignifieth quietnesse: after others, and according to the prophecie of his Father Lamech, cellation; to whome after-times gaue many names answering his antiquitic, zeale, vertue, and other qualities: as, The first ogyges, because in the time of the Grecian Ogyges there was also a great floud of Achaia: Saturne they called him, because hee was the Father of Nations: Others gaue him the name of Prometheus, who was faid to steale away Iupiters fire; fire in that place being taken and understood for the knowledge of God and heavenly things. Others thinke that he was so called for his excellent wisedome and forelight. Hee had also 50 the name of Janus, (idest) vinofus, because Jain, fignifieth wine in the Hebrew. And so Tertulian finds him written in libris ritualibus, in the bookes of ceremonies, preceding both Saturne, Vranus, and Ioue which three enjoyed an elder time then all the other ancientest fained Gods. And this name Iain is taken from the Hebrew and Syrian, and not from the Latine: for it was in vie before there was any Latine Nation, or any Kingdome by that name knowne. Of the antiquitie of Ianus, Fabius Pictor giueth this testimonic. I A N I atate nulla erat Monarchia, quia mortalibus pectoribus nondum haferat vlla regnandi cupiditas, &c. Vinum & far primus populos docuit I A N V S ad (acrificia : primus enim aras & Pomæria & (acra docuit, In the time of I A N V S (faith he) there was no Monarchie : for the desire of rule had not then folded it selfe about the hearts of men. I ANVS first taught the people to facrifice Wine and Meale : he first fet up Altars, instituted gardens and solitarie groues, wherein they vsed to pray; with other holie rires and ceremonies. A greater testimonie then this there cannot be found among the Heathen, which in all agreeth fo well with the Scriptures. For first, whilest Noah flourished, there was not any King or Monarch : Aim oc' being the first that 10 tooke on him soueraigne authoritie. Secondly, 20 oah after the floud was the first that planted the Vine, and became a hulbandman; and therefore offered the first fruits of both (to wit) Wine and Meale. Thirdly, hee was the first that raised an Altar, and offered facrifice to God, a thanks-giving for his mercifull goodnesse towards him. Noah was also fignified in the name of Bifrons ( which was given to Ianus) because he beheld the times both before and after the floud, quia praterita nouerit, & futura prospexerit, saith Arnobius. Because he knew what was past, and prouided for what was to come. He was also in the person of lanus shadowed by the name of Chaos, and femen orbis, the feede of the world; because as out of that confused heape was drawne all the kindes of beafts and plants: so from Woah came all mankinde: 20

He was also intituled Calim and Sol, Heaven and the Sunne, for his excellent knowledge in Astronomic: Vertumnus, Bacchus, and Liber Pater, not that latter, which 20 Diod. Siculus, and Alex. Aphrodifeus fo call, because he was the restorer of the Greekes to their former libertie, but in respect of the floud. For the Greekes called Liber 24's, and his Nurses Hyades, of raine, because Noah entred the Arke, when the Sunne ioyned with the Starres Hyades, a constellation in the brow or necke of Taurus, and euer after a monument of Neahs floud. He was also by others furnamed Triton, a Marine God, the Sonne of Neptune: because hee lived in safetic on the waters. So was he knowne by the name of Diony [us, quali Jiaricow, mentem pungens, bite-braine, or wit-flinger, though Diodorus conceiue otherwise, and deriue that name à patre & loso, of his Father, and the place of his birth, (to wit) of Ioue, and Nisa a Towne of Arabia falix, faith Suidas out of Orpheus. He had also the by name of Taurus, or Tauro- 40 phagus; because he first yoked Oxen and tilled the ground, according to that of Mofes And NOAH became an husbandman. Now howfocuer the Gracians vaunt of their Theban Bacchus (otherwise Dionysus) it is certaine that the name was borrowed, and the invention stollen from Noah. But this name of Bacchus, more anciently Boacus, was taken (faith Gul. Stuckius, and out of him Danaus) from Woachus, (N) being consumalibut, & changed into (B); and it is the more probable, because it cannot bee doubted but Danaus depri- that Noah was the first planter of the Vine after the floud: and of Noah (the first and might the better be preserued, there were founded by his issues many great Citties which bare his name; with many rivers and mountaines: which oftentimes forgat that it was done in his regard, because the many names given him brought the same confusion to places as to himselfe. Notwithstanding all which, we finde the Cittie of Plin.1.6. Noah vpon the bankes of the red Sca and elsewhere: the River of Noas in Thrace, Herod. Of sundrie particulars touching the Arke : as the place where it was made, the matter, fallion and name.

Ow in what part of the world Noah built the Arke, it doth not appeare in the Scriptures, neither doe I finde any approued Authour that hath written thereof: only Goropius Becanus in his Indo-Scythia conceineth, that Nosh built his Arke neare the mountaines of Caucalus, because on those hilsare found the goodliest Cedars: for when Alex.

Macedon made the warre among a people, called Ny/ai, inhabiting the other fide of 20 Caucasus, hee found all their burials and Sepulchers wrought ouer with Cedar. To this place (faith Becanus) Noah repaired, both to separate himselfe from the reprobate Giants, who rebelled against God and Nature, as also because he would not be interrupted in the building of the Arke; to which also hee addeth the conveniencie of rivers, to transport the Timber which hee vsed, without troubling any other car-

Only this wee are fure of, that the Arke was built in some part of the Easterne world; and to my understanding, not farre from the place where it rested after the floud. For Noah did not vie any mast or faile (as in other ships) and therefore did the Arkeno otherwise moue then the Hulke or body of a ship doth in a calme Sea. 20 Also because it is not probable, that during these continuall and downe-right raines there were any windes at all, therefore was the Arke little moued from the place where it was fashioned and set together. For it is written: Godmade a winde to passe Gen. 8.12 upon the earth, and the waters ceased; and therefore it may be gathered, that during the fall of the waters, there was not any storme or forcible winde at all, which could drive the Arke any great distance from the place where it was first by the waters lifted vp. This is also the more probable, if that ancient opinion beetrue, as it is very likely, that the Arke had fundum planum, a flat bottome, and not raised in forme of a ship with a sharpnesse forward, to cut the waves for the better speede.

This kind of Veffell the Hebrewes call Thebet, and the Greekes Larnax, for fo they 40 termed Deucalions (hip and some say, that the hill Parnassus, to which in eight dayes hearrised, was first called Larnassus, and by the change of (L) into (P) Parnassus; but stephide tribi Paufanias thinks that it tooke name of a Sonne of the Nymphe Cleodora, called Par- foliage. nassus, the inventour of Auguration.

Peucerus findes the word ( Parnaffis ) to have no affinitie with the Greeke, but De Oracul fat thinks it deriued from the Hebrew word Nahas, which fignifieth Auguration and 94. Distination : or from Har or Parai, as in his Chapter of Oracles in the leafe before cited.

lofephus cals the Arke Machina, by the generall name of a huge Frame : and Epi- Epiph, in Ancore phanius out of the Hebrew Aron; but herein lieth the difference betweene Aron 50 and Thebet, That Aron fignificth properly the Arke of the Sanctuarie, but Thebet fuch a Vessell, as swimmeth, and beareth it selfe vpon the waters.

Laftly, this Arke of Noah differed from the falhion of a ship in this, that it had a couer and roofe, with a crest in the middest thereof, and the sides declining like the roofe of an house; to the end, both to cast off the waters, and that thereunder Noah himselfe and his children might shelter, and separate themselves from the noysomnesse of the many beasts, which filled the other roomes and parts of the Arke.

Of what wood the Arke was built it is vncertaine. The Hebrew word Gopher once and in this place only vsed is diversly vnderstood; and though the matter bee of little importance, yet this difference there is, That the Geneua Translation cals it Pinetree, the Rabbine Gedar, the Seventie square timber, the Latine smooth tim-Plin. ber. Others will haue it Cypres trees, as dedicated to the dead, because Cypres is worne at funerals. But out of doubt if the word Gopher fignific any special! kinde of timber, Noah obayed the voice of God therein; if not, hee was not then curious as touching the kinde or nature of the wood, having the promise of God, and his grace to and mercie for his defence. For with Noah God promifed to establish his covenant, worme eates not; and he auoweth that he faw in Vica, in the Temple of Apollo Cedar beames, laid in the time of the foundation of the Cittie, and that they were still found in his time, which was aboue 1 188. yeares after: prouing thereby, that this kinde of wood was not subject to putrifying or moulding in a very long time. But in that it is easie to cut, light to carry, and of a sweet sauour, lasting also better then any other wood, and because neare the place where the Arke rested, there are found great store of these Cedar trees, as also in all the mountaines of the East, befides those of Libanus, it is probable enough that the Arke might be of that wood: 20 which bath befides the other commodities the greatest length of Timber, and therfore fittest to build ships withall. Pererius conceineth that the Arke had divers forts of timber, and that the bottome had of one fort, the decke and partition of another; all which may be true or falle, if Gopher may be taken for timber in generall. True it is, that Cedar will serue for all parts of a ship, aswell for the body, as for masts and yards. But Nosh had most respect to the direction received from God: to the length, breadth, and heighth, and to the partitions of the Arke; and to pitch it, and to diuide it into Cabines, thereby to seuer the cleane beasts from the vncleane, and to preserve their severall forts of foode; and that it might be capable of all kinde of liuing creatures, according to the numbers by God appointed. All which when 30 Woah had gathered together, hee cast his considence wholly on God, who by his Angels steered this ship without a rudder, and directed it without the helpe of a Compasse or the North starre. The pitch which Noah vsed, is by some supposed to haue beene a kinde of Bitumen, whereof there is great quantitie about the Valley of Sodome and Gomorra, now the dead Sea or Asphaltes : and in the Region of Babylon, and in the West India, and herein it exceedeth other pitch that it melts not with the Sunne, but by the fire only, after the manner of hard waxe.

Pererius.

That the Arke was of Sufficient capacitie.

He Arke according to Gods commaundement had of length three hundred cubites, fiftic of breadth, and thirtie deepe or high: by which proportion it had fixe parts of length to one of breadth, and ten times in length to one of depth; of which St. AVGVSTINE. Procul dubio figura est peregrinantis in hoc faculo Ciuitatis Dei,(hoc est) Ecclesia, qua sit

Without doubt (faith he) it 50 is a figure of the Cittie of God, trauailing in this world as a stranger (that is) of the Church, faued by the tree whereupon the Mediatour betweene God and Man, the man Iefus Christ did hang: for even the very measure of the length, heighth, and breadth, answereth the shape of mains body, in the truth whereof the comming of Christ was foretald and performed.

By what kinde of Cubite the Arke was measured, it hath beene a disputed question among the Fathers, and others; and the differences are in effect these. The first kinde of cubit (called the Common) containeth one foot and a halfe, measured from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle singer. The second (the palmecubit) which taketh one handfull more then the common. The third is called Regins Cubitus, or the Persian Cubit, which exceedeth the common cubit three inches. The fourth is the facred cubit, which containeth the common or vulgar cubit double, wanting but a quarter or fourth part. Laftly there is a fift cubit, called Geometricall, which containeth fix common cubits. But of all these sortes, 10 which were commonly measured by the vulgar cubit, the alteration and diminution of mens statures hath made the difference. For as there is now a lesse proportion of bodies: so is the common cubit, from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle finger, of leffe length then it was in elder times.

St Augustine considering the many sortes of beastes and birds which the Arke held, with their food and water, was sometimes of opinion, that the Arke had proportion after the Geometricall cubit, which containeth almost six of the Common. For measuring the Arke by the vulgar cubit, it did not exceed the capacitie of that Athen. dipnofes. veffell built by Hiero of Syracuse, or the ship of Prolomie Philo-pater. But St Augu- lib 4. fine (who at the first wasled by Origen) changed his judgement as touching the Demetry.

20 Geometricall cubit; and found vpon better consideration, that there needed not fo huge a bodie to præserue all sortes of creatures by God appointed to be reserued. For it was not needfull to take any kindes of fillnes into the Arke, because they were kept lining (faith St Augustine) in their owne element. Won fuit necesse conservarein S caiqua possent imaquis viuere; non solum mersa sicut pisces, verum super-natantia, sicut multa alites. It was not needfull to conferue those creatures in the Arke, which could line in the waters ; and not onely fifthes which can line under water, but also those fowles which sit and swimme on them : and againe, Terranon aqua, maledita, quià Adam non huius, sed Augde ciuit. illius fructum vetitum comedit. It was the earth, and not the waters, which God curfed: for Deilis, ca. 57 of the forbidden fruit of the earth and not of the Sea, did Adameat; fo as St Augustine

20 gathereth hereupon, (asaforefaid) that so huge a Frame needed not. And if wee looke with the eies of judgement hecreunto, wee shall finde nothing monstrous therein; although the imaginations of men, who (for the most part) haue more of mischiefe and of ignorance, then of any reuerend reason finde many impossibilities in this worke of God. But it is manifest, and vndoubtedly true, that many of the Species, which now feeme differing and of feuerall kindes, were not then in rerum natura. For those beasts which are of mixt natures, either they were not in that age, or else it was not needfull to præserue them: seeing they might bee generated againe by others, as the Mules, the Hyæna's and the like: the one begotten by Asses and Mares, the other by Foxes and Wolues. And whereas by dis-40 couering of strange landes, wherein there are found divers beastes and birdes differing in colour or stature from those of these Northerne parts, it may be supposed by a superficiall consideration, that all those which weare red and pyed skinnes, or feathers, are differing from those that are leffe painted, and were plaine ruffet or black: they are much mistaken that so thinke. And for my owne opinion I finde no difference, but onely in magnitude, betweene the Cat of Europe, and the Ounce of India; and cuen those dogges which are become wilde in Hispagniola, with which the Spamards vsed to deuoure the naked Indians, are now changed to wolves, and begin to destroy the breed of their Cattle, and doe also oftentimes teare asunder their owne Children. The common Crowe and Rooke of India is full of red feathers in the Acoff. biff. India: 50 drown'd and low Islands of Caribana; and the Blackbird and Thrush hath his feathers mixt with black and carnation: in the North parts of Virginia. The dogfish of England is the Sharke of the South Ocean: For if colour or magnitude made adifference of Species, then were the Negro's, which we call the Black-mores non animalia rationalia not men, but some kinde of strange beastes: and so the Giants of the South America should bee of an other kinde, then the people of this part of the World. Wee also see it daily that the natures of fruits are changed by transplantation, some to better, some to worse, especially with the change of Climate. Crabs may be made good fruit by often grafting, and the best Mellons will change in a yeare or two to common Cowcummers by being fet in a barren foile: Therefore taking the kindes præcifely of all creatures, as they were by God created, or out of the carth by his ordinance produced: The Arke, after the meafure of the common Cubit was fufficiently capacious to containe of all, according to the number by God appointed: For it we adde but halfe a foot of measure to the Common Cubit, which had a foot and a halfe of Giantlic stature (and lesse al- 10 lowance we cannot give to the difference betweene them and vs) then did the Arke containe 600 foot in length, and 100 foot in breadth, and 60 foot deepe. But first of all to make it manifest, that the Geometricall Cubit is not vsed in the

Exed. 20.26.

Scripture, the stature of the Giants therein named may suffice. For if the bed of Of King of Basan had been nine Geometricall Cubites long, it had taken 74. Cubites of the common, which make 80 foot : and Goliah, who had the length of 6. Cubites and a handfull, which makes nine foot and a handfull, a proportion credible) if these Cubites had beene Geometricall, then had beene 54. foot in heighth and vpwards, which were monstrous and most incredible: for (according to this proportion) had the head of Goliah beene nine foot long, and farre waightier and big- 20 ger then all Dauids bodie, who carried it away.

Againe if the Geometricall Cubit had been vsed for a measure in the Scripture as many Commenters have observed, then had the Altar (appointed to containe five Cubites of length, fine of breadth and three of heighth) have reached the I mgth of 27. foot vpright, and so must their Priestes have ascended by steps or ladders to have performed their facrifices thereon, which was contrarie to Gods Commandement given in these wordes: Thou shalt not goe up with steppes unto mine altar, that thy shame bee not discovered thereon; and therefore was the Altar but three Common Cubites high which make foure foot, that their Priests standing thereby might execute their office: Wherefore I may conclude, that the Cubit mentioned in the Scriptures was 30 not the Geometricall, but the ordinarie Cubit of one foot and a halfe, according to the measure of Giantly stature; which measure (doubtlesse) might give much the more capacitie to the Arke, although it be also probable, that as the men were, so were the horses whereon they rode, and all other creatures of a correspondent size. And yet (as I take it) though by this meanes there were not any whit the more roome in the Arke, it were not hard to conceiue, how all the distinct Species of Animals, whose lives cannot bee præserved in the waters, might according to their præsent quantities bee contained in a vessell of those dimensions which the Arke, had; allowing to the Cubit one foot and a halfe of our now vfuall measure: whence it followeth of necessitie, that those large bodies which were in the daies of 200ah 40 might have roome fufficient in the Arke, which was measured by a Cubit of length proportionable.

How the appointed number of creatures, to be faued (that is) feuen of the cleane, two of the vncleane (with necessarie foode) might have place in the Arke, But ao hath very learnedly declared: the briefe fumme of whose discourse to that purpose is this. The length of the Arke was three hundred cubits, which multiplyed by the breadth, namely fiftie cubits, and the product by the heighth of thirtie cubits, sheweth the whole concauitie to have beene 150000. Now whereas the posts, walles, and other partitions of lodgings may feeme to have taken vp a great part of the hollow: the heighth of the roofe which (the perpendicular being one cubit) contained 7500. cubicall cubes, was a 50 fufficient recompence: If therefore in a ship of such greatnesse wee seeke roome for 89. diffinct Species of beafts, or (leaft any should be omitted) for 100. seuerall kinds, we shall easily finde place both for them, and for the birds, which in bignesse are no way answerable to them, and for meate to sustaine them all. For there are three forts of beafts, whose bodies are of a quantitie best knowne; the Beefe, the Sheepe, and the Wolfe: to which the rest may be reduced, by saying, (according to Aristotle) that one Elephant is answerable to foure Beeues, one Lyon to two Wolues, and fo of the rest. Of beasts, some feede on vegetables, others on flesh. There are one and thirtic kinds of the greater fort, feeding on vegetables : of which number, onely three are cleane, according to the law of Moles, whereof feuen of a kinde entred into the Arke, namely three couples for breede, and one odde one for facrifice: the other eight and twentie kindes were taken by two of each kinde, fo that in all there were in the Arke one and twentic great beafts cleane, and fixe and fiftie vncleane, estimable 10 for largenesse as 91. Beeues; yet for a supplement (least perhaps any Species becomitted) let them be valued, as 120. Beeues. Of the leffer fort, feeding on vegetables were in the Arke fixe and twentie kinds, estimable with good allowance for supplie, as fourescore Sheepe. Of those which deuour flesh were two and thirtie kinds. answerable to three score and soure Wolues. All these 280, beasts might be kept in one storie or roome of the Arke in their severall Cabbines; their meate in a second: the Birds and their prouision in a third, with place to spare for Noah and his familie, and all their necessaries.

That the Arkerested upon part of the hill Taurus (or Caucasus) betweene the East Indies, and Scythia.

A praterition of some questions lesse materiall: with a note of the wse of this question, to finde out the Metropolis of Nations.

Hat time Noah tooke to build the Arke, I leave to others to dispute; but he received the Commandement from God 100. yeares before the waters fell: and had therefore choice of time and leifure fufficient. As for the number of decks & partitions, which Origen deuides into foure. St. Augustine into three, I will not trouble the Reader with the con-trougifie: or whether those creatures which sometimes rest on the land, other times in the waters, as the Crocodiles (now called Alegartos) the Sea-cowes or Sea-horses, were kept in the Arke, or no, I thinke it a needleffe curiofitie; and yet to this faith Pererius, and others before him, that a fish-poole might bee made as well within the Arke, as in Hiero his ship of Syracuse. Lastly, to consider or labour to disproue the foolerie of the Hebrewes, who suppose that the Arke was lightened by a Carbuncle, 4º or had windores of Cristall to receive in light, and keepe out water, were but to reuiue the buried vanities of former times. But that which I feeke most to satisfie my felfe and others in, is in what part of the world the Arke rested after the floud : because the true vnderstanding of some of these places (as the seate of the terrestrials Paradise, and the resting of the Arke) doe only and truly teach the worlds plantation, and the beginning of Nations, before and after the floud; and all storie, as well generall as particular, thereby may be the better understood.

A proposall of the common opinion, that the Arkerested upon some of the hils of Armenia.

writers were vtterly mistaken. And I am not led so to thinkeout of my humour or newnesse of opinion, or singularitie; but doe herein ground my selfe on the origi-nall and first truth, which is the word of God, and after that vpon reason, and the most probable circumstances thereon depending. For whereas it is written, that the Arke stayed upon one of the mountaines of Ararat, which the Chaldean Paraphrast hath converted Kardu, meaning the hils Gordai or Gordiai in Armenia the greater: (as the wordes Gordai and Kardu seeme to bee one and the same) of which opinion also the most of our Interpreters are; I finde neither Scripture nor reason which teacheth any fuch thing: (to wit) that it rested on that part of Ararat, which is in the greater to Armenia. Nicolaus Damascenus cals this mountaine of Ararat, Baris, being the same which the Chaldean nameth Kardu, to which mountaine the Fryer Annius (citing this place out of Iosephus) makes him finde another adjoyning, called Ocila, and to fay that the Arke (of which Moles the Lawginer of the Hebrewes wrote) did first · take ground on this Ocila. But I doe not finde any fuch mountaine in being, as this Ocila; neither is there any mention of it in the place of losephus. Strabo remembreth a Promontorie in Arabia falix, of that name, and Plinie findes a Mart-towne fo called in the same, which Piolomie cals Ocilis, Pinetus Acyla, and Niger Zidon. But this Ocila of Damascenus, or rather of Annius, seemeth to be one and a part of the Armenian mountaines. Berofus calleth those mountaines of Armenia Cordiai, and Cur- 20 tius Cordai: Ptolomie Gordai and Gordiai: of which the Countrie next adioyning is by this Nicolaus Damascenus called Ninyada, perhaps (as Becanus coniectures) for Hierem 51.27. Milyada or rather Minni : which word is vsed for Armenia Minor. And the very word of Armenia seemes to be compounded of this word Minni, and Aram: as if

Nat. bifl.1.5.c.12 we should say Minni of Syria; for that Armenia also was a part of Syria, Plinic witnesseth. Epiphanius placeth the Cardyes about these mountaines, whom others call Gordieni or Gordeni. The mountaines are seated a part from all other to the North of that Ledge of mountaines called Taurus, or Niphates in the plaines of Armenia the great, neare the Lake Thospitis: whence the River of Tigris floweth in 75. degrees of longitude, and 41. and 42. degrees of latitude. One of the mountaines 20 Gordiei (that which surmounteth the rest) Epiphanius cals Lubar, which in the Ar-Total, de Antia, menian fignifieth a place of descent : but this out of Iosephus; which name (faith Iunius) was of the euent, because of Noahs comming downe with his children. But this alfo I take to be a supposed euent; seeing any hill, from whence on euery side wee must descend, may thus be called : as Iunius corrects the place in Iosephus Aout Rapis (Kubaris.) That the place is thus to be read, he coniectureth, because Ioseph.l. 1. c.4. faies, the place is called ano Batiffier (as it were the descent or comming downe) and Epiphan.l. I. cont. Heref. cals it Adoap: which word in the Armenian and Agyptian tongue signifieth descent, of Lubar, which is to descend; whence also Lubra is a Synagogue, because it was commonly built on some high place : whereof also the La- 40

tine Delubrum may seeme to be derived; and Act. 6.9. they that belonged to the Synagogue of the Agyptians are called Libertini, for Lubratenu. Yet this opinion

lowance without any farther examination; although the name of Lubar might otherwife rightly be giuen, especially to that mountaine, by reason that the passage

B Vt there are many arguments to personade me, that the Arke of Noah did not rest it selfe in any part of Armenia, and that the mountaine Ararat was not Baris, nor any one of the Gordiaan mountaines.

For first, it is agreed by all which follow Berofus, that it was in the 130. yeare, or Berofil. in the yeare 131 after the floud, when Wimrod came into the valley of Shinar, which Valley was atterward called Babylonia, Chush, and Chaldea. If then the Arke had first found land in Armenia, it is very unprobable, that the children of Noah which came into that valley could have spent so many yeares in so short a passage: seeing the Region of Mejopotamia was onely interiacent, which might by easie journeies haue been past ouer in 20.daies; and to hastenand help which passage the nauigable riuer of Tigris offered it selfe, which is euerie where transpassable by boats of great burden: fo as where the Defart on the one fide relifted their expedition, the river on to the contrarie fide ferued to advance it; the river rifing out of the fame Ledge of mountaines, or at the foot of them, where the Arke of Noah was first supposed to fettle it selfe; Then, if the Nations which followed Nimrod still doubted the surprise of a second floud (according to the opinions of the ancient Hebrewes) it soundethill to the eare of reason, that they would have spent many yeares in that low and ouerflowen Valley of Mesopotamia, so called of the many Rivers which imbroider or compasse it: for the effects witnessed their affections, and the workes, which they vndertooke, their vnbeliefe; being no fooner arrived in Shinar, but they beganne to prouide themselves of a defence (by erecting Babel) against any future or feared inundation. Now at Babelit was that Wimrod beganne his Kingdome, the 20 first knowne Cittie of the world founded after the floud, about 131. yeares, or (as others suppose) ten yeares later: though (for my selfe) I rather thinke, that they vn-dertooke that worke in two respects; first, to make themselves famous, Toget vsa Gen.to.to.

The second argument, That the Easterne people were most ancient in populositie and in all humane glorie.

30 FOr a second Argument : The civilitie, magnificence and multitude of people (wherein the East parts of the world first abounded) hath more waight then any thing which hath beene, or can be faid for Armenia, and for Noahs taking land there. And that this is true, the vse of Printing and Artillerie (among many other thinges which the East had) may casilic perswade vs, that those Sunne-rising Nations were the most ancient. The certaintie of this report, that the East Indians (time out of minde) haue had Gunnes and Ordinance of batteric, confirmed by the Portugals and others, makes vs now to vnderstand, That the place of Philostratus in vita Apollonij Tianei, l. 2.c. 14. is no fable, though exprest in fabulous wordes: when he faith, that the wife men, which dwell betweene Hyphasis and Ganges, vie not themselves to goe 40 forth into battaile . but that they drive away their enemies with thunder and lightning fent from Iupiter. By which meanes there it is faid, that Hercules Agyptius and Bacchus, joyning their forces were defeated there; and that this Hercules there cast away his golden shield. For the invention of letters was ignorantly ascribed to Cadmus, because he brought them first into Greece of which the people (then rude and fauage) had reason to give him the honour, from whom they received the benefit. But it is true, that letters are no leffe ancient then Sethor Henoch were: for they are faid to have written on pillers of stone (as before remembred) long before the floud. But from the Easterne world it was that Iohn Cuthenberg a Germane, brought the deuise of Printing: by whom Conradus being instructed, brought the practise thereof 50 to Rome: and after that Nicholaus Gerson a Frenchman, bettered both the letters and inuention. And notwithstanding that this mysterie was then supposed to bee but newiy borne, the Chinaos had letters long before either the Agyptians or Phanicians; and also the Art of Printing, when as the Greekes had neither any civill knowledge, or any letters among them.

And that this is true, both the Portugals and Spaniards have witneffed, who about an hundred yeares fince discouered those Kingdomes, and doe now enjoy their rich trades therein: for the Chinass account all other Nations but Saluages, in respect of themselues.

And to adde firength to this argument, the conquest and storie of Alex. Macedon may justly bee called to witnesse, who found more Citties and sumptuositie in that little kingdome of Porus, which lay fide by fide to the East India, then in all his other trauailes and undertakings. For in Alexanders time learning and greatneffe had not transiled to farre to the West as Rome: Alexander esteeming of Italie but as a barbarous Countrie, and of Rome as of a Village. But it was Babylon that stood in his 10 eye, and the fame of the East pierced his eares. And if we looke as farre as the Sunrifing, and heare Paulus Venetus what he reporteth of the vttermost Angle and Island thereof, we shall finde that those Nations have sent out, and not received, lent knowledge, and not borrowed it from the West. For the farther East (to this day) the more civill, the farther West the more salvage. And of the 1ste of Iapan (now Zipingari) Venetus maketh this report. Incolareligioni, literis, & sapientia sunt addictissimi, & veritatis indagatores acerrimi; nihil illis frequentius oratione, quam (more nostro) sacris in delubris exercent : vnum cognoscunt Principem, vnum Deum adorant, The Ilanders are exceedingly addicted to religion, letters, and Philosophie, and most diligent searchers out of truth: there is nothing among them more frequent then prayer, which they ve in their 20 Churches, after the manner of Christians. They acknowledge one King, and worship one God. The antiquitie, magnificence, civilitie, riches, fumptuous buildings, and pollicie in gouernement, is reported to be fuch by those who have beene employed into those parts, as it seemeth to exceede (in those formerly named, and divers other particulars) all other Kingdomes of the world.

The third argument, From the wonderfull resistance which SEMIRAMIS found in the East Indies.

B Vt for a third argument, and also of a treble strength to the rest, I lay the inuasion of Semiramis before the indifferent and adulted Reader: who may consider in what age sheeliued, and how soone after the worlds new birth sheegathered her Armie (as Diodorus Siculus out of Ctesias reporteth) of more then three Millions to inuade India, to which he adiovneth also 500000. Horse, and 100000. Waggons: whereof if we believe but a third part, it shall suffice to proue that India was the first planted and peopled Countrie after the floud. Now as touching the time wherein Thee lived: All Historians consent, that shee was the wife of Ninus; and the most approued Writers agree, that Winus was the Sonne of Belus, and Belus of Nimrod, 40 that Nimrod was the Sonne of Culb, Culb of Cham, and Cham of Noah. And at fuch time as Nimrod came into Shinar, he was then a great Nation, as by the building of the Cittie and Tower of Babel may appeare, and being then so multiplyed and increased, the two descents cast betweene Nimrod and Semiramis, brought foorth in that time those multitudes, whereof her Armie was composed. Let vs then see with whome shee encountred in that warre with this her powerfull Armie: euen with a multitude, rather exceeding, then equalling her owne, conducted by Staurobates King of India beyond Indus; of whole multitudes this is the witnesse of Died. Siculus. STAVROBATES, auitis maioribus quam que erant SEMIRAMIDIS copiis. .STAVROBATES gathering together greater troups then those of SEMIRAMIS. If then so these numbers of Indians had been encreased but by a Colonie sent out from Shinar, (and that also after Babel was built, which no doubt tooke some time in the performance) this encrease in the East, and this Armie of Staurobates must have been made of stone, or somewhat else by miracle. For as the numbers which Semiramis gathered might eafily grow vp in that time, from to great a troupe as Nimrod brought with him into Babylonia (as shall be demonstrated hereafter in the storie of Ifrael) so could not any fuch time, by any multiplication naturall, produce fo many bodies of men, as were in the Indian armie victorious over Semiramis, if the Colonies fent thither had beene so late as Babel ouerturned, and the confusion of languages. For if we allow 65 yeares time after the floud, before 2 imred was borne : of which, 30 yeares to Culls ere he begat Seba, after whom hee had Hamilah, Sahrah, Ruamah, and Sabtecha: Gen 10.7 and then 30. yeares to Raamah, ere hee begat Sheba and Dedan, both which were borne before Nimtrod: and fine yeares to his fine elder brothers, which make 65 and to then twice 30. yeares for two generations more, as for Nimod , Sheba and Dedan with others, to beget their formes; and that a third generation might growe vp. which makes in all 125, yeares, there will then remaine fixe yeares to have beene form intrauailing from the East; ere they arrived in Shinar in the yeare after the floud 121. And so the followers of Aximod might bee of sufficient multitude. But as for those which make him to have arrived at Shinaar in the yeare 101 : and the confusion to have beene at Pelegs birth, these men doe all by miracle : they beget whole Nations without the helpe of time, and build Nimrods Tower in the aver; and not on those low and marish groundes (which require found foundations) in the Plaines of Shinaar. For except that huge Tower were built in a daie, there could 20 be no confusion in that years to r. or at Pelegs birth. And therefore it is farre more probable, that Nimrod viurped regall authority in the 131, yeare after the floud. (according to Beroliu) and that the worke of Babel lasted fourtie yeares (according to Glycas )hominibusin ea perficienda totis 45. annis incassum laborantibus : Men labou- Glycan Gen. er ring in vaine 40. yeares to finish it. By which account it fals out, that it was 170. de Turis ex. yeares after the floud, ere a Colonie was fent into East India; which graunted (the one being the maine body, and the other but a Troupe taken thence) it can hardly bee belieued, that staurobates could have exceeded Semiramis in numbers : who being then Empresse of all that part of the world, gathered the most of Nations into one

The fourth Argum from divers considerations in the person of No AH.

Courthly, it is no way probable, that Noah, who knew the world before the floud. and had lived therein the long time of 600 yeares, was all that space 130, yeares after the floud without any certaine habitation: No, it will fall out, and better agree with reason, that Nimrod was but the conducter of those people, by Nosh destined 40 and appointed to fill and inhabite that middle part of the earth and the westerne world; (which trauailes Nach put ouer to yong and able bodies) and that Noch himfelfe then couered with many yeares planted himfelfe in the same place which God had affigned him : which was where he first came downe out of the Arke from the waters : For it is written, that after Weah came downe out of the Arke he planted a vineyeard, and became a husbandman: whose businesse was to dresse and manure the earth, and not to range over so many parts of the world, as from Armenia into Arabia falix, where hee should (if the tradition be found) have left certaine Colonies: thence into Africa towards Triton; then into Spaine, where they fay he fetled other companies, & built Citties after the names of Noela and Noegla his fons wives : from 50 thence into Italie, where they say hee found his sonne Cham the Saturne of Agypt, who had corrupted the people and subjects of Gomer in his absence : with whom Noah (as they make the storie) had patience for three yeares; but then finding no amendment they say hee banisht him out of Italie. These be but the fancies of Bero-Jus Annianus, a plaine imitation of the Gracian fables. For let euery reasonable man conceine, what it was to transite farre in such a forrest as the World was, when after fo great a rotting of the earth by the floud the same lay wast and our-growne for 130. or 140. yeares, and wherein there could hardly be found either path or passage through which mon-were able to except for woods, bushes and bryars that in those yeares were growne vp.

And there are so many reasons, prouing that Weak neuer came into the valley of Shinaar, as we need not suspect his passage into Italie or Spaine: For Neah, who was Father of all those Nations, a man reverenced both for his authoritie, knowledge, experience and pietie, would never have permitted his children and iffues to have wndertaken that vnbeleeuing presumptuous worke of Babel. Rather by his presence 10 and prevalent perswasions he would base bound their hands from so vaine labours. and by the authoritie which he received even from God himselfe, hee would have held them in that awfull subjection, as what socienthey had vainely conceived or feared, yet they durft not have disobayed the personall commandement of him, who in the beginning had a kinde of Regal authoritie ouer his children and people. Certainely, Noah knew right well, that the former destruction of mankinde was by themschies purchased through crueltie and disobedience; and that to distrust God, and to raife up building against his Almightie power, was as much as in them lay, a proposation of God to lay on them the same if not a more sharpe affliction. Wherefore, there is no probabilitie, that ouer he came to farre West as Babylonia; but ra- 20 ther, that he fent those numbers which came into Shinaar (being the greatest troupe. because they had the greatest part of the world to plant) under Nimrod, or those vppon whom he viginged. Nauterus and Colestinus take the testimonic of Methodius Bishop of Twe for currant, that there were three Leaders of the people after their encreule:(to,wis), Nimeral, Suphene, and Jostan: of which Nimed commaunded theiffues of Cham, latter of Sem, and Suphere of Laphet .. This opinion I cannot judge of, although I will not doubt, but that fo great a worke as the worlds plantation, could not be effected without arder and conduction.

""" Of the Sonnes of Sem: 10ttan Haidah, and Ophir, are especially noted to have dwelt in the East India. The rest of Sem: issues had also the Regions of Persia and 30 the other adiopning to India; and held also a part of Chaldac for a time: for Aira-ham inhabited Vr, till hee was thence-called by God; and whether they were of the Sonnes of Iottan, or of all the rest a certaine number (Cham and his issue only excepted) that Noah kept with him self-it cannot be knowne. Of which plantation I shall foeake at large in the Chapter following.

Now another teason which moues me to beleeue, that Wosh stayed in the East far away from alk those that came into Shime, is that Mose dont not in any word make mention of Mosh in all the storie of the telebrewes, or among any of those Nations which contended with them. And Mosh, being the Father of all mankinde, and the chosen fernant of God, was two principalls a person, to be either forgotten or negles acted, had he not (in respect of his age and wearisome experience of the world) with drawne himselfe, and rested a part with his best beloned, giving himselfe to the service and contemplation of God and heauenly thinges, after he had directed his children to their destined portions. For hee landed in a warme and service lost, where hee planted his Vineyard, and drest the earth, after which, and his thank-guing to God by sacrifice, hee is not remembred in the Scriptures, because hee was so farre away from those Nations of which Moss wrote: which were the Hebrewes chiefly, and their enemies and borderers.

CHAP.7. S.10. †.7. of the Historie of the World.

Of the senselesse opinion of Annivs the Commentor upon Beros us: that the Arkerested upon Montes Caspy in Armenia, and yet upon Gordisi, which are three hundred miles distant also in Armenia, and yet in Scytha.

T remaineth now that we examine the Arguments and authorities of Frier An-Inius, who in his Commentaries vpon Berofus and others, laboureth maruailoully 10 to proue, that the Arke of Noah rested upon the Armenian mountaines called Caspy; which mountaines separate Armenia from the vpper Media, and doe equally belong to both. And because all his Authours speake of the mountaines Gordiei, hee hath no other shift to vnite these opinions, but by vniting those farre-distant mountaines together. To effect which he hath found no other invention, then to charge those men with errour which haue carefully ouerfeene, printed, and published Ptolomies Ptol.tab.Asia.3. Geographic, in which they are altogether diffeuered: for that last edition of Mercators, sets these hils flue degrees (which makes three hundred English miles) afunder. And certainly, if we looke into those more ancient copies of Villanouanus and others, we shall finde nothing in them to helpe Annius withall: for in those the mountaines 20 Capi stand seuen degrees to the East of the Gordini, which make 420. miles. And for those Authours by whose authoritie Annius strengtheneth himselfe, Diodorus whom he so much followeth, giueth this judgement vpon them in the like dispute. Aberrarunt vero emnes, non negligentia, sedregnorum situs ignorantia, They have allerred Diod.Le.3. (faith he) not through negligence, but through ignorance of the situation of Kingdomes, But for an induction, to proue that the Arke of Noah flood on the mountaines of Armenia, he beginneth with the antiquitie of the Scythians: and to proue the same hee citeth Marcus Portius Cato, who answeth that 2 50. yeares before Ninus, the earth cato de original was ouerflowne with waters, & in Scythia Sagarenatum mortale genus, and that in Scy- Pars prima. thia Saga the stocke of mortall men was renewed. The same Authour also teacheth that 30 the Vmbri before remembred (who were so called, because faued from Deucalions floud) were the Sonnes of the Galli, a Nation of the Scythians. Ex hijs venisse I ANV M cum DYRIM & Gallis progenitoribus Vmbrorum, From these Scythians, he faith, that IANVS came with DYRIM and with the Galli the progenitours of the Vmbri; And againe, Equidem principatus originis semper Scythis tribuitur, Certainely, the Prime antiquitie of off-spring is alway given to the Scythians. And herein truly I agree with Annius, that those Regions called Scythia, and now Tartaria, and by some Writers Sarmatia Asiatica, were among the first peopled: and they held the greatest part of Asia vnder tribute till Ninus time. Also Plinie calleth the Vmbri which long fince inhabited Plin.13.e.14. Italie, Gens antiquisima, a most ancient Nation, who descended of these Scythians. Now 40 that which Annius laboureth, is to proue that these ancient Scythians (meaning the Nephewes of 2(oah) did first inhabite that Region of the mountaines, on which the Arkerested; and confessing that this great ship was grounded in Armenia, he faineth a nation of Scythians called Araxea, taking name of the mountaine Ararat, neare the River of Araxes. And because his Authour Cato helpeth him in part (to wit, That in Scythia mankinde was restored after the great floud, 250. yeares before Nimus) and in part vtterly destroyeth his conceit of Armenia, by adding the word $1921, as in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, in Scythia Saga mankinde was restored, hee therefore in the Proame of his Commentarie vpon Berofus, leaueth out the addition Berofus, of Saga altogether in the repetition of Cato his wordes, and writes homines in Scythia 50 Saluatos. For Scythia Saga or Sace, is vindoubtedly vinder the mountaines of Paropa- Pro. Afa. tab. 7.

cted the Tower of Babel in Shinaar or Babylonia.
But now the best authoritie which Annius hath is out of Diodorus: where he hath nifus, on which, or neare which it is most probable that the Arke first tooke ground; and from those East parts (according to Moses) came all those companies which ere-read,

read, that the Seythians were originally Armenians, taking name à Seytha Rege eorum, from Scythatheir King. But (in a word) we may see his vanitie, or rather (indeede) his fallhood in citing this place. For Diodorus a most approved and diligent Authour beginneth in that place with these wordes. Fabulantur Scytha, The Scythians fable; and his Interpreter in the table of that worke giveth this title to that very Chapter. Soytharum origo & Successions, fabula, The original and Successe of the Soythians, a fable. And (indeede) there needes no great disproofe hereof, since Ptolomie doth directly delineate Scythia Saga, or Saca, and sets them in 130. degrees of longitude: and the Persians (faith Herodotus ) call all the Scythians, Saca, which Plinie confirmeth: for in respect that these Save (faith Plinie) are the next Scythians to the Persians, there- 10 fore they give all the rest that name. Now that any Nation in Armenia can neighbour the Persians, there is no man beleeueth. But this supposed Scythia Araxea in Armenial yeth in 78. degrees of longitude (that is) 42. degrees distant from the Saca; and the Countrie about Araxes Ptolomie calleth Colthene and Soducene and Sasapene, without any mention of Scythia at all: and yet all those which are or were reputed Scythians, either within Imaus or without, to the number of 100. feuerall Na-Tab. Alia 7. 6 8 tions are by Ptolomie precisely set downe.

But to come to those later Authours, whereof some haue written, others haue feene a great part of those North-east Regions, and searched their antiquities with great diligence: First, Marius Niger boundeth Scythia within Imaus, in this manner: 20 (for Seythia without these mountaines is also beyond our purpose.) Seythia intra Imaum montem ea est, qua proprio vocabulo Gassaria hoc tempore dicitur : ab Occasu Sarmatia Asiatica: ab Oriente Imao monte: à Septentrione terra incognita: à Meridia Saccis, Sogdianis, Margianis, v (q, ostia Oxa amnis in Hyrcanum mare exeuntis; & part ipfius maris hinc v(q, ad Rha fluminis oftia terminatur, Scythia within the mountaine Imaus is that part of the world, which in their owne speech is at this time called Gassaria; and the same is bounded on the West side by Sarmatia Asiatica, (or of Asia) on the East by the Imaan mountaines: on the North by unknowne lands: on the South by the Sacca (which are the Saca) the Sogdiani, and the Margiani, to the mouth of Oxus, falling into the Hyrcan Sea, and by a Rha now Welga. Part of the same Sea as farre as the mouth of Rha.

Now if Niger sets all Sarmatia Asiatica, to the West of Scythia, then Sarmatia (que magna fanè regio est , & qua innumeras nationes complectitur , Which is a great Region, comprehending innumerable Nations, (faith Niger, much of it being betweene Scythia and Armenia, doth sufficiently warrant vs. that Armenia can be no part of Scrthia; and to make it more plaine, he diffeuereth Sarmatia it selfe from any part of Armenia, by the Regions of Colchis, Iberia, Albania, which hee leaueth on the right hand of Sarmatia, and yet makes Sarmatia but the West bound of Scythia.

And for Paulus Venetus, he hath not a word of Armenia among the Tartarian, or Scythian Nations; neither doth his fellow Frier John Plancarpio (cited by Vincentius in his description of Scythia) make any mention of Armenia; neither doth Haytonus 40 an Armenian borne, of the bloud of those Kings, (though afterward a Monke) euer acknowledge himselfe for a Tartarian, or of the Seythian races descended : though he write that storie at large, gathered by Nicholaus Salcuni, and (by the commandement of Pope Clement the fifth) in the yeare 1307. published.

Neither doth Mathias a Michou (a Canon of Cracouia in Polonia) a Sarmatian borne, and that trauailed agreat part of Sarmatia Asiatica, finde Armenia any way within the compasse of Tartaria, Scythia, or Sarmatia; and yet no man (whose trauailes are extant) hathobserued so much of those Regions as he hath done: prouing and disprouing many thinges, heretofore subject to dispute. And among others hee burieth that ancient and received opinion. That out of the mountaines Riphai, and 50 Hyperborei in Scythia, spring the Rivers of Tanais or Don, Volga or Edel; proving by vnanswerable experience, that there are no such mountaines in rerum natura; and (indeede) the heads and fountaines of those famous Rivers, are now by the trade of Muscouia knowne to enery Merchant, and that they arise out of Lakes low, wooddie, and marish grounds. The River of Tanois or Don, ariseth to the South of the Cittie Tulla, some twentie English miles, out of a Lake called Imanonesero in the great wood Okenitzkilies or Iepiphanolies. Volga, which Ptolomie cals Rhz, and the Tartars call E- 1 del, rifeth out of a Lake called Fronow, in the great wood Vodkonzki: from which Lake the two other famous Rivers flow of Borysthenes (now Nyeper) and Defina or Sig. Herberstein, Dividna. And this learned Polonian doth in this fort bound the European Sarmatia. In Sarmatia Europiana, &c. are the Regions of Russians, Lithuanians, Muscouians, and those adioyning, bounded on the West by the River of Visia (the name perchance Grazens calleth misprinted Vissa for Vistula, a River which parts Germanie and Sarmatia) and for the this River Wi-10 East border he nameth Tanais or Don. Sarmatia Asiatica he cutteth from Europe by haut, Niger Drathe same River of Tanais and the Caspian Sea, to with-hold it from stretching farther Fom. Mela, Vi-East: this Asian Sarmatia being part of that Seythia which Ptolomie calleth Seythia Jula, & Plin. intra Imaum montem, Scythia within the mountaine Imaus. And the fame Mathias Michon farther affirmeth, that the Seythians (which Frier Annius would make Armenians) came not into Sarmatia Asiatica it selfe about three hundred and a few odde yeares before his owne time : thefe be his wordes. Conflat e.m effe gentem nouam, 6 aduentitiam à partibus Orientis, (mutatis sedibus) paulo plus abhine trecentis annis Asia Sarmatiam ingressam, It is manifest (faith he, speaking of the Scythian Nation) that this is a late planted Nation, come from the coasts of the East: from whence they entreainto 1-20 sia, and gat new seates a little more then three hundred yeares since : For (indeede) before that time the Gothes or Pouloci inhabited Sarmatia Asiatica. And this Mathias lived in the yeare 1511 and this his discourse of Sarmatia was printed at Augusta in the year 1506. as Bucholzerus in his Chronologie witnesseth. Now these Soythians (faith he) came from the East, for in the East it was that the Arke of Noah rested; and the Seythe Sace were those people which lived at the North foote of those mountaines of Taurus or Ararat, where they encounter or beginne to mixe themselves with the great Imaus. And were there no other testimonie then the generall description of the earth now extant, and the witnesse of Ptolomie, it is plaine, that betweene all parts of Armenia and Scythia, there are not only those three Regions of Colchis, Ibe-

30 ria, and Albania, but the Caspian Sea on the East shore of which Sea, but not on the West, or on that part which any way toucheth Armenia, there are (indeede) a Nation of Scythians (called Ariaca) betweene Iaxartus and Iactus; but what are these Sey-thians to any Ariaca, or Scythia Araxea which Annius placeth in Armenia, more then the Scythians of Europe?

The fift argument, The Vine must grow naturally neare the place where the Arke rested.

TO this if we adde the confideration of this part of the Text, That No A H plan- Geng. 20, ted a Vineyard, we shall finde that the fruit of the Vine or Raysin did not grow naturally in that part of Armenia, where this resting of the Arke was supposed: for if the Vine was a stranger in Italie and France, and brought from other Countries thither, it is not probable that it grew naturally in Armenia, being a farre colder Countrie. For Tyrrhenus first brought Vines into France, and Saturnus into Latium : yea Seraius Eneid, at fuch time as Brennus and the Gaules inuaded Italie, there were few or no Vines in Europius. France. For (faith Plutarch in the life of Camillus) the Gaules remained between the Pyrenei and the Alpes, neare vnto the Senones, where they continued a long time, vn-50 till they drunke Wine, which was first brought them out of Italie; and after they talted thereof they halted to inhabite that Countrie, which brought forth such pleasant fruit: so as it appeared, that the Plant of the Vine was not naturall in France, but from Italie brought thither; as by Saturne from elsewhere into

Now it is manifest that Noah transiled not farre to seeke out the Vine. For the plantation thereof is remembred, before there was any counfaile how to dispose of the world among his children; and the first thing he did was to till the ground, and to plant a Vineyard, after his facrifice and thanks-giving to God; and wherefocuer the Arke rested, there did the Vine grow naturally. From whence it doth no where appeare that he trauailed farre: for the Scriptures teach vs, that he was a Hulbandman, and not a Wanderer.

Answere to an objection out of the wordes of the Text. The Lord scattered them from thence upon the face of the whole earth.

No that all the children of Work came together into Shinar, it doth not ap-A peare, fauing that it may be inferred out of these wordes (from thence) because it is written : So the Lord Coattered them from thence voon all the earth; which hath no other sense, but that the Lord scattered them (to wit) those that built this Tower: for those were from thence dispersed into all the regions of the North and South, and to the Westward. And by these wordes of Sybilla (as they are converted) it seemeth that all came not together into Shinaar, for they have this limitation. 20 Quidam corum turrem adificarunt altissimam, quasi per cam cœlum effent ascensuri, Certaine of them built a most high Tower, as if they meant thereby to have scaled the heavens.

An answere to the objection from the name of Ararat, taken for Armenia: and the heighth of the hilles there.

B Vt before I conclude this part, it is necessarie to see and consider, what part of Scripture, and what reason may be found out to make it true or probable, that 30 the Arke of Nozh was forfaken by the waters on the mountaines of Armenia. For the Text hath only these wordes. The Arke rested on (or vpon) the mountaines of Ararat or A menia, faith the marginall note of Geneua, the Chaldaan Paraphrast cals it Kardu; of which the highest bath the name of Lubar, saith Epiphanius. Now this Ararat (which the Septuagint doe not convert at all, but keepe the same word) is taken to be a mountaine of Armenia, because Armenia it selfe had anciently that name: fo as first out of the name, and secondly out of the heighth (which they suppose exceeded all other) is the opinion taken, That the Arke first sate thereon.

> But these suppositions have no foundation: for neither is Ararat of Armenia allone, neither is any part, or any of those mountaines of equal stature to many other 40 mountaines of the world; yet indeede it doth not follow, that the Arke found the highest mountaine of all other to rest on : for the Plaines were also vincouered, before Noah came out of the Arke. Now if there were any agreement among Writers of this Ararat, and that they did not differ altogether therein, wee might give more credit to the conceit. For in the bookes of the Sybils it is written, that the mountaines of Ararat are in Phrygia, vpon which it was supposed that the Arke stayed after the floud. And the better to particularize the place and seate of these mountaines, and to proue them in Phrygia, and not Armenia, they are placed where the Cittie of Calenes was afterward built. Likewise in the same description thee maketh mention of Marsyas, a River which runneth through part of Phrygia, 50 and afterward ioyneth it selfe with the River Mander, which is farre from the Gordiaan mountaines in Armenia. Wee may also finde a great mistaking in Iosephus, (though out of Berofus, who is in effect the Father of this opinion) that Iosephus sets Ararat betweene Armenia and Parthia toward Idiabene, and affirmeth affirmeth withall, that in the Province of Caron by others Kairos and Arnos, fo called byreason that the waters have from thence no descent, nor iffue out, the people vaunt that they had in those dayes reserved some peeces of Woahs Arke. But Parthia toucheth no where vpon Armenia, for Armenia bordereth Adiabene, a Pro-

uince of Affyria: fo that all Media and a part of Affyria is betweene Farthia and Armenia. Now whereas the discouerie of the mountaines Cordiei was first borrowed out of Berofus by Iolephus; yet the Text which Iolephus citeth out of Berofus, differs farre from the wordes of that Berofus, which wandereth vp and downe in these dayes, set out by Amius. For Berofus cited by Tosephus hath these wordes.

10 Fertur & nauigy huius pars in Armenia, apud montem Cordinorum superesse, & quos dam bitumen inde abrasum secum reportare, quo vice amuleti loci mius homines vii solent, (which is) It is reported also that a part of this ship is yet remaining in Armenia opon the Cordiain mountaines; and that divers doe scrape from it the bitumen or pitch, and carrying it with them, they we it in steade of an amulet. But Amin his Edition of the fragment of Berofus vieth these wordes. Nam elevata ab aguis in Obrdiai montis vertice quienit , chins adhuc dicitur aliqua pars effe , & homines ex illa bitamen tollere quo maxime vtuntur ad expiationem, For the whole Arke being lifted up by the waters; rested on the top of the Gordican mountaines, of which it is reported that fome parts remaine, and that men doc carry thence of the bitumen to purge by facrifice therewith : foasin theferwo Texts

ter it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it.

Furthermore, these mountaines which Ptolomie cals Gordisi, are not those moun-20 taines which himselfe giueth to Armenia, but he calleth the mountaines of Armenia Moschici. These be his owne words: Montes Armenia nominantur ij, qui Moschici ap- Pio Afia tab. pellantur, qui protenduntur v (g, ad superiacentem partem Ponti Cappadocum; & mons qui Paryardes dicitur, The mountaines of Armenia are they which are called Moschici, which stretch along to the higher part of Pontus of the Cappadocians : also the hill which is called Paryardes; which mountaines Plinie calleth Pariedri, and both which lye to the Plinie calleth North of Gordiai or Baris, in 43, and 44, and a halfe; and the Gordiaan mountaines in 29. and a halfe : from the Northermost of which did the Georgians take their names, who were first Gordians and then Georgians, who amidst all the strength of the greatest Infidels of Persia and Turkie, doe still remaine Christians. Concerning 40 the other suppositions, that the mountaines of Gordiai, otherwise Baris Kardu or Lubar, (which Ptolomie calleth Togordiaion) are the highest of the world, the same is abfolutely false.

Of the contrarie situation of Armenia to the place noted in the Text: and that it is no maruaile that the same ledge of hils running from Armenia to India should keepe the same name all along : and euen in India be called Ararat.

Aftly, we must blow up this mountaine Ararat it selfe, or else wee must digge it L downe, and carrie it out of Armenia; or finde it elsewhere, and in a warmer coun-10 trie, and (withall) set it East from Shinaar: or else wee shall wound the truth it selfe with the weapons of our owne vaine imaginations.

Therefore to make the mistaking open to every eye, wee must understand, that Ararat (named by Moses) is not any one hill, so called, no more then any one hill among those mountaines which divide Italie from France is called the Alpes : or any one among those which part France from Spaine is the Pyrenian; but as these being continuations of many hils keepe one name in divers Countries : so all that long ledge of mountaines, which Plinie calleth by one name Taurus, and Ptolomie both Plinie in his Taurus, Niphates, Coatras, Coronus, Sariphi, untill they encounter and croffe the description of mountaines of the great Imaus, are of one generall name, and are called the moun-Lycialis, car.

20 taines of Ararat or Armenia, because from thence or thereabout they seeme to arise. So all these mountaines of Hyrcania, Armenia, Coraxis, Caspy, Moschici, Amazonici, Heniochi, Scythici, (thus diverfly called by Plinie and others) Ptolomie cals by one name Caucasus, lying between the Scas Caspium and Euxinus: as all those mountaines which cut a funder America, euen from the new Kingdome of Granado, to the streight of Magellan, are by one name called Andes. And as these mountaines of Ararat runne East and West: so doe those maruailous mountaines of Imaus stretch themselves North and South; and being of like extent well neare are called by the name of Imaus, euen as Plinie calleth these former hils Taurus, and Moses the hils of Ararat. The reason of seuerall names given by Ptolomie was thereby the better to distinguish the 30 great Regions and Kingdomes, which these great mountaines bound and diffeuer ; as Armenia, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Susiana, Persia, Parthia, Caramania, Aria, Margiana, Bactria, Sogdiana, and Paraponifus: having all these Kingdomes either on the North or South lide of them. For all the mountaines of Asia (both the leffe and the greater) have three generall names, (to wit) Taurus, Imaus, and Caucasus: and they receive other titles, as they sever and divide particular places and regions. For these mountaines which sunder Cilicia from the rest of Asia the lesse on the North fide, are called Taurus; and those mountaines which part it from Comagena (a Prouince of Syria) are called Amanus: the mountaines called Taurus running East and West, as Imaus doth North and South. Through Taurus the River of Euphrates forand on her East side the mountaines are sometimes knowne by the name of Taurus, (as in Ptolomies three tables of Asia) and sometimes Niphates: (as in the fourth) retaining that vnccrtaine appellation fo long as they bound Armenia from Mesopota-

40 ceth her passage, leaving the name of Amanus to the mountaines on her West banke; mia: and after the River of Tygris cutteth them afunder, they then take the name of Niphates altogether, vntill they separate Assyria and Media; but then they call themselues Coatras, though betweene the vpper and nether Media, they doe not appeare, but altogether discontinue. For at Mazada in Media they are not found, but runne through the Easterne Media by peeces: in the middle of which Region they call themselues Orontes, and towards the East part Coronus; out of the Southerne 50 part whereof the River of Bagradus rifeth, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania: and then continuing their course Eastward by the name of Coronus, they giue to the Parthians and Hyrcanians their proper Countries. This done, they change themselves into the mountaines of Sariphi, out of which riseth the River Margus, afterward yeelding her felfe to Oxus: (now Abia) and drawing now neare their waies

Of diners incongruities, if in this storie we should take Ararat for Armenia.

CO as it doth first appeare, that there is no certainetie what mountaine Ararat was : for the bookes of the Sybils set it in Phrygia : and Berosus in Armenia : and as for Berofus authoritie, those men haue great want of proofes that borrow from thence.

Secondly, that Baris was the highest hill, and therefore most likely that the Arke grounded thereon, the affertion and supposition have equall credit: for there are many hils which exceede all those of Armenia; and if they did not, yet it doth not 40 follow (as is before written) that the Arke should fit on the highest.

Thirdly, it cannot be proued that there is any fuch Hill in Armenia, or in rerum natura, as Baris: for Baris (faith Hierome) fignifieth high Towers: and fo may all high hils be called indifferently; and therefore wee may better give the name of Baristo the hils of Caucasus (out of which Indus riseth) then to any hils of Armenia. For those of Caucasus in the East, are undoubtedly the highest of Asia.

Fourthly, the Authours themselves doe not agree in what Region the mountaines Gordiei stand: for Ptolomie distinguisheth the mountaines of Armenia from the Gordiean, and calleth those of Armenia Moschiei and Paryardes, as aforesaid. Now Paryardes is seated neare the middle of Armenia, out of which on the West sideri- 50 feth Euphrates, and out of the East side Araxis: and the mountaines Moschici are those hils which distoyne Colchis, Iberia, and Albania (now the Countrie of the Georgians) from Armenia.

And here doe these mountaines build themselues exceeding high, to equal the strong hils called Indus of Seythia, which encounter each other in 35, 36, and 37. degrees of latitude, and in 140. of longitude: of the which the West parts are now called Delanguer, and the rest Nagracot; and these mountaines in this place onely are properly called Caucasi (saith Ptolomic) that is, betweene Paroponisus and Indus: and improperly, betweene the two Seas of Caspium and Pontus.

A Nd therefore to conclude this opinion of Ararat, it is true, that those mountaines doe also trauerse Armenia; yea, and Armenia; stelle sometime is knowne by the name of Ararat. But as Plinie glueth to this ledge of high hilles, cuen from Cilicas to Paroponis and Caucasus, the name of Taurus: and as the hils of France and Germanie are called the Alpes: and all betweene France and Spaine the Pyrenes: and in America the continuation of hils for 3000. miles together, the Andes: so was Ararat the generall name which Moses gaue them; the diuersitie of appellations no otherwise growing, then by their diuiding and bordering diuers R egions and diuers Countries. For in the like case doe we call the Sea, which entreth by Gibraltar, the 50 Mediterran and inland Sea; and yet where it washeth the coasts of Carthage, and ouer against it, it is called Tyrrhenum: betweene Italie and Greece, Ionium: from Venice to Durazzo Abriatium: betweene Athens and Asia Asigum: betweene Sessius and Anydus Hellesson: and after ward Pontus, Propontis, and Bosshorus. And as in these, so is the Ocean to the North-east part of Scotland called Deucaledonycum: and on this side, the Brittan Sea: to the East, the Germane and Baltick; and then the Frozen.

For a finall end of this question we must appeale to that Iudge which cannot erre, euen to the word of truth, which in this place is to be taken and followed according to the plaine sense; seeing it can admit neither distinction, nor other construction then the wordes beare literally, because they are vied to the very same plaine purpose of a description, and the making of a true and precise difference of places. Surely where the sense is plaine, (and being so vinderstood, it bringeth with it no subse

10 quent inconuenience or contrarietie) we ought to be warie, how we fancie to our felues any new or strange exposition; and (withall) to resolue our selues; that euerie word (as aforesaid) hath his waight in Gods Booke. And therefore ween must respect and reuerence the testimonies of the Scriptures throughout, in such fort as St. Augustine hath taught vs touching the Gospell of Christ selus (which is) Nequis aliter accipiat, quod narrantibus discipalis Christi) in Enangelio legerit, quam si phomomomo Dei, quam in proprio corpore gestabat, conspectivit. That no man otherwise takeer vindersland that which hee readeth in the Gospell, (the Disciples of Christ hausing written it) then if he had seen the worse band of the Lord, which hee bare in his owne bodie, setting it downe.

The wordes then of Moses which end this dispute are these. And as they went Great. V. 2. from the East they found a Plaine in the land of Shintar, and there they abode, which prove the without controuers it, that Nimord and all with him came from the East time Shintar; and therefore the Ask of Noah rested and tooke land to the Eastward thereof. For wee must remember, that in all places where so court. Moses maketh a difference of Countries, hee alwayes precisely nameth toward what quarters of the world the same were seated; as where he teacheth the plantation of Locatan, he nameth Sephar; a mount in the East; where he eremembreth Caims departure from the presence of God, he addeth. And Cain dwell in the land of Noal towards the East. Gento, 30; side of Eden: And when he described the Tents and Habitations of Mostabams as Gento, 16.

Southows of the Sal to Mon. And the Magis (or wissens) came out of the East to offer pre-Mat. 1.41. Southows of the Compasse and these trausalles were precisely set downe you the points of the Compasse and quarters of the World, it is most manifest:

for Eden was due East from Indea, Saba South from Hierufalem: the way from 40 Bethelto & gypt directly South, and the Coleftrians, the Tubalines and Acquagians inhabited the Regions directly North from Palestina; and foof the Irest. But Armenia, and to arrive in that valley of Babylonia, is not a journying from the East, nor so neare vnto the East as the North: for Armenia is to the West of the North is selfe; and we must not say of Moses (whose handes the holy Ghost directed) that hee erred to so calo, and that he knew not East from West. For the body of Armenia standeth in fortie three degrees Septentrionall, and the North part thereof in fortie sine; and those Gordizem mountaines, whereon it was supposed that the Arke rested, stand in in sortie one. But Babylonia, and the valley of Shinzar are situated in thirtie sine, 50 and for the Longitude (which maketh the difference betweene East and West) the Gordson mountaines shand in 75 degrees, and the valley of Shinaar in 79 and 80. And therefore Armenia lieth from Shinaar Northwest, ninetic sine degrees from the East; and if Armenia had beene but North, yet it had differed from the East one whole quarter of the compasse. But Gregoric and Hierome warne vs, In scripturis he

minima differentia omitti debet : nam finguli fermones , (yllaba , apices, et puncta in diuina scriptura plena sunt sensibus, In the scriptures the least difference may not bee omitted: for every speech, syllable, note, or accent, and point in divine scriptures are replenished with their meanings. And therefore feeing Moles teacheth vs that the children of Noah came from the East, we may not believe Writers (of little authoritie) who also speake by hearefay and by report, vt fertur, & vt dicitur, as Berofus and Nicolaus Damafcenus, determining herein without any examination of the Text, at all aduenture. But this is infallibly true, that Shinaar lyeth West from the place where the Arkeof Noah rested after the floud; and therefore it first found ground in the East, from whence came the first knowledge of all thinges. The East parts were first civill, to which had Noah himselfe for an instructor : and directly East from Shinaar in the fame degree of 35, are the greatest grapes and the best Wine. The great Armies alfo, which ouertopped in number those Millions of Semiramis, proue that those parts were first planted: And whereas the other opinion hath neither Scripture nor reafon fufficient: for my felfe I build on his wordes who in plaine termes hath told vs. that the Sonnes of Noah came out of the East into Shinsar, and there they abode. And therefore did the Arkerest on those Easterne mountaines, called by one generall name Taurus, and by Moses the mountaines of Ararat, and not on those mountaines of the North-west, as Berosus first fained, whom most part of the Writers haue followed therein. It was, I fay, in the plentifull warme East where Noah rested, 20 where he planted the Vine, where hee tilled the ground and liued thereon. Placuit vero No Acho agricultura sludium, in qua tractanda ipse omnium peritissimus esse dicitur : ob camq, rem suaipsius lingua I s H-A D A M A T H (hoc est ) telluris vir appellatur celebratufg, est, The studie of Husbandrie pleased NOAH (saith the excellent learned man ARIAS MONTANUS) in the knowledge and order of which it is faid, that NOAH excelled all men: and therefore was he called in his owne language a man exercised in the earth. Which also sheweth that hee was no wanderer: and that hee troubled not himselfe with the contentions, beginning againe in the world, and among men, but stayed in his destined places, and in that part of the world, where hee was first delinered out of the prison of the Arke, hee was first deliuered out of the prison of the 2

whereinto God had committed him to

CHAP. VIII.

Of the first planting of Nations after the floud; and of the Sonnes of NOAH, SEM, HAM, and IA-PHET, by whom the earth was repeopled.

Whether SHEM and HAM were elder then IAPHET.

F these Sonnes of Noah, which was the eldest, there is a question made. St. Augustine esteemed Shem for August de civit. the eldest, Ham for the second, and laphet for the yon- Deilis.c.3. gest: and herein the opinions of Writers are divers. But this we finde euery where in the Scriptures, and especially in Moses, that there was neuerany respect giuen to the eldest in yeares, but in vertue, as by the examples of Henoch , Abraham , Iacob , and David , is made manifest. In a few wordes, this is the ground of the controuersie? The Latine translation, and so the

10.2.21. in these wordes. Vnto SHEM also the Father of all the Sonnes of HEBER. and elder brother of IAPHET, were children borne. But Iunius agreeing with the Septuagint, placeth the same wordes in this manner. To SHEM also the Father of all the 30 Sonnes of HEBER, and brother of IAPHET, the eldest sonne were children borne: So the transposition of the word (elder) made this difference. For if the word (elder) had followed after laphet, as it is in the vulgar translation placed before it, then had it beene as plaine for Taphet, as it is by these translations for Shem. Now (the matter being otherwise indifferent) seeing Gods bleffings are not tyed to first and last in bloud, but to the eldest in pietie, yet the arguments are stronger for Japhet then for Shem. And where the Scriptures are plainely understood without any danger or inconuenience, it seemeth strange why any man of judgement should make valuation of coniecturall arguments, or mens opinions. For it appeareth that Noah in the fiue hundreth yeare of his life, begat the first of his three Sonnes, Shem, Ham, and Iaphet: 40 and in the fixe hundreth yeare (to wit) the hundreth yeare following, came the generall floud; two yeares after which Shem begat Arphaxad, which was in the yeare Gont 1.10 602. of Woahs life, and in the yeare of Shems life one hundred : so as Shem was but 100. yeares old, two yeares after the floud: and Noah begat his first borne being 500. yeares old; and therefore, were shem the elder, he had then beene a hundred yeares old at the floud, and in the fixe hundreth yeare of Noahs life, and not two yeares after. Which seeing the Scripture before remembred hath denyed him, and that it is also written. Then NOAH anoke from his wine, and knew what his younger sonne had Gonillo. 24; done unto him (to wit) HAM; of necessitie the first place doth belong to laphet. This younger sonne so converted by the vulgar and Geneua, Junius turnes it filius minimus, 50 his youngest some; but St. Chrysostome takes it otherwise, and findes Cham to be the middle or second brother, and taphet the youngest sonne of all: which Cham for his disobedience and the contempt of his Father, (whose nakednesse hee derided) was difinherited, and lost the preheminencie of his birth, as Esau and Reuben did. Pere- In Gen, rus conceineth that Ham was called the younger in respect of Shem the eldest, but anoweth withall, that the Hebrew hath not that precise difference of younger and roungelt, because it wanteth the comparative degree. It is true that Shem himselfe was alwaies named in the first place, yet whereas in the first Verse of the tenth chapter of Genefis, Shem is accounted before Imphet : in the second Verse Moses leaveth to beginne with the iffue by Shem, and reciteth the children of Iaphet first. So the first place was given to Shem for his election and benediction, and for this waightie respect, that the Hebrew Nation, Abraham, the Prophets, David, and Christ our Saniour were descended of him. And therefore, whether wee shall follow the Vulgar Pagninus, and the Geneua, who agree in this conversion, SHEM frater I APHET major: or with the Septuagint, Junius, and Tremelius, SHEM fratri I APHET majoris; 10 or with Pererius, SHEM frater I APHET ille magnus: inferring that Shem was the great and famous brother of Laphet, let the Reader judge. But for ought that I have feene to the contrarie, it appeareth to me that Iaphet was the eldest. For where Perevius qualifieth the strength of the former argument, That Shems age at the time of the floud did not agree with his eldership ( with a supposition that the Scriptures tooke no account of smaller numbers) I doe not finde in the Scriptures any such neglect at all: for it is written, that SHEM was an hundred yeares old, and begat AR-PHAXAD two yeares after the floud; and againe in the 12. Verse. So SHELA lived after he begat EBAR, foure hundred and three yeares, &c. so as the number of two yeares, of three yeares, of fine yeares, and afterward of two yeares were alwaies 20 precifely accounted.

Of divers things that in all reason are to be presumed, touching the first planting of the world, as that all Histories must yeeld to Moses: that the world was not planted all at once, nor without great direction: and that the knowne great Lordes of the first ages were of the issue

Vt let vs goe vnto the worlds plantation after the floud, which being rightly understood, we shall finde that many Nations have supposed or fained themseliues those Ancestors and Fathers, which neuer saw or approached the bounds of their countries, and of whom they are by no way or branch descended. For it is plaine in the Scriptures howe

the Sonnes and iffues of Noah were distributed, and what Regions were first planted by them, from whence by degrees the rest of the world was also peopled. And if any prophane Authour may receiue allowance herein, the fame must be with this caution, That they take their beginning where the Scriptures end. For so farre as the storie of Nations is therein handled, wee must know that both the truth and an- 40 tiquitie of the bookes of God finde no companions equall, either in age or authoritie. All record, memorie, and testimonie of antiquitie what soeuer, which hath come to the knowledge of men, the same hath beene borrowed thence, and therefore later then it, as all carefull observers of time have noted; among which thus writeth Eusebius in the Proceme of his Chronologie. Moses is found more ancient then all those whom the Gracians make most ancient, as Homer, Hestod, and the Troian warre; and farre before Hercyles, Mysaevs, Linys, Chiron, Orpheys, Castor, Pollyx, ESCYLAPIVS, BACCHVS, MERCURIUS, and APOLLO, and the rest of the Gods of the Notions, their ceremonies, or holy rites, or Prophets: and before all the deedes of IVPITER, whom the Greekes have feated in the toppe and highest Turret of their Divinitie.

For of the three Iupiters remembred by Cicero, the ancientest was the sonne of Æther, whose three sonnes begotten on Proserpina, were borne at Athens, of which Cecrops was the first King; and in the end of Cecrops time did Moses bring the children of Ifrael out of Agypt. Eduxit Moses populum Deiex Agypto nouissimo tempore CECROPIS Athenicafis Regis, Moses brought the children of Ifrael out of Agypt, in the last dayes of CECROPS King of the Athenians (faith St. Augustine) and yet De Civit. Dei. was not Cecrops the Founder of the Cittie it felfe, but Thefeus long after him. But 418.6.11. because the truth hereof is diverly proved, and by many learned Authours, I will not cut a funder the purpose in hand by alleadging many authorities in a needlesse question, but leaue it to the proper place.

C Askena. The Sonnes of Gomer were, Riphath LTogorma. Iauan. The Sonnes of Japhet were. Tubal. Tarshis. The Sonnes of Jauan were, Kittim, and Dodanim.

First, we are to consider that the world after the floud was not planted by imagination, neither had the children of Noah wings, to flie from Shinaar to the vttermost border of Europe, Africa, and Asia in haste, but that these children were directed by a 20 wise Father, who knew those parts of the world before the floud, to which he dispofed his children after it, and fent them not as discouerers, or at all-aduenture, but affigned and allotted to every Sonne and their iffues, their proper parts. And not to hearken to fabulous Authours, who have no other end then to flatter Princes (as Vingil did Augustus in the fiction of Aneas) or else to glorifie their owne Nations; Let vs build herein vpon the Scriptures themselues, and after them vpon reason and nature. First, therefore wee must call to minde and consider, what manner of face the earth enery where had in the 130. yeare after the great inundation, and by comparing those fruitfullest valleys with our owne barren and cold ground, informe our felues thereby, what wonderfull defarts, what inpaffable fastnesse of woods, reedes, 20 bryars, and rotten graffe, what Lakes and standing Pooles, and what marishes, Fens and bogges, all the face of the earth (excepting the mountaines) was peftered withall. For if in this our climate (where the dead and destroying winter depressed all vegetatiue and growing nature, for one halfe of the yeare in effect) yet in twentie or thirtie yeares these our grounds would all ouergrow and be couered (according to the nature thereof) either with woods or with other offensive thickets and bushments: much more did all forts of plants, reedes, and trees, prosper in the most fruitfull Vallies, and in the climate of a long and warme Sommer, and having withall the start of 130. yeares, to raise themselves without controlement.

This being considered it will appeare, that all these people which came into Shi-40 naar, and ouer whome Nimrod (either by order or strength tooke the dominion, did after the confusion of languages, and at such time as they grew to bee a mightie people disperse themselves into the Regions adioyning to the said vally of Shinaar, which contained the best part of Mesopotamia, Babylonia and Chaldea; and from the borders thereof in time they were propagated: fome of them towards the South, others towardes the West and North. And although there were allotted to Shem many Regions, both East and West from Shinast, with the Dominion of Palestina, which the Canaanites first possest; yet could hee not enjoy the lot of his inheritance on the fuddaine, but by time and degrees. For we find, that Abraham the true fucceffor of Shem dwelt in Chalden at Vr; and from thence (called by God) he rested 50 at Charran in Mesopotamia: from whence after the death of Thare he trauailed to Sichem in Palestina; and yet there had passed betweene Shem and Abraham (reckoning neither of themselves) seven descents, before Abraham moved out of Chaldea: where, and in Babylonia, all those people by Nimrod commanded inhabited for many yeares, and whence Nimrod went out into Assyria, and founded Nininie. Indeed the great Masters of Nations (as farre as wee can know ewere, in that age of the iffues of Ham; the bleffing of God given by Noah to Shem and Iaphet taking leffe effect, vntill divers yeeres were confumed; and vntill the time arrived, which by the wisedome of God was appointed. For of Chus, Mizraim, and Canaan came the people and Princes, which held the great Kingdomes of Babylonia, Syria, and Æzypt for many descents together.

ð. III.

Of the Iles of the Gentiles in I APHETS portion: of BEROSVS his too speedic seating GOMER the sonne of IAPHET in Italy; and an other of IA-PHETS Sonnes TVBAL in Spaine: and of the antiquitie of Longingue Nauigation.

O beginne therefore (where Moses beginneth) with the sonnes of Intheth, among whom the Iles of the Gentiles were divided: which divided; which divided, as well to Laphets sonnes as to the rest which came into Shinaar, was (if the division were made at Phalegs birth) in the yeare of the world 1757. or 1758. and (by that account) in the yeare after the floud one hundred and one, of which question elsewhere. Now the habitations proper to the sonnes of taphet were the Iles of the Gentiles, which include all Europe with all the Ilands adioyning, and compassing it about: Europe being also taken for an Iland, both in respect that the Sea Hellespont and Ageum, Boshborus and Euxinus cut it off from the great continent of Asia, as also because Europe it selfe is (in effect) surrounded with water, saving that it is fastned to Asia by the North, for it hath those seas before named to the East, the Mediterranto the South and Southwest, the Ocean to the West, and Brittish, Germane and Baltisk Sea, with that of Glaciale to the North Northeast, and Northwest. Besides, it hath about it all the Cyclades or Iles lying betweene Greece and the leffer Asia, and the Illes of Rhodes, Cyprus, Creet or Candia, Sicilia, Corfica, Sardinia, Malta, the Illes of 30 Brittanie and Zealand, with their yong ones adiacent.

This partition and portion of Lapheth, with the part which he held in Asia, and the North, which was also very great, answereth to that bleffing of God by North. Dilatet Deus IAPHETH, Let God spread abroad (orincrease the posteritie of) IAPHETH, and let him dwell in the tents of SHEM. For though Junius here vieth the word (alliciat) and not dilatet and the Geneua persuadeat; yet the Septuagint have dilatet or amplificet; and fuch was the bleffing given to our Fathers, which God promifed to Abraham and his feed for euer. And the dwelling in the Tents or Tabernacles of Shem was a bleffing by God to the posteritie of Iapheth: noting not onely an enlargement of territories; but that thereby they should bee made participant of Gods Church. 40 But to come to Laphets sonnes, of whome Gomer is the eldest. This Gomer (if wee may beleeue Berofus and Annius, whose authoritie the greatest number of all our late writers have followed ) did in the tenth yeare of Nimrods raigne depart from Babylonia, and planted Italie: which also Functius confirmeth in these words. Anno decimo NIMRODI, &c. In the tenth yeare of NIMRODS raigne, COMERUS GALLYS planted a Colonie in that land afterward called Italie: and in the twelfth yeare of the same NIMRODS raigne TVBAL feated himfelfe in Asturia in Spaine (now called Bifcay) which was in the 140, and in the 142, yeares after the floud, according to BEROSVS. But this opinion is very ridiculous. For before the confusion of tongues the children of Noah did not separate themselves, at least so many of them as came with Nimrodin- 50 to Shinzar. Let vs therefore consider with reason, what time the building such a Cittie and Tower required, where there was no prepared matter, nor any readic meanes to performe such a worke as Nimrod had creeded (and as Functius himselfe out of his Authour Berofus witnesseth,) ad altitudinem of magnitudinem montium, to the heighth and magnitude of the mountaines. Sure that both this Cittie and Tower were almost builded the Scriptures witnesse. But the Lord came downe to see the Cittie General and Tower, which the Sonnes of men builded. Let vs then but allot a time fufficient for the making of bricke to such a worke, of the greatest heighth (and therefore of circuit and foundation answerable) that euer was. For where the vniuerfall floud couered the highest mountaines fifteene cubits; Let vs build vs a Cittie and a Tower (faith Nimrod) whose top may reach unto the heaven : meaning, that they would raise their worke aboue fifteene cubits higher then the highest mountaine, otherwise they could not affure themselues from the seare of a second inundation: a great part 10 whereof was finished before it fell, and before they left the worke. They also beganne this building vpon a ground, the most oppressed with waters of all the world: as by the great ruine which these waters forceably ouerbearing and ouerstowing, made in the time of the succeeding Emperours, is made manifest, approved also by the Prophet Hieremie, speaking of Babylon in these wordes. Thou that dwellest woon many waters. It cannot be doubted but that there needed a substantial foundation, for so high a raised building on a marish ground : and to which Glycas vpon Genesis giueth fortie yeares. For it feemeth, that the Tower was neare finished when God ouerthrew it : it being afterward written, So the Lord feattered them from thence upon all the earth, and they left to build the Cittie. Out of which place it may bee gathered 20 (because the Tower is not then named) that they very neare had performed the worke of their supposed desence, which was the Tower: and that afterward they went on with the Cittie adioyning, wherein they inhabited. It is also to bee noted that till fuch time as this confusion seized them (whereupon the tower was throwne downe) these nations did not disperse themselves: for from thence the Lord scattered Gents. them upon all the earth, (that was) when they perceived not one an others speech. Now to thinke that this worke in the newneffe of the world ( wanting all inftruments and materials) could be performed in ten yeares; and that Tubal and Gomer in the same yeare could creepe through 3000 miles of Desart, with women, children, and cattle : let those light beleeuers, that neither tye themselues to the Srip-30 ture, nor to reason, approue it, for I doe not. And if the Arke of Noah was 100. yeares in building, or but neare such a time, (and then) when the world had stood 1556. yeares, it were more then foolishnes and madnes it selfe, to thinke that such a worke as this could be performed inten; when the world (from the floud to the arrivall at Babel, and beginning of this building there) had but 131. yeares, and whereof they had spent some part in trauailing from the East. Againe, if all Asia set to their helping hands in the building of the Temple of Diana, and yet they con- Pin. fumed in that worke 400. yeares (or be it but halfe that time) and in fuch an age as when the world flourished in all forts of Artificers, and with abundant plentic of materials and carriages: This worke of the Tower of Babel could hardly (with all 40 the former wants supposed) bee creeted in those few yeares remembred. And for conclusion, let all men of judgement waigh with themselues how impossible it was for a Nation or familie of men, with their wives and children, and cattle, to travaile 3000 miles through woods, bogges, and defarts, without any guide or conductor; and we shall finde it rather a worke of 100, yeares then of 100, dayes. For in the West Indies of which the Spaniards have the experience, in those places where they found neither path nor guide, they have not entred the Countrie ten miles in ten yeares. And if Nimrods people spent many yeares by the account before remembred in paffing from the East-India or the higher part thereof, which standeth in 115. degrees of longitude, vntill they came into Shinaar which lyeth in 79. degrees (the di-50 stance betweene those places containing 36. degrees, which make 720. leagues, which is 2160. miles) and did all the way keepe the mountaines and hardground: then the difference betweene Babylon and Bifeay is much more: for the bodie of Bifcay lyethin ten degrees, and Babylon or Shinaar, (as aforefaid) in 79. fo the length of way from Shinaar to Asturia or Bifeay is 69. degrees, which make 1380. leagues, or

of miles 4140. And therefore if Nimrod tooke divers yeares to find Shinaar, which was but 2160. miles : or (supposing that the Arke rested in Armenia) little aboue 400 miles: there is no cause to the contrary, but to allow as many yeares to Gomer and Tuball to trauaile 3000 miles to countries leffe knowne vnto them by farre; then the land of Shinaar was to Nimrod. For Paradyse was knowne to Noah before the floud: and fo was the Region of Eden by Mofes afterward remembred; but what heeynderstood of most part of the world else it is vnknowne. And therefore did Annius ill aduise himselfe to plant Gomer in Italie, and Tubal in Spaine, in the tenth and twelfth of Wimrods raigne: Shall the earth be brought forth in one day, or shall anation be borne at once? But it may be objected, That the Sonnes of Impheth might 10 come by Sea, and so saue this great trauaile through Desarts by land. But we neuer read of any nauigation in those dayes, nor long after. Surely he that knoweth what it is to imbarque so great a people as we may justly suppose those conducters carried with them, will not eafily believe, that there were any veffels in those daies to transport Armies, and (withall) their cattle, by whose milke they lived and fed their children: for milke and fruit were the banquetting dishes of our forefathers. And in the eldest times, euen the Kings and Fathers of nations valued themselues by the heards and numbers of their Cattle: who had flocks of sheepe, and great droues and heards of their owne, and their owne sheep-heards and heardsmen. Now if Tubal had past by Sea from any part of Palastina, Syria, or Cilicia, hee might have made good choice 20 within the Streights, and not have overgone Granado, Valentia, and other Provinces in that Tract: past the Streights of Gibralter, disdained all Andalusia and Portugall, with all those goodly Ports and countries; and have fought out the yron, wooddie, and barren Countrie of the world (called Bifeay) by a long and dangerous nauigation. But before the journey of the Argonauta there were scarce any vessels that durst croffe the Seas in that part of the world: and yet that which Iason had (if the tale be true) was but a Galley, and a poore one (God knowes) and perchance such as they vse this day in Ireland: which although it carryed but foure and fiftie passengers, yet Died. Sieul. 1.4. was it farregreater then any of the former times: Erat enim antea paruarum nauicularum vsus, For in former times they vsed very small Vessels. I denie not but that the Ty-30 rians gaue themselues of old to farre-off nauigations, whence Tibullus ascribed the

Died, Situl-LI, And for those boates called long a naues or Gallies, Plinie faith that Agefias ascribeth the deuise to Paralus: and Philostephanus to Iason: Ctesias to Samyras; and Saphanus 40 to Semiramis: Archimachus to Azeon: to which invention the Erythrai are faid to haue added certaine numbers of Oares: and then Aminocles the Corinthian to haue increased them: the Carthaginians afterwards to have brought them to foure banks: the Quing, Remi first to have beene vsed by Nesichthon the Salaminian, with which Veffels in those parts of the world, the Romans served themselves in the Punick war. But these be perhaps but the partialities of Writers, or their ignorance. For there are that as constantly cast the deuising of these Gallies on Sesostris, though Semiramis vsed them in the passage of her Armie ouer Indus in Abrahams time. So it is said, that Danaus was the first that brought a ship into Greece: and yet the Samothracians Euleb, de prep. challenge the invention; and yet Tertullian (on the contrarie) gives it to Minerua: 50 others to Neptune; Thucydides to the Corinthians. And so ignorant were the people of those ages, as the Agyptians vsed to coast the shores of the red Sea voon raffes, deuised by King Erythrus: and in the time of the Romans, the Brittans had a kinde of Boat (with which they croft the Seas) made of finall twigs, and covered over with

And although it cannot be denyed, when Noah by Gods inspiration was instructed 20 in fo many particulars concerning the Arke, that then many things concerning nauigation were first reuealed; yet it appeares that there was much difference betweene the Arke of Noah, and fuch thips as were for any long nauigation. Yeaancient stories shew, that it was long after these times, ere any durst presume vpon any long voyages to Sea: at least with multitudes of women, and children, and cattle: as also common reason can tell vs. that even now when this Art is come to her perfection, such voyages are very troublesome and dangerous. So as it doth appeare, that there was not in that age of Nimred any ship, or vie of ships, fit for any long pauligation. For if Gomer and Tubal had passed themselves and their people by Sea; the exercise of naugation would not have beene dead for so many hundred 30 yeares after. Leaning therefore the fabulous to their fables, and all men else to their fancies, who have cast Nations into Countries farre off, I know not how, I will follow herein the relation of Moles and the Prophets: to which truth there is joyned both nature, reason, pollicie, and necessitie; and to the rest, neither probabilitie, nor possibilitie.

ð. IIII. of Gog and MAGOG, TVBAL and MESECH, feated first about Asia the lesse, out of EZECHIEL. Cap. 38.39.

Ow although many learned and reuerend men have formed (I know not whereby led) a plantation of the world, which also hath beene and is received: yet I hope I may be excused, if I differ altogether from them in many particulars. Certainely, that great learned man of this latter age, Arias Montanus was also in some thinges much mistaken: and for Tofephus, as he hath many good things, and is a guide to many errours withall, so was he in this plantation of the world very groffe and fabulous, whereby both Eusebius, Hierosolymitanus, Epiphanius, and others, that have taken his testimonies for 30 currant, haue beene by him farre milled. But the better to conceine what Regions of the world Gomer the first sonne of Iaphet possess, as also Tubal, it is needfull to beginne with Magag: because the Scriptures take most knowledge of Gog and Magag, which two names haue troubled many Commentators, faith Matth. Beroaldus, who hath laboured herein with great diligence, and whom (of all that euer I read) I finde most judicious in the examination of this plantation. He takes authoritie from the Prophet Ezechiel chiefly, who in the 38. and 39. Chapter directeth vs, what Nations the Gomerians, Tubalines, and Togormians were, together with the Magogians : of all which Gog was Prince or chiefe Conducter in their attempts against Ifrael. For belides the portions of Europe, and the North-east parts of the greater Asia, which Tapheths iffues possest, all Asia the lesse was peopled by them. And that those of the issue of lapheth (whom Ezechiel speakes of) were seated hereabout, it may best appeare if wee consider the circumstances of the place, and the dependencie vpon the former prophecie in the 37. Chapter. For in that 37. Chapter, Ezechiel prophecieth of the vniting of the two Kingdomes of Ifrael and Iuda, after their deliueric from 19

By which prophecie of Ezechiel, it appeareth, that God purposed to gather together his people, to giue life to dead bones, and to rule them by one Prince. For to that purpose it is written; And DAVID my servant shall bee King over them, and they shall have one sheepe-heard, (that is) they shall bee vnited as they were in Davids time. Hereupon in the 38. Chapter Ezeshiel prophecieth against those Nations, which should seeke to impeach this Vnion, and disturbe the people of Ifrael, whom God purposed to receive to grace, and promised to restore. And so in the same Chapter are those Nations coupled together, which infested the Israelites after their returne, and fought to subject them : all which were the subjects or Allies of Gog, 20 Prince of the Magogians, or Calefyrians, next bordering Palastina or the holy Land. followed also by the rest of the Nations of Asia the lesse, which lay North from Indaa. The wordes of Ezechiel are these: Sonne of manset thy face against Goc, and a gainst the land of MAGOC, the chiefe Princes of MESECH (or MOSOCH) and Tv-BAL: and afterward. Behold, I come against the chiefe Prince of MESHECH and Tv-BAL: and in the fixth Verse; Gomer and all his bands, and the house of Togorma of the North quarters. Herein Ezechiel having first delivered the purpose of his prophecie, teacheth what Nations they were, that should in vaine assaile Ifrael. He joyneth them together vnder their Prince Gog, and sheweth that their habitations were on the North quarters of Iuda, and how feated and ioyned together. Gog fignifieth 30 in the Hebrew (faith St. Hierome) teetum or covering of ahoufe: and Pintus vpon Ezechiel affirmeth, that by Gog is meant Antichrist : for (faith hee) Antichristus erit Diaboli tegumentum sub specie humana, That Antichrist shall be the covering of the Devill under humane form. Hee addeth that Magog is as much to say as Gog: the letter (-M) being an Hebrew Præpolition, and importeth as much as of or from: To he taketh Magog for those people which follow Antichrist. So farre Pintus; at least in this not amisse, that he expoundeth Mageg not for any one person, but for a Nation, with which agreeth this observation of Beroaldus. Magog (faith he) in Hebrewis written Ham-Magog, which sheweth Magog to bee a Region or Nation: for the letter ( He) which is vied but for an Emphasis (which the Hebrewes call Heliaiedia) is neuer ad-10 ded to proper names of men, but often to place. So as Gog was Prince of that Nation (called either Magog, or according to others the people of Gog) also Prince of Meshech, (or Mosoch) and of Tubal: as by the first Verse of the 39. Chapter is made manifest. Behold, I come against thee Goo the chiefe Prince of MESHECH and Tv-BAL. This must needes be meant by the successions of Seleucus Nicanor, who did not (as other conquering Nations) sceke to make the Jewes their Tributaries onely, but endeuoured by all meanes, and by all kinde of violence to extinguish the religion it selfe (which the Hebrewes profest) and the acknowledging of one true God : and to force them to worship and scrue the mortall and rotten Gods of the Heathen; of which nothing remained but the very name, and dead Images. St. Ambrofe and Ifi- 50 dore take Gog for the Nation of the Goths: belike because they inuaded Europe, and facked Rome, and many other places and Citties thereabout. Hermolaus Barbarus out of Pomp. Mela deriues the Turkes from the Scythians, effected Magogians of Gog. Many take Gog for the proper name of a Man: others of a Region: others for a Nation

nated from him whom the Greeke stories call Gyges: who in former time having flaine Candaules the Lydian, gaue his owne name to that Nation, thence after called Gygades: and thereof also the Gygean Lake; which Lake Strabo also findeth in Lydia, (of which Gyges was King) fortic furlongs from Sardis. Plinic calleth strabolib 12; it Greeum stagnum. Herodotus and Nicander set it about the Rivers of Hyllus. and Meander; but the difference is not great. Marius Niger maketh mention of this Gyges King of Lydia: who after hee had fubdued the Countrie about the River

Rhodius which runneth into the Hellesponte, called the Promontory Trapele after his Suid col. 20% 10 owne name Gyges. These opinions doe also seeme to strengthen that of Junius. For Magog faith he, is that part of Asia the leffe, which Halyattes obtained, and after him his some Crasus; who (as Iunius further notes) having maistred all those Regions Iunin, Exect. as farre South as Libanus in that border built the Cittie Gigarta or Gogkarta ( which 38.

in the Syrian fignifieth the Cittie of Gog) scated in Calefyria, whose people were the ancient enemies of the Iewes.

CHAP.8. $.4.

Now that Magog is found in Colefyria, Plinie affirmeth faying; Colefyria habet Bambycen, que alio nomine Hierapolis vocatur, Syris verò Magog. Calefyria hath in it Bambyce, which by another name is called Hierapolis, but of the Syrians Magog. He further telleth vs that the monstrous Idoll Atergatis, called by the Greekes Derceto, was 20 here worshipped, Lucian makes mention hereof, saying that the Cittie had anciently another name, which yet he expresses not; forbearing perhaps the word Magog, as founding nothing elegantly in the Greeke. But if wee may believe Strabo, strab. lib. 16; then was Edeffa in Mefopotamia the same Bambyce or Hierapolis, where the same Idoll was worshipped. Ortelius is doubtfull whether one of these Authours did not miltake the place of this Bambyce or Hierapolis. It may well enough bee that the fame name and Religion was common to them both. Certaine it is, that both of them lay due North from Palestina, and were both subject vnto the Kings of the race of Seleucus. Now I doe not condemne the opinion of Hermolaus Barbarus following Iosephus, but grant that perhaps Magog might also bee the Father of the 30 Scythians; notwithstanding that in this place, where Gog is made the Prince of Magog, the nations of Calefyria and the North partes adioyning bee meant by Magog: for by a latter plantation from these partes they might bee propagated into Scythia. Yet it is not to bee denied, that the Scythians in olde times comming out of the Northeast wasted the better part of Asa the lesse, and possest Calesyria, where they built both Scythopolis and Hierapolis, which the Syrians call Magog. And that to this Magog Ezechiel had reference, it is very plaine : for this Cittie Hierapolis or Magog standeth due North from Indea, according to the wordes of Ezechiel, that from the North quarters those Nations should come. For as the Kings of the South which infested the Ifraelites were the Ptolomies Kings of Agypt: so those of the North were the Kings of Asia and Syria, the successions of Selencus, the succession of Alexander Macedon. Gulielmus Tyrius thinkes that this Hierapolis is that Rages, men- Lib. 4.cap. de tioned in the storic of Tobias. Plinie takes it not onely to have been called Bambyce, belle Sacro. as we have faid, but also Edessa: not that by Euphrates; but another of the same name; now the knowne name is Allepo: for so Bellonius expounds this Hierapolis, or Magog. This Cittie had the title of facred as the facred Cittie, ( for fo the word Hierapolis fignifieth) yet was it a place of most detested Idolatrie; and wherein was worthipped the Idoll of the Mermaide Atergatis, or Atirgitis, according to Plinie, which the Greekes call Derceto.

If then we conferre the wordes of Ezechiel in the third verse of the thirty eight 50 chapter, wherein he ioyneth together Gog Mefech, and Tubal: and withall remember that Hierapolis was the Cittie of Magog, which also is seated directly North from Iudea: with whome also Exechiel coupleth Gomer, and all his bandes of the North quarters; we may (as I concciue) fafely conclude, that these followers and vasfals of Gog (which were Northerne Nations in respect of Indea) were not the Gomerians of France, nor the Tubalines of Spaine, but a people of the leffer Afia, and Calefy ria; and therefore that the opinions of Berofus, Tofephus, and who foeuer else hath followed them therein are to be rejected. But if Iosephus referre himselse to later times, and thinke that some Colonie of the Tubalines might from Iberia and Asia passe into Spaine (to wit from that peece of land betweene Colchis (or Mengrelia) and Albania: (most part possess by the Georgians) then is his judgement of better allowance. For without any repugnancie of opinions, it may be granted, that in processe of time these people might from their first habitation passe into the Countries neare the Euxine Sea, and from thence in after Ages into Spaine.

Infephius makes mention of the Iberi, faying, that they were anciently called Thobe- 10 los, as of Tuball; from whence ( fayth Iustine ) they passed into Spaine to Search out the mines of that Region: having belike vnderstood that it was a Southerlie Countrie and mountainous. For it seemeth that the Tubalines called Chalybes lived altogether by the exchange of iron, and other mettals, as Apollonius witneffeth in these following verses, telling how the Argonautes did visit them.

The Calvbes plough not their barren foile, But vndermine high hilles for iron Veines: Changing the purchase of their endlesse toile For merchandize, which their poore liues fustaines.

But it is more probable, that Spaine was first peopled by the Africans, who had ever fince an affection to returne thither, and to repeople it anew. This appeared by the Carthaginians of old, who were casily drawne to passe ouer the Streights into that Countrie; and after by the Moores who held Granado, and the South parts eight hundred yeares, till the time of Ferdinand and Ifabel. And either of these opinions are 30 more probable, then that in the twelfth yeare of Nimrods raigne, Tubal past into Spaine, and therein built St. Vual: a poore Towne, and a poore deuice, God knowes. Certaine it is that we must finde Mosoch or Mesech, and Tubal neighbours, and Gomer and Togorma not farre off, or elfe we shall wrong Ezechiel: for he called Gog the Leader or Prince of Mefech and Tubal, and maketh Gomer and Togorma their affiftants. And that Mclech inhabited Alia, Functius (though he followed Berofus) confesseth, for these be his wordes. MESACVS, qui à MOSE MESECH, priscos Messos de dula monte v [q, ad Ponticam regionem posuit : hec regio posteà Cappadocia dicta est, in qua wrbs Mazica, &c. hac est terra M AGOG principalis. MESACVS, whom MOSES calleth MESECH, placed the ancient Mesians from the mount Adulas, unto the coast of Pontus. 40 This Region was afterward called Cappadocia, in which is the Towne Mazica, &c. this is the principall Countrie of MAGOG. And this doth Annius also auow, and yet forgets that Gog was Prince both of Mefech and Tubal : and therefore, that the one was a Nation of Spaniards, the other of Cappadocians, is very ridiculous; Spaine lying directly West, and not North from Iudea. Also Ezechiel in the 27. Chapter, where he prophecieth of the destruction of Tyre, nameth Mesech and Tubal ioyntlie. And for a finall proofe, that these Nations were of a Northerne neighbour land (how farre soeuer stretched) Ezechiel in the 38. Chapter makes them all horsemen. Thou, and much people with thee, all shall ride upon horses, even a great multitude and a mighti. Then if any man believe that these troupes came out of Spaine over the Pyrenes, and 50 first passed over a part of France, Italie, Hungarie and Sarmatia, and imbarqued againg about the Hellesport, or else compassed all Pontus Euxinus, to come into the lesser A-(it, which is halfethelength or compasse of the then knowne world, he may be called a strong beleeuer, but he shall neuer be justified thereby. But on the contrarie it is knowne, that Seleucis was a Prouince neighbouring Palestina or Iudea, and that Hierapolis (or Magog) ioyned vnto it: whose Princes commanded all Syria, and Alia the leffe, (namely the Seleucida) and held it, till Scipio Aliaticus ouerthrew Antiochus the great : after which they yet possest till the time of Tigranes : and whether Meshech be in Cappadocia, or under Iberia, yet is it of the Tubalines, and one and the same Dominion.

Of Gomer the like may be faid. First hee seated himselfe with Togorma, not farre from Magog and Tubal, in the borders of Syria and Cilicia. Afterward hee proceeded further into Asia the leffe; and in long tract of time his valiant iffue filled all 10 Germanie, rested long in France and Brittaine, and possessed the vtmost borders of the earth, accomplishing (as Melancton well notes) the fignification of their parents name, which is Vimolt bordering. But when these borderers wanted further place, wherinto they might exonerate their fwelling multitudes, that were bounded in by the great Ocean, then did they returne vpon the Nations occupying the Countries, through which they had formerly paffed, oppreffing first their neighbours, afterwardes the people more remote. Hereupon it was (as the worthy restorer of our antiquities, M. William Cambden hath noted) that they were called Cimbri, which in their old language doth fignifie robbers; necessitic inforcing them to spoile their neighbours, to whom in their originall they were as neare ioyned, as afterwardes in 20 the seates which they possessed. For that the warlike Nations of Germanie werein elder ages accustomed to be beaten by the Galles, the authoritie of Casar affirming it is proofe fufficient. But in times following they purfued richer conquests, and more easie though further distant, by which (to omit their other enterprises not here to be spoken of) they were drawne at length into Asia the leffe, and occupied those partes, which had formerly beene held by their progenitours. I say not that they claimed those lands as theirs by descent; for likely it is, that they knew little of their owne pedigree. Neither can any man therefore denie, that they were of old feated in Asia, because in late ages they returned thither; vnlesse hee will thinke, that all those Nations which from farre partes have invaded and conquered 30 the land of shinaar, may by that argument bee prooued not to have iffued from thence at the first.

Now concerning Samothes for his excellent wisedome sirnamed Dis, whome Annius makes the brother of Gomer and Tubal ( which brother Moses neuer heard of, who spake his knowledge of Japhets sonnes) they must finde him in some old Poet : for Functius a great Berosan confesseth. Quis hic Samothes fuerit In Chronimeertum est, Who this Samothes was it is uncertaine; neither is there any proofe that he was that same Dis, whome C. efar fayth the Gaules suppose to be their Ancestour; cefar comment, yea and Vignier confesset with Functius. Mais on ne scayt quilestoit, no man knowes Vigin, pars 1 who hewas.

CHAP. 8. $.5.

Vt before I goe on with Noah his fonnes, I thinke it necessarieto disproue the fiction which Annius hath of Noah himselfe : an inuention (indeed) very ridiculous, though warranted (as he hath wrested) by those Authours of whom himselfe hath commented:
as the fragment of Berofus, Fabius Pictor, Cato, Lauinius and others. Ann. de Richards.

For Annius seekes to perswade vs, that Noah (sirnamed Janus) was the same which Pill. de aw. Jefounded Genos, with other Citties in Italie, wherein he lived 92. yeares. This to difprooue, by Moses silence, is a sufficient argument to me, if there were nothing else Lavinitus de to disprooue it. For if he vouchsafed to remember the building of Babel, Erec, Achad, Gall.

CHAP. 8. S. 6. of the Historic of the World.

That Gomer also and his Sonne Togorma of the posteritie of lapheth were first seated about Asiathelesse: and that from thence they spread Westwardinto Europe: and Northwardinto

O turne now to the Sonnes of Woah, and the worlds plantation after the floud: therein I observe, that as both reason and necessitie taught them; so, when they multiplyed in great numbers, and dispersed themsclues into the next countries bordering to their first habitations, and from thence sent forth Colonies elsewhere, it was in such a manner as that they might repaire to each other, and keepe intelligence by River: because the land was yet Defart and ouerprest with woods, reedes, bogges, and rotten marilhes. As when Nimrod scated in Babylonia, Chus tooke the South part of Chaldaa, downe the River of Gehon, by which he might passe too and fro from Babylon to his owne plantation: those also, which were of the race of shem, inhabiting at Fron Orchoancare the Lakes of Chaldea, might by the fame Riverget vp to Babylon, and receive succour from thence. All which Tract of land vpon Gehon Southward, 20 Moses in the description of Paradise calleth the land of Chush: because the Dominion and Empire was then in the bands of Wimrod a Culhite, by whom the children of Shem (which came into that Valley and stayed not in the East) were for a while opprest, till God afterward by the seede of Abraham made them his owne nation and victorious. Hauilah, the brother of Nimrod, and sonne of Cush, tooke both barkes of Tigris, especially on the East side of the River: by which river his people might alfo paffe too and fro to Babel.

The Imperiall scate of which Region of Hauilah or Susian, was anciently called Chusian, or Chusian, afterward Susa. Cush himselfe tooke the bankes of Gehon, and planted those Countries Westward, and South-westward towards Arabia the sto-30 nie, and the Defart, where Ptolomie placeth the Cittie of Chusidia, first Chusia.

The

Seba, and Sheba with the rest that planted Arabia falix, had Tigris to conuey them into the Persian Gulfe, which washeth the bankes of Arabia fælix on the East side: fo as those sonnes of Cush might take land downe the River as they pleased. Also the Cittie of Niniue was by Nimrod founded on the faid River of Tigris; and from thence a Colonie past to Charran, standing also vpon a nauigable branch of Euphrates. In like manner did lapheths fonnes fettle themselves together, and tooke their scates in Asia the lesse: from whence they might indifferently stretch themselues Northward, and Westward, into the next parts of Europe, called the Isles of the Gentiles. And it seemeth very agreeable to reason, that both Gomer, Magog, and Tubal, sate 40 downe first of all in that part of Syria, to the North of Palastina and Phanicia: and from thence Gomer or his children past on into Asia the lesse, as those of Magog and Tubal did; from whence the Tubalines fored themselues into Iberia: and the Magogians more Northerly into Sarmatia. The first Gomerians, and first planters in Asia the leffe, held the Countrie of the Cymmerians (witnesse Herodotus) the same Re- L 4. gion which was afterward by the Gallo-greekes called Galatia; to whom St. Paul wrote his Epistle so intituled. This Nation of the Cymmerians (whom the invincible Seythians afterwards dispersed, and forced from their first plantations) gaue names to diners places; as to the mountaines aboue Albania (called Cymmerini) and to the Cittie of Cymmeris in Phrygia: alfo Bosphorus Cymmerius tooke appellation from this o nation, in the outlet whereof was also a Cittie of that name called Cymmerian : which Plinie faith (mistaking the place) had sometime the name of Cerberion; but Cerberion was a Towne in Campania, fo called of the vnhealthfull waters, fauouring of brimstone: which Augustus caused to bee cleansed by letting in the water of the Lake Lucrinus.

Chalne and Niniuie by Nimrod, Noah was a man of too great marke to be forgotten, with all the actes he did in 62, yeares. But it were a needleffe labour for me to difprooue the authoritic of that Berofus, on whom Annius groundeth, feeing fo manie learned men haue so demonstratiuely produed that fragment to be counterfeit. Belides that, Tatianus the Affyrian in his oration against the Greekes auoweth, that the ancient and true Berofus wrote onely 3. Bookes, dedicated to Antiochus the fucceffour of Seleucus Nicanor: but Annius hath deuised 5. Bookes, wherewith hee honoureth Berofus. And whereas Berofus handled onely the effate of the Chald.eans and Affgrians, Annius hath filled this fragment with the businesse of all the world. And if we may believe Eulebius better then Annius, then all the Kinges of the La- 12 tines (before £neas) confumed but 150. yeares: whereas no man bath doubted, but that from Noah to Aneas arrivall into Italie there past 1126. (after the least rate of the Hebrewe account) and (after Codoman) 1291. For lanus (who was the first of their Kinges) lived at once with Ruth, who married Booz, in the worldes yeare (as some reckon) 2717. after the floud 1064. and Noah died 350. yeares after the floud : and so there past betweene Ianus of Italie and Noah sirnamed Ianus 704. yeares. For Saturnus lucceeded Ianus, Picus after Saturnus, Faunus after Picus. and Latinus followed Faunus: which Latinus lived at once with Tautanes the 27. King of Assyria: with Pelasgus of Peloponnesus: with Demophoon of Athens; and Samplon Judge of Ifrael. Now all these fine Kinges of the Latines having consu-20 med but one hundred and fifty yeares; and the last of them in the time of Sampson: then reckoning vpwards for one hundred and fifty yeare, and it reacheth Ruth, with whome lanus lived.

Trucit is, that the Greekes had their Innus; but this was not Nonh: fo had they In the sonne of Xuthus, the sonne of Deucalion, from whom they drawe the Iones, Exech. 27.19.13 who were indeed the children of Janan, the fourth some of Japheth. For the vul-& fo the place gar Translation (where the Hebrew word is Iauan) writes Greece, and the Septua-(for Jauan) Hel. gint Hellas; which is the fante. So had they Medus the sonne of Medea, whom they lada: and (for make the parent of the Medes, though they were descended of a farre more ancient the Plurall fa-uamin) Hellens. Father (towit) Madaithe third sonne of Iapheth.

Lastly we see by a true experience, that the Brittish language hath remained among vs aboue 2000. yeares, and the English speech ever fince the invasion of the Angles: and the same continuance have all Nations observed among themselves, though with some corruption and alteration. Therefore, it is strange if either Noah (by them called Ianus ) had left in Italie his grandchild Gomer fter him, or Tubal in Spaine, that no plaine refemblance of the Hebrew, Syrian, or Scythian (which no time could have quite extinguished) should have beene found in the languages of those Countries. For which reasons we doubt not but these personal plantations of Ianus, Gomer, Tubal, &c. in Italie, Spaine, or France, are meerely fabulous. Let the Italians therefore content themselves with the same Gracian Janus, which commaun- 40 ded them and planted them, and who preceded the fall of Troy but 150. yeares, (faith Eufebius) which was in the time of Latinus the fift King: which also St. Auquistine and Iustine confirme; and this agreeth with reason, time, and possibilitie. And if this bee not sufficient to disproue this vanitie, I may out of themselves adde thus much: That whereas some of them make Vesta (others Camasena) the wife of this Ianus, who instituted the holic Fire of the Vestal Virgins in Rome (the Latines and Romans taking from Innus all their idolatrous and heathenish ceremonies) there is no man fo impious, as to believe that Noah himselfe, (who is said by Moses to have walked with God, to be a just man, and whom God of all mankinde made choice of) could be either ignorant of the true and only God, or so wicked and vngratefull, to 50 fet vp or deuise any Heathen saluage, or idolatrous adoration, or have instituted any ceremonie, contrarie to that which he knew best pleasing to God himselfe.

Note.

The children of Tubal ranged as farre as Iberia, to whom the Moselmei were neighbours, which others write Meshech. The Prophet Ezechiel (coupling them together) calleth Gog the Prince of Meschech and Tubal. For these Meschi (which Piolomie calleth Moschi) inhabite Syracena a Prouince of Armenia, directly South from the mountaines Moschici, in the Valley betweene the mountaines Moschici, and the mountaines Paryardes: out of whose North part springeth the River Phases; from the East part Araxis; and from the West Euphrates: and of this Melchech are defcended also the Mosconians (saith Melanchton,) and it may bee, that in processe of time some of them inhabited those R egions also: For Meshech (faith Melanchton) fignifieth extendens, enlarging or freething forth. Togorma also at first did inhabite a- 10 mongst his parents and kindred. The Togormians were also called Giblei, a people neighbouring the Sydonians in Gabala, a Tetrarchie of Phanicia, the same which Plinie 1. King 1. v. 18. calleth Gahen: from whence Salomon had his most excellent Masons, which hewed stones for the Temple of Hierufalem. Thence the Togormians stretched into the lesse Jun, in Gen. to. Armenia, whose Kings were hence called Tigranes, and their Citties Tigranokarta: of which Citties Tigranes subdued by Lucullus the Roman, built one. Hierosolymitanus hath planted the Togormians in Barbarie: forgetting the Prophecie of Ezechiel against the Tyrians. They of the house of Togorma, brought to thy Faires horses, and horsemen, and mules, which could not well be driven over the whole length of the Mediterran Sea, but from the neighbour Countries by land. But Iofephus takes them for 20 the parents of the Phryeians; which I doe not denic, but they might bee in the enfuing ages: and so might the Tubalines be of the Spaniards; but it was from Iberia, and many hundred yeares after the twelfth of Nimrods raigne. The Iewes conceine that the Turkes came of those Togormians, because their Emperour is called Togar. The Chaldeans make them the Fathers of the Germanes. But Laonicus affirmes that the Turkes descended of the Crim Tartar, which borders Muscouia. But forthese subderivations it were infinite to examine them. Only of the first and second plantation, and of the first Nations after the floud is the matter which I labour to discouer: and therein to open the ignorance of some, and the corruption of other fabulous Writers. And this wee must Note, that those grand-children of Noah which were 30 of a more quiet spirit, or (perchance) of lesse vinderstanding, and had not therefore the leading of Colonies fent out, their proper habitations can bee hardly knowne: only reason hath taught vs, that they dwelt among the rest, and were couered

ð: V I I.

Of I AVAN the fourth Sonne of I APHETH: and of MESCH, of ARAM, and Meshech of IAPHETH.

F Jauan the fourth Sonne of Japheth came the Jones, which were afterwards called the Greekes and fo the Latine and Greeke Interpreters for lauan write Greece, as in Esai; Et mittam ex ijs qui saluati suerint ad gentes, inmare, in Italiam, & Graciam, And I will fend those that e-Cape of them to Nations in the Sea, in Italie and in Greece. The Geneva here yieth the word (Tarshich) for Tarsus, a Cittie in Cilicia, though Tarsis in many places bee taken for the Sea. The Tigurine and the Geneua vie the names Tubal and s Jauan, and not Italie and Greece : keeping the same Hebrew wordes. Of these Iones were the Athenians, though themselves dreame that they were Aborigines, or men without Ancestours, and growing (as it were) out of the soile it selfe; who abounding in people sent Colonies into Asia the lesse, of whom came the Iones of those parts. Others derive the Athenians from Ion the sonne of Xuthus, the sonne of Deu-Thusyd. calion: but the antiquitie of Jauan marres the falhion of that supposition, who so many yeares preceded Xuthus, Ion, or Deucalion. Paufanias tels vs that Xuthus ftole out of Thessale with all his Fathers treasure, and his brothers portions, and arriving at Athens, he was gratiously received by Erictheus, who gave him his daughter in marriage; of whom he received two fonnes, Ion, and Acheus, the supposed Anceflours of the Athenians. For Attica was called Ionia (faith Plutarch in the life of Thefew) who, when he had joyned Megara to Attica, creeted a piller in that Islimos or Strait, which fasteneth Peioponnessis to the other part of Greece: writing on that part 10 which looketh towards the East, these wordes. Hee non funt Peloponne fus ast lonia. These Countries are not of Peloponnesus, but of Ionia; and on the other side which looked towards the South and into Peloponnesus, this. These parts are Peloponnesus, and not Ionia.

Strabo out of Hecateus affirmeth, that the Iones came out of Aliainto Greece, which is contrarie to the former opinion: That the Iones of Greece transporting certaine companies into Afia the leffe, the name of Iones was thereby therein retained. And though Strabo knew no more thereof then he learned of the Greekes themselves, yet I finde this coniecture of Hecateus reasonable enough. For though it were to him vnknowne, yet fure I am that Asia the lesse had people before Greece had any : and 20 that Iauan did not flie from Babylonia into Greece, but tooke Asia the leffe in his pasfage, and from thence past ouer the nearest way, leaving his owne name to some maritimate Prouince on that fide, as he did to that part of Greece so called. But yet Strabo himselfe beleeved, that Ionia tooke the name from Ion the sonne of Xuthus: for so much he had learned from themselves; which was also the opinion of Paufanias. True it is, that the Greekes in after-times cast themselues into that part of Asa the leffe, opposite vnto them, which they held for divers yeares. And how soeuer the Greekes vaunt themselues to be the Fathers of Nations, and the most ancient; yet all approued Historians (not their owne) deride and disproue their pride, and vanitie therein. For this dispute of Antiquitie (among prophaned Writers) rested 30 betweene the Scythians and the Egyptians, as Iustine out of Trogus, in the warre betweene Vexor is of Egypt, and Tanais of Scythia, witneffeth: which preceded far the raigne of Ninus, and was long before the name of Greece was euer heard of. And it is also manifest, that in Cecrops time the Greekes were all saluages without law or religion, living like brute beafts in all respects: and Cecrops (faith St. Augustine) lived to- L.18 de civit. gether with Moles. The fixth sonne of Japheth was Meshech, whom the Septuagint call Mosoch: (a part of those Nations commanded by Gog the chiefe Prince of Meshech and Tubal.) But this we must remember, that betweene Melech the sonne of Aram, and Melhech (or Mo(och) the sonne of Inpheth, there is little difference in name, and both by divers in-40 terpreters dinerfly written. Montanus with the Vulgar writeth Melch, the sonne of Aram Mes , the Geneua Mash ; Iunius Mesch. But it may be gathered out of the 120 Pfalme, that either Mefhech the sonne of Japheth, was the parent of those people, or gaue name to that Prouince wherein David hid himselfe: or else (which may rather feeme) that it tooke name from Mesch the sonne of Aram. For David bewailing his exile (while he liued among a barbarous and irreligious people) vseth these wordes. We is me that I remaine in Mefech, and dwell in the Tents of Kedar: which Iunius con-Pfal 120, v.s. uerteth thus. Hermihi quià peregrinor tam diù : habito tanquam Scenita Kedareni : The Septuagint giues it this sense. Woe is me because my habitation (or abode) is prolonged, who dwell with the inhabitants of Kedar; with which this of the Latine agreeth. Heu 50 mihi, quià incolatus meus prolongatus est, habitaui cum habitantibus Kedar : The Chaldæan otherwise, and in these wordes. O memiserum, quià peregrinatus sum Asianis, habitaui cum tabernaculis Arabum, O wretch, that Iam, for I haue trauailed among those of Asia: I have dwelt in the Tabernacle of the Arabians. But how societ or which societ conversion be taken for the best, yet all make mention of Kedar: which is a Province of Arabia petraa; and the Chaldean putteth Ajain fleud of Mefech; but the Hebrew it selfe hath Melech. And if it bee to bee taken for a Nation, (as it is most likely, because it answeres to Kedar, the name of a Nation) seeing Mest the sonne of aram, 1. Chron. 17. is called Melbec, it is indifferent whether this Nation tooke name from Melbech or Melb, both bordering Indea, and like enough to be commanded by one Prince; for fo Ezechiel makes Mefech and Tubal. But as for those that take Mefech out of the word Mosoch (given by the Septuagint,) to be the Muscouian: sure they prefume much ypon the affinitie of names, as aforefaid. And fure I am that Danid neuer transiled fo farre North; (for to him Musconia was vtterly vnknowne) but about the border of Kedar (it may be) he was often in all the time of his perfecution: the same being a Cittie on the mountaines of Sanir or Galaad. And yet Arias Montanus makes Mosoch the Father of the Musconians : and herein also Melanchton runnes with the tide of common opinion, and Icts Melech in Muscouia, though with Some better aduise of judgement; as, first seated in Cappadocia, and from thence trauailing Northward: expounding the places of the 120. Plaime, (Hei mihi quod exulo in Mesech) to signifie, gentis eius feritatem insignem esse; that the feritie of that nation exceeded: which fierceneffe or brutalitie of the Museonians, David neuer proued, or (perchance) neuer heard of .But the same feritie or crueltie which those Northerne Muscouians had, may aswell bee ascribed to the Arabians and Kedarens. For this Countrie tooke name of Kedar the second some of Ismael, of whom a people of e- a quall fiercenesse to any of the world were begotten, both in those times and long aster, even to this day, (if the Arabians, I/maelites, and Saracens, may be accounted one people:) the same being foreshewed by the speech of the Angell to Hagar, Gen. 16. v.12. And he shall be a wild man : his hand shall be against cuery man, and eucry mans hand against him. Now Arabia the Desart (saith Plinie) confronteth the Arabians Cochlei on the East, and the Cedrei Southward, both which iowne together you the Nabathai. So it appeareth (as before) that Mefech, Tubal, Gomer, Togorma, and Magon, neighboured Canaan and Ifrael, and that Kedar also did io yne to Mesech: all which were Regions of Syria, or of Asia the lesse, commanded by the successions of Selencus. enemies of the reeftablishment of Ifrael and Iuda. But (as I have already faid) it might well be, that long after the first plantation the iffue of Mesech (or Mosoch) might passe into Cappadocia, and thence into Hyrcania, and give names, both to Mazega in the one, and to the mountaines Moschiei in the other, and from thence might fend people more Northerly into Muscouia: and so all opinions faued. But all saluage Nations ouergrowne and vncultiuated, doe (for the most part) shew a late plantation, euen as civilitie, letters, and magnificent buildings, witneffe anti-

Tiras, the feuenth sonne of Iapheth, which Montanus reckons among the sonnes of Gomer, was the Father of the Thracians, as all Authours (worthie the examination) affirme. Iosephus was the first that determined hereof: and because the Scriptures are altogether filent, what part of the world Tiras peopled, the coniectures are indifferent, and give no ground at all of dispute. It followeth now to speake of the Sonnes of Gamer, which were three:

VIII.

of ASCANEZ and RIPHATH, the two elder Sonnes of GOMER.

SCANEZ was the Father of those which the Greekes call Regim, (faith Iosephus) but he gives no reason why.

Eusebius makes Ascanez the Father of the Goths. The lewes in their Thergum make him the roote of the Germane Nation, but their expositions are commonly very idle. Plinie findeth Ascania in Phrygia, neare the Rivers of Hylas and Cios: Melanchton being of the same opinion, that the Tuifsones were descended of the Ascanez, (for Tuiscones, faith he, is as much to for, as of the Ascanez, praposito articulo die Ascanez) and that the word signifieth a Religious Keeper of fire: it being an ancient superstition to pray at the fire of Sacrifices, as af-Melanch.in car. terwards at the tombs of Martyrs. Not farre from Phrygia was the Lake Alcania. 1.1. knowne by that name in the Romanes time. And among the Kings which came to the fuccour of Troy, was Afcanius (Deo similis, faith Homer) like unto God : because Homslinda. he was beautifull and strong: for in the same manner doth Virgil grace Aneas, Os humerofq. Deo similis, in face and body like one of the Gods. Virgil also remembreth such

20 a River together with the hilles Gargara: as, Illus ducit amor trans Gargara, tranfq, fo- Ving Georg. 13. nantem A Canium, Appetite leades them both over the mountaines Gargara, and the roring Ascanius. But this Plinie maketh more plaine in the description of Phrygia. For he placeth the Cittie of Brillion vpon the River Afcanius, which is adioyning to Milia, and is neare the border of the Troian Empire : and the Lake Ascanez he directs ys to finde by the description of Prusia, founded by Hannibal at the foot of Olympus, which lyeth farre within the Countries of Bithynia; and then from Prusia to Nicea are accounted fine and twentie miles, in which way this Lake lyeth, even betweene Prusia and Nices, And fo Junius (as I conceine him) takes them of Ascanez, to be the inhabitants of Pontus, and Bithynia, and those North parts of Asia. Stephanus de Vrbibus 30 makes it a Cittie of Troas, built by Afcanius the sonne of Aneas: faying, that there was another of that name in Mylia. Of Ascania a Lake of Bithynia, Ptolomie witnesfeth: and Strabo giueth Ascania both a Lake, a River, and a Towne in Mysa, neare vnto Cio; which also agreeth with Plinie. For Plinie findeth Prusia (before spoken of) neare Cio, and calleth the Islands before Troy Ascanes. Now, whether these places tooke name of Asanez the sonne of Gomer, or of Ascanius the sonne of Ances, it might be questioned : sure it is, that Asanius which brought succour to the Troians, could not take his name from Aneas sonne, who was then either exceeding young, or rather viborne: and it feemeth that the countries whence those succours came were not out of any part of Phrygia or Mysia, but 40 farther off, and from the North parts of all Ajia the leffe, which by Hieremie is called Afcanez, by the figure Syncehdoche, as Junius thinketh. Out of those testimonies therefore which deceive not, we may confidently determine. For of the Prophet Hieremie we shall learne of what Nation the Ascenez were, whose wordes are these. Set up a Standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the Nations against her, call 6.51.0.27. up the Kings of Ararat, Minni, and Ascanez against her, Go. meaning, against the Babylonians. Ararat was Armenia the greater, as most interpreters consent, so called of the mountaines of Ararat which runne through it: Minni the leffer Armenia : Armenia being compounded of Aram and Minni. For Minni was the ancient name: (faith Iunius and others beforehim) and Aramanciently, taken for Syria, which con-30 tained all that Tract from Euphrates to the Sca-coasts of Phanicia and Palastina; and therefore Mesopotamia being in elder times butta Province of Syria, the Scriptures difference it in the storie of Iscob and Elau, and call it Arem-padam. Then if these two Nations were of the Armenians and Alexes joyned with them (who altogether vni, ted under Cyrus and Darius, came to the spoile of the Barylonian Empire) we shall erre

much to call Askenaz Germanie or Amaine, for we heare of no Swart Ruttiers at that fiege. But the Askenaz were of those Nations which were either subject or allied to the Medes: of which, if any of them came afterward into Phrygia, I know not: for the dispersion of Nations was in aftertimes without account. But for the opinion of Eusebins, who makes them to be Goths; or that of Iosephus, who cals them Rhegins, or of the Iewes, who will have them to be Almainer; when they confirme it either by Scriptures or Reason, I will thinke as they doe.

Of Riphath the second some of Gomer there is mention in the first of Chronicles. Beroaldus and Pererius thinke that hee wandered farre off from the rest of his brothers, and therefore no memorie of his plantation. But I fee nothing to the contra- 10 rie, but that he might seate himselfe with the rest of his familie: for there wanted no roome or foile in those dayes for all the sonnes and grand-children of Noah. Therefore I take it to bee well vnderstood, that the Riphei were of Riphath, which the Greekes afterwards (according to to fephus) called the Paphlagones: and Riphei (faith Melanchton) fignifieth Giants. These people were very famous in the North parts, and in Sarmatia: the most of number and power among them, Sarmatarum gens maxima Heneti, The greatest number of the Sarmatians were the Heneti; who fpake the ancient Polac: which being first called Riphei (for the loue of some of their Leaders or Kings) changed their names and became Heneti, (a custome exceeding common in those times) and dwelt first in Paphlagonia, as Homer witnesseth, and so doth Apollo- 20 nius in his Argonauticks: Now, when these Riphei (afterward Heneti) sought new Regions, they came along the shores of Euxinus, and filled the North part of Europe, contayning Rusia, Lituania, and Polonia. From thence they croft thwart the Land, and peopled Illyria, delirous (faith Melanchton) of a warmer foileof fruit and Wine. These Heneti or Veneti, whom Melanchton taketh to be one people, filled all that land betweene the Baltick and Adriatick Sea; and to this day the name of the Gulfe Venedicus is found in Russia. This Nation, after they were possest of Lituania and Polonia, diffurbed the plantation of the Boij and Hermondurij. Therefore, it seemeth to me, that of Riphath came the Riphei, afterward Heneti; and so thinketh Arias Montanus, first seated in Paphlagonia, but in course of time Lordes of Sarmatia, and those other 10 parts before remembred, chiefly betweene the Rivers of Vistula and Albis. The name (faith Melanchton) fignificth wandering or wanderers, or Nomades: a people which lived by white meates and fruits, as (indeede) all Nations did in the first of the foure Sonnes of IAVAN: and of the double signification of Tharsis, either for a proper name or for the Sea.

F Elifa or Elipha, came the £oles: and of this Elifa all the Greekes were called Hellenes, faith Montanus. Melanchion makes Elifa the Father of of the £oles in Affa tide: others of Elis in Pelopome [us, or of both And seeing the Greekes were descended in general of Iausan, it is probable that the £oles and the Elie, tooke name of Elifa, his eldes Sonne. Ezechiel in the 27. Speaking of Tyre, nameth the Isles of Elifa. Hyacynthus

E-purpura de insulis Elisa facta sum operimentum tuum, Blew silke and purple, brought from the siles of Elisa, was thy concerning: The Chaldasas for Elisa write tasta: but the Vulgar, the Tigarime, the Geneus, and Jumus, keepe the word Elisa: and so I thinke they might doe with reason. For there was not found any such purple Dye in Italie in those dayes, nor lince, that I can reade of: but those siles of Elisa, were by a better coniecture the siles of Greece; and the best purple was sound afterward at Tyre it selte: and before that, among the Cyclades, and on the coast of Gestules.

Tharlis, the second Sonne of Janan inhabited Cilicia, of which Tharlis is the Metropolis. Montanus for Tharsis in Cilicia, vnderstands Carthage in Africa; but (reserving to the respect due to so learned a man) he was much mistaken in that coniecture. The Chaldean Paraphrast puts Carthage for Tharsis, but it hath no authoritie, nor warrant of reason therein. So likewise, where it is written, that the ships of Salomon went euery three yeares to Tharsis, and brought thence Gold, Silver, Elephants teeth, &c. the Chaldean Paraphrast translates Tharfis (Africa.) But Salomons ships were prepared in the Red Sea at Eston Gaber, in the Bay of Elana, neare vnto Madian, where Iethro (Moses Father in law) inhabited; a Prouince of Arabia Petraa, Idumaa, or of the Chustes; and they failed to the higher part of the East India. For it had beene a strange naugation to have spent three yeares in the passage betweene Indea and Canthage, or any other part of Africa, which might have beene failed in fixe or ten daics. 20 And if fogreat riches might have beene found within the bounds of the Mediterran Sea, all other neighbouring Princes would foone haue entertayned that trade also. But this enterprise of Salomon is in this fort written of in the first of Kings. مااه King SALOMON made a Nauie of Ships in Esion Gaber, which is beside Elath and the brinke of the Red Seain the land of Edom: and Hyram sent with the Nauie his servants, that were mariners, and had knowledge of the Sea, with the feruants of SALOMON: and they came to Ophir, and fet from thence 420. talents of gold, &c. But as the Nations about Pontus thought no Sca in the world like vnto their owne, and doubted whether there were any other Sea but that only : (whereof it came, that Pontus was a word vsed for the Sea in generall) so, because the Israelites and the Phanicians knew no o-30 ther Sea then that of the Mediterran in the beginning; and that the people of Thars had the greatest ships, and were the first nauigators in those parts with such vesfels, they were therefore called men of the Sea: and the word Tharsis vsed often for the Sea. And whereas it is faid that the ships of Salomon went every three yeares to Thar sis, that phrase is not strange at all: for we vie it ordinarily where soeuer we nauigate, (namely) that the Kings ships are gone to the Sea, or that they are set out euery yeare, or euery three yeare to the Sea, and therefore Tharsis was not therein named, either for Carthage, Mica, or India, but vsed for the Sea it selfe. But in this place Tharsis is truly taken for Tharsis, the chiefe Cittie in Cilicia, founded by Tharsis the second sonne of Iauan, or by his successours in memorie of their first parent. To o this Cittie arrived Alex Macedon, before he gave the first overthrow to Darius, and

The third sonne of Iauan was Cethim, of whom were the Romans and Italians, yo saith Beroaldus, but I allow better of Melanchtons opinion, who makes Cethim the Father of the Macedonians. Cethim is a voice plurall (shith he) and signifieth percussores though in that respect it may be meant by either. But it seemeth more probable, that the place of Efür 23. (according to Melanchton) had relation to Alexander and the Macedonians. Hae calamitas ab Es Al pradictaest, qui capite vicessimo tertio inquit, cafting himselfeinto the River to bathe and wash his bodie, he fell into an extreme fever, and great danger of death: and in this Cittie of Thassis was St. Paul borne. Now this agreeth with the reason and nature of a plantation. For (Gomer and his other sonnes inhabiting Asia the leffe, and that part of Syria adjoyning,) Jacam who was to passe ouer the Sea into Greece, tooke the edge of the same coast, and first planted the Iones on that shore : gaue the Islands betweene Asia the lesse and Greece, to Elisa, and lest Tharsis upon the Sca-side in Cilicia; of whom that Cittie tooke

wenturos effe euerfores Tyriex terra Cittim, This calamitie (faith MELANCHTON) was foreshewed by Es At the Prophet, who in the three and twentieth Chapter pronounced, that the destroyers of Tyre were to come out of Cittim. And although the children of Israel esteemed all men Islanders, which came vnto them by Sea, and separate from that Continent; (and so also Cittim might be taken for Italie, saith Beroaldus) yet we must take the first performance of the former prophecie, which tooke effect with the destruction of the Tyrians by Alexander: who after seven Moneths siege entred that proude Cittie, and cut in peeces 7000. principall Cittizens; strangled 2000. and changed the freedome of 13000. others into bondage and flauerie. Now, that Macedon was taken for Cethim, it appeareth plainely in the first of the Maccabees, in these 10 wordes. After that ALEXANDER the Macedonian, the Sonne of PHILIP, went forth of the land of Cethim, and flue DARIVS King of the Persians and Medes. IOSEPHVS fets Cethim in the Isle of Cyprus, in which (faith he) there remaineth the Cittie Citium, the Countrie of Zeno the Philosopher (witnesse Laertius) which Cittie Pintus vpon Ezechiel affirmeth, that it flood in St. Hieromes time. So it may be that all the Islandes in ancient times by the Hebrewes were called the Islandes of Cethim: and in that sense might Cyprus bee so called also; and yet because Tharsis was the very next Port to Cyprus, and directly ouer against it, it is also very probable, that Cethim dwelt by his brother Thar sis: and finding that Island too streight for his people after they were increased, and that the rest of the coasts, both on Asia side and Grecce, 20 were inhabited by his Father and Brothers, he fent Colonies ouer the Agaan sea, and inhabited Macedonia. Dodanim the fourth fonne of Iauan, and the youngest brother (by the most opinions) fate downe at Rhodes, as neare Cethim, Tharfis, and Elifa, as he could. For Dodanim and Rhodanim are vsed indifferently by many translators: the Hebrew (D) and the Hebrew (R) are so like, as the one may casily bee taken for the other, as all Hebricians affirme. There is also found in Epirus the Cittie of Dodona, in the Pronince of Molosia. And as Cethim, when he wanted foile in Cyprus : fo Dodanim (scated in a farre leffe Island) did of necessitie send his people farther off; and keepingalongst the coast, and finding Peloponnesiss in the possession of Elisa, he passed a little farther on the Westward, and planted in Epirus. And though the Cittie of Dodona was not then built, or (perchance) not so ancient as Dodanim himselfe, yet his posteritie might give it that name in memorie of their first parent, as it hapned all the world ouer. For names were given to Citties, Mountaines, Rivers, and Provinces, after the names of Noahs children, and grand-children; not in all places by themfelues, but by their fucceffours many yeares after: energy of their families being defi-rous to retain among them by those memories, out of what branch themse us were taken, and grafted elsewhere. And because great Kingdomes were often by new Conquerers newly named, and the greatest Citties often fired and demolished: therefore those that hoped better to perpetuate their memories, gaue their owne a names, or the names of their Ancesters, to Mountaines and Riucrs, as to things (after their judgements) freeft from any alteration.

Thus then did Jauan fettle himselfe and his children, in the edge and frontier of i Affatheleffe, towards the Sea-shore: and afterward in Greece, and the Islands, and neighbour Provinces thereof, as Japheth their Father had done in the body of the leffer Asia, together with Iauans brethren, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Tubal, Melech, and the restround about him. And in like fort did Chush (the sonne of cham) people Pabylonia, Chaldea, and the borders thereof towards the West and Southwest: and the fonnes of chulb (all but Nimrod, who held Babylonia it felfe) trauailed Southward in Arabia falix, and Southwestward into Arabia petraa: the rest of his children holding so the Regions adjoyning to Nimrod. Mizraim the brother of Chush in like manner tooke the way of Agypt: and his brother Canaan the Region of Palastina adioyning. The Sonnes of Canaan had their portions in Canaan, of whom all those Nations came, which were afterward the enemies both to the Hebrewes, and to those of the

That the feate of CHVSH the eldest sonne of HAM was in Arabia, not in Athiopia: and of strange fables, and ill translations of Scripture, grounded upon the mistaking of this point.

Of IOSEPHUS his tale of an Athiopesse wife to Moses, grounded on the mistaking of the feate of CvsH.

Hat Ham was the Father of the Agyptians, it is made manifest in many Scriptures, as in the 105. Plalme v.51. Then Isr AEL came to Ægypt, and IACOB was a stranger in the land of HAM: and in the 78. Pfalme. He flue all the first-borne in Agypt, even the beginning of their

ftrength, in the Tabernacles of HAM. There is also found a great Cittie in Thebaida, called Cheramis ; (asit were the Cittie of Ham) of which name Herodo- Hered in Edtus also discouers an Island in the same Region. But because Chush is the elder sonne terpe. 30 of Ham, it agreeth with order to speake first of him. Now though I have already in the description of Paradise handled this question, and (I hope) proued that Chush could not be Æthiopia: yet feeing it commeth now to his turne to speake for himfelfe, I will adde some farther proofe to the former. For the manifestation hereof fets many thinges straight, which had otherwise very crooked constructions, and fenselesse interpretations. Surely, howsoeuer the Septuagint and Iosephus have herein failed, yet it is manifest that Chush could not be Athiopia, but Arabia: (to wit) both that Arabia called Petraa, and a part of Arabia the Happie and the Defart: which Regions Chush and the Chustes presently planted, after they left Babylonia to Nimrod, wherein they first sate downe altogether. And there is nothing which so 40 well cleareth this controversie, as the true interpretation of the place, Num. 12. v.1. where Moses his wife is called a Chuste; together with some places which speake of Nabuchodonofors conquests. For whereas Iofephus and the Septuagint in the place, Num.12.v.1. as also elsewhere, vnderstand Chulb for Æthiopia, we must give credit to Moses himselfe herein; and then it will appeare that Iosephus was grosly mistaken, or vainely led by his owne inuention. For Infephus prefuming that Chish was Athiopia, and therefore that the wife of Moles (which in Scripture Num. 12. v. 1. is called a woman of Culh) was a woman of the land of Ethiopia, faineth that Tharbis the daughter of the King of Athiopia, fell in love with the person and same of Moses, while he belieged Saba her Fathers Cittie; and to the end to obtaine Moses for 50 her husband, shee practised to betray both her parents, Countrie, and friends, with the Cittie it selfe, and to deliuer it into Moses handes. The tale (if it bee worth the reciting) lyeth thus in Iosephus. After he had described the strength of the Athiopian Cittie Meroe, which he faith at length Camby [es called fo from the name of his lister, (the old name being Saba) he goeth on in these wordes. Hic cum Moses de- Antiquistis.

sidere exercitum otiosum agrè ferret, hoste non audente manus conserere, tale quiddam accidit. Erat Æthiopum regi filia, nomine T H ARBIS, &c. which tale hath this sense in English. When MosEs was grieved that his Armie lay idle, because the enemie hesieged. durst not fallie and come to handie strokes, there hapned this accident in the meane while. The Æthiopian King had a daughter called T HARBIS, who at some assaults given beheld the person of Moses, and withall admired his valour. And knowing that Moses had nct only up-held and restored the falling estate of the Egyptians, but had also brought the conquering Athiopians to the very brincke of subuersion: these thinges working in her thoughts, together with her owne affection, which daylie encreased, shee made meanes to send unto him by one of her trustiest servants to offer her selfe unto him, and become his Wife; 10 Which Moses on this condition entertained, that shee should first deliver the Cittie into his possession: whereunto shee condescending, and Moses having taken oath to performe this contract, both the one and the other were instantly performed.

t. II. A dispute against the tale of Iosephus.

His tale (whereof Moles hath not a word) hath Iolephus fashioned, and therein also veterly mistaken himselfe, in naming a Cittie of Arabia, for a Cittie of A-20 thiopia: as he names Athiopiait felfe to have beene the Countrie of Moles his Wife, when (indeede) it was Arabia. For Saba is not in Athiopia, but in Arabia, as both Strabo and all other Geographers, ancient and moderne teach vs, faying that the Sabaans are Arabians, and not Æthiopians; except Iofephus can perswade vs, that the Queene of Saba which came from the South to heare the wisedome of Salomon, were a Negro, or Black-Moore. And though Damianus a Goes speake of certaine letters to the King of Portugall from Prester John, of the Abisines : wherein that Athiopian King would perswade the Portugals that hee was descended of the Queenc of Saba, and of Salomon; yet it doth no where appeare in the Scriptures, that Salomon had any Sonne by that great Princesse: which had it beene true, it is likely that 30 when Sifbac King of Egypt inuaded Robeam, and fackt Hierufalem, his brother (the fonne of Saba and Salomon) who joyned vpon Egypt, would both have impeached that enterprize, as also given aide and succour to Robosm against Ierobosm, who drew from him ten of the twelue Tribes to his owne obedience. Neither is it anything against our opinion of Moles his wife, to have beene an Arabian, that the Scriptures teach vs, that Mofes married the daughter of lethro Pricht of Midian or Madian: which standing on the North coast of the Red Sca, ouer against the body of Æ gypt, and neare Esion Gaber, where Salomon provided his Fleet for India, in the Region of Edom, may well be reckoned as a part of Arabia, as the Red Sea is called Sinus Arabicus. For Edumaa ioyneth to the Tribe of Inda by the North, to Arabia Pe- 1 trea by the East, to the Mediterran by the West, and to the Red Sea by the Southeast. And if we marke the way which Moses tooke when he left Egypt, and condu-Eted Israel thence, it will appeare that hee was no stranger in Arabia: in the border whereof, and in Arabia it felfe, hee had formerly lived fortic yeares; where it feemeth, that befides his carefull bringing vp in Levet, hee was instructed by Iethroin the Egyptian learning. For Iosephus confesseth, and St. Stephen confirmeth that he was learned in all the wisedome of the Agyptians. But on the other side this Text makes much against Iosephus, where it is written in Exodus the second. Therefore MOSES fled from PHARAO, and dwelt in the land of Madian or Midian, and not in Æthiopia. And in the third Chapter it is as plaine as wordes can expresse, in what 50 Region Madian was, where it is written. When Moses kept the speepe of IETHRO his Father in law, Priest of Madian, and draue the flocke to the Defert, and came to the mountaine of God in Horeb. Now that mount Horeb is not in Athiopia, every Infant knoweth. And if wee may beloeue Moles himselfe, then was not the Wife of Moles purchased in that manner which Iosephus reporteth (which was for betraying her Countrie and friends) neither had shee the name of Tharbis, but of Sippora, or Zippora: neither was shee a Negro, but a Madianitish. And as God worketh the greatest thinges by the simplest meanes: so it pleased him from a sheep-heard to call Moles, and after him David, and by them to deliver his people first and last. For Meles litting by a Well (as disconsolate and a stranger) defended the daughters of Requel Exed. from the other sheep-heards, and drew them water to water their sheepe: vpon which occasion (by God ordained) hee was entertained by Iethro, whose daughter he married: and not for any betraying of Townes or Countries.

From hence also came lethro to Moses at Rephidim, not farre from Idumaa, and finding the insupportable gouernement of such a multitude, hee aduised him to distribute this waightie charge, and to make Gouernours and Judges of every Tribe and Familie. And if Iethro had beene an Athiopian, it had beene a farre progresse for him to have paffed through all Egypt with the Wife and Children of Mofes, and to have found Moses in the border of Idumaa: the Agyptians hating Moses and all that fauoured him. But the passing of Moses through Arabia Petraa (which ioyneth to Madian) proueth that Moses was well acquainted in those parts: in which the second time he wandered fortie yeares, and did by these late transiles of his seeke to instruct the children of Ifrael in the knowledge of one true God, before hee brought 20 them to the land of plentie and rest. For he found them nourished vp with the milke of Idolatrie, and obstinate in the Religion of the Heathen, and finding that those fliffe plants could not be bowed or declined, either by perswasion or by miracle, he warethem out in the deferts, as God directed, and grafted their branches anew, that from those hee might receive fruit, agreeable to his owne desire, and Gods Commandements.

Lastly, this opinion of Iosephus is condemned by Augustinus Chrisamens, where also hereprehendeth Apollinaris, who anowed that Moses had married both Tharbis and Sephora: His owne wordes have this beginning. Mentitur etiam A PO LL 1- Sixt Scient. NARIS duas vxores habuisse Mosen, &c. Apollinaris also lyeth in affirming Bibl. 20 that Moses had two wines: and who doth not perceine these thinges fained by them? for it is manifest that the wife of Moses was Zephor A, daughter to the Priest or President of Madian : and that Madian cannot bee taken for Athiopia beyond Agypt; being the same that ionneth to Arabia: so farre Chrisamensis.

t. III.

CHVSH ill expounded for Æthiopia, EZECH. 29.10.

N Ow as Chush is by the Septuagint converted Athiopia, and the wife of Moses therefore called Athiopiss. io in the conquest of Naturchedonosor is Athiopis written for Arabia. For by the wordes of Ezechiel it is manifest that Nabuchodono for Egeth 29.10; was neuer in Athiopia. Behold (faith Ezechiel, speaking of the person of this great Assyrian) I come upon thee and upon thy Rivers, and I will make the land of Ægypt utterly wast and desolate, from the Tower of Seueneh, even to the borders of the Black-moores: which last wordes should have beene thus converted: From the Tower of Seveneh to the borders of the Chusites or Arabians: betweene which two is situated all Agypt. For to say, from the borders of Seueneh to the Æthiopians, hath no sense at all. Seuenehit selfe being the border of Egypt, confronting and ioyning to Ethiopia, or the land of the Black-Moores. So as if Nabuchodonofors conquest had beene but between 50 Seueneh and the border of Athiopia, it were as much to fay, and did expresse no other victorie then the conquest of all that land and Countrie, lying betweene Middlefex and Buckingham, where both the Countries ioyne together; or all the North parts of England, betweene Barwick and Scotland: for this hath the same sense with the former, if any man fought to expresse by these two bounds, the conquest of England: Barwick beeing the North border of England, as Seuenehor Syene is the South bound of Egypt, seated in Thebaida which toucheth Ethiopia. But by the words of Ezechiel it appeareth, that Nabuchodonofor neuer entred into any part of Æthiopia, although the Septuagint, the Vulgar, the Geneua, and all other (in effect) haue written Athiopia for Chulh.

t. IIII.

An other place of EZECHIEL. C. 30. V.9. inlike manner mistaken.

Nd as the former, so is this place of Ezechiel mistaken, by being in this fort con-Auerted. In die illa egredientur nuncij a facie mea in trieribus ad conterendam Æthiopie confidentiam: Which place is thus turned in English by the Geneuans. In that day shall there messengers goe forth from mee in ships to make the carelesse Moores afraid. Now the Latine for (ships) hath the Greeke word trieres for triremes which are Galleyes of three bankes, and not ships. But that in this place the translation should have beene (as in the former) amended by vling the word Chuft, or Arabia for Aethiopia or the black Moores, euery man may see which meanly understandeth the Geography of the world, knowing, that to passe out of Agypt into Athiopia there neede no galleys nor ships, no more then to passe out of Northampton into Leicestershire: Atho- 20 pia being the conterminate Region with Ægypt, and not divided so much as by a river. Therefore in this place of Ezechiel it was meant, that from Egypt Nabuchodonofor should send galleys alongst the coast of the Red sca, by which an Army might bee transported into Arabia the happy and the stony (sparing the long wearisome march over all £gypt and the defarts of Pharan) which Army might thereby furprise them vnawares in their security and confidence. For when Nabuchodonosor was at Seucneh within a mile of Athiopia, hee needed neither Galley nor Shippe to passe into it: beeing all one large and firme land with Agypt, and no otherwise parted from it, then one Inland shire is parted from an other; and if hee had a fancy to have rowed up the river but for pleasure, hee could not have done it: for the fall of Nilus (tumbling ouer high and steepy mountaines) called Catadupa Nili were

Lastly, as I have already observed, the sonnes of every father seated themselves as neere together as possibly they could, Gomer and his sonnes in Asia the lesse; Iauan and his fonnes in Greece and the Islands adioyning; Shem in Persia and Eastward. So the sonnes and Grand-children of Chush from the river of Gehon (their fathers first feat) inhabited upon the fame, or upon some other co: tinuat unto it, as Nimrod and Hauilah on the one fide, and Saba, Sheba, and Sabtecha (with the rest) did on the other fide. And to conclude in a word, the Hebrewes had neuer any acquaintance or fellowship, any warre, treaty of peace, or other intelligence with the Athiopian blacke in moores, as is already remembred in the Chapter of Paradife.

†. V.

A Place Es AY 18. v. 1. inlike manner corrupted by taking Chush for Æthiopia.

Nd as in these places before remembred, so in divers other is the word Æthiopia put for Arabia or Chush, which puts the story (where it is so vinderstood) quite out of square, one kingdome thereby being taken for another. For what sense ! hath this part of Scripture Esay 18. Va terra Cymbalorum alarum qua est trans flumina Athiopia or according to the Septuagint in these words. Va terra nauium alarum que est trans fluuios Athiopia? Wo to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Athiopia, sending Ambassadors by sea, cuen in vessels of reeds upon the waters. Ve terrs ambrofe or a: Wee to the land of the fadie couft, faith Iunius. The former translators vnderstand it in this sense. That the waters are shadowed with the sailes, which are significatively called the wings of the ships, the other, that the Coast of the Sea was shadowed by the height of the land.

But to the purpose: That this land heere spoken of by the Prophet Esay is Egypt no Interpreter hath doubted. For they were the Egyptians that fent this mellage to the Israelites which Esay repeateth, and by the former translation every man may fee the transposition of Kingdomes: for hecreby Agypt is transported vnto the other fide of Athiopia, and Athiopia fet next vnto Iudea, when it is the land of Chulh 10 and Arabia indeede that lieth between Iudea and Agypt, and not Athiopia, which is feated vnder the Aguino Tiall line. And of this Beroaldus asketh a materiall question (to wit) what Region that should be, of which the Prophet speaketh, and placeth it beyond the rivers of Athiopia: Nam de ignota agi regione dici nequit. For it cannot hee said that he treateth of an unknowner egion. Now if Æthiopia it setse be under the Equinoctial line, with whom the Ienes had neuer any acquaintance, why should any man dreame that they had knowledge of Nations farre beyond it again, and beyond the rivers of Ethiopia? except wee shall impiously thinke that the Prophet spake hee knew not what, or vsed an impertinent discourse of those nations. which were not discouered in 2000, yearesafter, inhabiting as farre south as the 20 Cape of good hope, commonly knowne by the name of Bona efperanza.

That upon the like mistaking, both TERRHAKA in the story of SENA-CHERIB, and ZERA in the story of As A are unaduisedly made Æthiopians,

Nd by this translation is the story of Senacherih vtterly mistaken in the cause of

hisretrait. For Senacherih was first repulsed at Pelusium, at the very entrance 30 of Agypt from Iudea: when having certaine knowledge that Thirrhaea, (which all the interpreters call King of Athiopia) was on the way to fet on him, he beganne to 10fephl, 10.6.1. withdraw himselfe; and fearing to leave his Army in two parts, he sent threatning messengers to Ezechia King of Inda perswading him to submit himselfe: the tenour whereof is fet downe in the second of Kings in these words. Have any of the Gods of the Nations delivered his land out of the hands of the King of Abur? Where is the God of Hamah? &c.By which proud Ambassage, if he had obtained entrance into Hierusalem, hee then meant to have vnited that great Army before Hierufalem commanded by Rabscheh with the other which lay before Pelusium, a great City vpon the branch of Wilns next Arabia. For Senacherib had a ready mailtered the most part of all those Kings 2.19. 40 Cities in Iudas and Beniamin with a third Armie, (which himselfe commanded) being then at the fiege of Lebna. But vpon the rumour of that Arabian Armie led by their King Thirrhakeh (whom Iofephus calls Tharfices ) Rabfakeh hasted from the liege aniquito. of Hierusalem and found Senacherib departed from Lachis and set down before Lebna, Kings 2.19. which was afterwards called Eleuthoropolis as some have supposed. But while hee had ill successe at Pelusium and feared Thirrhakeh, God himselfe whome he least feared strooke his Army before Hierusclem by the Angell of his power, so as 185000. were found dead in the place as in the life of Ezechias is heereafter more largely written. And that this Army of Tirrakeh was from Arabia, Iofephus himselfe makes it plaine. For he confesseth in the tenth booke the first Chapter of the Iemes antiqui-50 ties, that it was come to Senacheribs knowledge, that the Army which was a foote

(both to relieue the Agyptians and the Iewes) marched towards him by the way of the Defert: Now the Defert which lay indifferent betweene Hierufalem and Pelu- 1.10.14. fium, was that of Pharan or Sur which also toucheth on the three A abiaes, to wit the stony, of which it is a part the Defect, and the Happy, and by no other way in-

deede could the Arabians come on to succour either Pelusium or Hierusalem. But, that there is any Defert betweene Pelujum and the South part of Agypt, hath nener yet beene heard of, or described by any Cosmographer or Historian. So then this Scripture of the second of Kings, verse the ninth, hath the same mistaking as the rest. For herethe word (Chulh) is also translated Athiopia; and in this sense have all the Interpreters, (but Iunius) expressed the beginning of the ninth verse. He heard also men say of THIRRHAKEH King of Ethiopia, &c. whereas it should haue beene thus converted with Iunius. Audiens autem de THIRRHAKEH Rege Chulhi, He heard also of THIRRHAKEH King of the Chulhites. For they were the Chustes and Arabians, whose houses and Citties were next the fire, and vpon whom to the very fmoke of Inda flaming was blowne, being their nearest neighbours; and so were not the Athiopian Black-Moores vnder the Aquinoctial, whom neither warre nor peace (which discouerethall Regions) euer found out, faith Planie. For this King was no more King of £thiopia then Zerah was, who inuaded Afa King of Iuda, with an Armic of a Million and 3000. Charriots. Indeede, how fuch an Armic and those Charriots should passe through all Egypt, (the Kings of Egypt being mightie Kings) let all men that know how these Regions are seated, and how farre distant, judge. For Princes doe not easily permit Armies of a Million to runne through them; neither was there euer any fuch strength of Black-Moores heard of in that part of the world, or elsewhere. Neither are these Lthiopians such trauai- 20 lers or conquerours; and yet is this King Zerah also called King of £thiopia. But the word Chulb being first so converted for Athopia, the rest of the Interpreters (not looking into the feates of Kingdomes, or the possibilities of attempts, or inuafions) followed one another in the former mistakings.

A farther exposition of the place. EsAI. 18.1.

Oncerning these wordes in that eighteenth Chapter of Esai, Nauium alarum, 20,1 ninged shops, (so the Septuagint turne it) or Cymbalo alarum (according to the Latine) failes whistling in the windes, or terra umbrofa or a (after Iunius ) the land of a shadowed coast, or the land shadowing with wings, as our English Geneua hath it. The two first interpretations of the Septuagint and St. Hierome have one sense in effect. For the failes are commonly called the wings of a ship; and we vie to say ordinarily when our fhips faile flowly, that thee wanteth wings: (that is) when her failes are either worne or too narrow; and we also yie the same phrase of the winde whistling in the failes. And it may be that the Egyptians employed fo many of those small thips. as their failes were faid to give a shadow over the Red Sea. But to make both interpretations good, Pintus (vpon Esai) affirmeth, that the word (Sabal) doth fignific to both to shadow and to gingle (which is) to make a kinde of Cymbaline sound; so as the meaning of this place (faith Pintus) is this. We to thee, O Egypt, which does promise to others safegard, under the shadow of thy wings, which (indeede) seemeth to agree with the argument of the eighteenth Chapter of Efai: and this phrase is often clfewhere vsed, as in the fixteenth Pfalme, Sub umbra alarum tuarum protege me, Defend me under the shadow of thy wings. The Boats of reede spoken of are of two kinds; either of basket; willow couered with hides (as anciently in Bittaine) or a tree made hollow in the bottome, and built vpon both fides with Canes. Of the one fort I haue seene in Ireland, of the other in the Indies.

ò. X I. Of the Plantation and Antiquities of Agypt.

That MIZRAIM the chiefe planter of Agypt, and the rest of the Sonnes of HAM, were feated in order, one by another.

He second Sonne of Ham was Mizraim, who (according to the place of a second brother) was sent somewhat farther off to inhabite. For Chush first possest Chaldea on the West side of Gehon chiefly: and from thence, as hee increased in people, so hee entred Arabia, and by time came to the border of the Red Sea, and to the Southeast-fide of In-

dea. Mizraim his brother (with Phut) past ouer into Africa. Mizraim held Ægypt: and Phut (as a third brother) was thrust farther off into Mauritania. Canaan tooke the Sea-coast, and held the side of Palastina: and these source brothers possess all that Tract of land, from Gehon in Chaldea, as farre to the West as the Mediterran Sea: comprehending all Arabia Deserta, and Petraa, all Canaan which embraceth Galilea, Samaria, and Iudea; with the two Egypts, whereof the nether is bounded by Memphis on the South, and by the Mediterran Sea on the North: and Thebaida (called the vpper Agypt) stretcheth it felfe toward the South as farre as Syene, the border of the Athiopians or Black-Moores. All the rest of the coast of Africa Westward Phut peopled; which brothers had not any other nation or familie that dwelt between them. And in the same manner did all their sonnes againe, and all the fonnes of the rest of Noahs children, fort themselves.

†: II.

Of the time about which the name of Agypt beganne to be knowne: and of the Ægyptians Lunarie yeares, which made their antiquities seeme the more fabulous.

This flourishing Kingdome possess by Mizraim, changed her ancient trame, and became Ægypt, at such time as Ægyptus (otherwise Ramesses, as some thinke) the some of Belus chased thence his elder brother Danaus, shifting him into that part of Greece now called Morea, by whom the Argines were made Danei, abandoning their proper names: which happened 877, yeares after the floud, in the time 40 of Iosua, as S. Augustine conjectureth out of Eusebius. But in Homers Odysses it appeareth that the Agyptians were fo called at the time of the Troian warre. And before this, Agypt was knowne by divers other names, as Oceana, Aria, Ofriana, &c. And Manethon (whom Iofephus citeth in his first booke against Appion) numbreth all the Kings of £gypt after Moles departure, who confumed 393. yeares. By which other men conjecture, that the Agyptians tooke on them that name 330. yeares after Iosua, and about 1000. yeares after the floud. But where Iosephus in the same booke taketh Ifrael to be those Hyesos, which he also calleth Pastores or Sheep-heards, which are faid to have raigned in £gypt 511. yeares: whom also he calleth his Ancesters, (meaning the Ancesters of the Iewes) in this I am sure he was grossly decei-50 ued, or that he vainely boafted for the Ifraclites had no fuch Dominion as Manethon faineth: nor abode in Egypt fo long a time by many yeares.

Of the Egyptian Antiquities there are many fancies in Trogus, Herodotus, Plato, Diod. Siculus, Mela, and others. For they affirme (faith Pomp. Mela) that there had raigned in Agypt 230. Kings before Amasis, who was contemporarie with Cyrus; and that they had memoric and storic of 13000, yeares; and that the startes had foure times changed their course, and the Sunne twice set in the East. These riddles are also rise among the Athenians and Areadians, who dare affirme that they are more ancient then supiter and the Moone, whereof Ourd:

The Arcadians the earth inhabited Ere yet the Moone did shine, or Ioue was bred.

But for those 13000 yeares it may well bee true: seeing it is certaine that the Agyptians reckon their yeares by Moneths, which makes after that account not about 1000. or 1100 yeares, whether wee take their Moneths or Lunarie yeares to haue beene of the first kinde of 27. dayes and eight houres; or otherwise 20. dayes and tweller houres; or after any other of those such control in the first kinde of 27. dayes and eight houres; or otherwise 20. dayes and tweller houres; or after any other of those such as discribing the series of their Lunarie yeares.

Of certaine vaine affortions of the Antiquitie of the Agyptians.

CERARDYS MERCATOR in his Chromologie, reasoneth for the Agyptians antiquitie in this manner: That the fixteenth Dynastite (where Euglebius begins to reckon the Agyptians times) had beginning with the generall floud: and that therefore the first of the other fifteene reached the creation, or some after it. To which coniecture of Marcator, Pererius maketh this answere. That therein Marcator was first deceived, because he taketh it for granted, that the beginning of the sixteenth Dynastite was at once with the generall floud: which Euglebius maketh 292. yeares after, and in the time of Abraham. Secondly, Mercator maketh the beginning of the 30 sheep-heards Dynastita (being in number the 17.) in the time of their first King, Saltia, to have been ein the yeare of the world 1846. which Euglebius findeth in the worlds age 2140. For the 16. Dynastita was begunne but in the 292, yeare after the floud, as they account, and continued 190, yeares. Thirdly, whereas Mercator maketh every Dynastita to endure 115, yeares, Euglebius reckoneth many of them at less then 100, yeares: for the 28, had but 6, yeares; the 29, but 20, and the 30, but Now Annius in his Supplement of Manethon affirmeth, That all these 15. Dynaflies lasted but. 162. yeares: and that the first of the 15. beganne but in the 131.

yeare after the floud: so as where Mercator makes all the 15. to precede the shoul, 40 and the 164 to have beene then in being at the time of the shoul, Annius makes them all after it. But the contrarietie of fallhood cannot bee hidden, though disguised.
For Annius had sorgotten his former opinion and affertion, that it was in the 131.
yeare that Ninnad with the sonnes of Noab came into the Valley of Shimara: so hee forgets the time which was consumed in the building of Babel: and that before the consultion of speech there was no dispersion, nor farre-off plantation at all. And though he haltily conveyed Gomer into Bale, and Tubal into Spaine, in the 10. yeare of Ninnad raigne: (which was ten yeares after his arrivall into Babylania) yet herein he is more vnadussed. For he makes **Expt* posses, the son all government established

Against Perentus: that it is not unlikely, but that Ægyptwas peopled within 200, years after the creation, at least, that both it, and the most parts of the world were peopled before the sloud.

B Vt whereas Percrius seeketh to ouerthrow this Antiquitie of the Agyptians, touching their Dynsslies, (which Eusseims doth not altogether destroy, but leften I doe not finde any great strength in this opinion of Percrius; (to wit) that it was either unlikely or impossible that Agypt should bee peopled within 100. or 200. yeares after Adam, in the first age. And whereas he suppose that it was not inhabited at all before the generall should, I doe verily beleeue the contraries and that not only of Agypt, but the better part of all the world was then peopled: Percrius his wordes are these. Quamado enim primos mundi ducentos, veletiam centum annos Adam i proles adeò multiplicari potuit; vi ad Agyptum vsque habitandum & complendum propagatas sit, & En bow could the children of ADAM is somatisped in the sirst two hundred, or in the sirst two hundred, or in the sirst six (sith Percrius) we must also confessed as to inhabite and sill Agypt? For allowing this (sith Percrius) we must also confesse, that there were then 20 both the Asyptians, and other Nations.

Now feeing that the Scriptures are filent herein, and that it is no point of our fauing beleefe; it is lawfull for enery manto bee guided in this and the like quefitions by the beft reafon, circumfance, and likelyhood; and herein, as in the reft, I proteft that I doe not gainfay any mans opinion out of any croffing or cauelling humour: for I thinke it the part of enery Chriftian, rather to reconcile differences, where there is possibilitie of vuinor, then out of froward subtlette, and prejudicate resolutedness, and any contentions.

First, therefore to this opinion, that Agypt was not planted so some after Adam, no, not at all before the floud, I say that there is no reason why wee should give a 30 leffe increase to the sonnes of Adam, then to the sonnes of Noah. For their length of life, which exceeded those which came after the floud double, and (after a few years) treble, is an infallible proofe of their strength and abilitie, to beget many children: and at that time they observed no degrees of kindred, nor confanguinitie. And that there was a speedie increase of people, and in great numbers, it may in some for tappeare by this, that Cain, who (being fearefull that the death of Abel would haue been reuenged on him ) withdrew himselfe from the rest, which were afterward begotten, and dwelt in the land of Nod, and there, by the helpe of his owne iffues built a Cittie, (called Enoch) after the name of his first borne. Now if it bee gathered that Nimrod came into the Valley of Shinaar with so many multitudes, as suf-40 ficed to build the Cittie and Tower of Babel: and that to this increase there was giuen but 130. yeares by Berofus, and after the account of the Scriptures (reckoning, as it is commonly wnderstood, by the birth of Arphaxad, Selah, Heber, and Phalegh) but one hundred and one yeare! I see no cause to doubt, but that in the infancie of the first age, when the bodies of men were most perfect, euen within 130. yeares, the same (if not a greater) number might be increased; and so within 70. yeares after (that is, by such time as the world had stood 200. yeares) aswell Assiria, Syria, and £gypt might be possess before the floud, as they were within the same or lesse time after it. Neither doth it agree with the circumstance, or true storie of the Babylonian and Assyrian Empire, that all those people, which were increased in the first 50 hundred or 130. yeares after the floud, came into Shinaar and Babylonia. For that euer Noah himselfe came out of the East, as there is no Scripture or Authoritieto prone it, so all probable coniecture and reason it selse denies it. Againe, those multitudes and powerfull numbers, which Semiramis (but the third from Nimrod) found in India, considered with her owne Armic of three Millions, (and shee left not all her Kingdomes emptie) doe well proue, that if the world had fuch plentie of people in so few yeares after the floud, it might also bee as plentifully filled in like time before it. For after their owne account Ninus gouerned Babylenia and Affyria but 292. yeares after the floud of Woah. And these troupes of Semiramis were gathered out of all those Easterne Kingdomes, from Media to the Mediterran Sea: when there had now past from the floud to the time of this her inuation, somewhat leffe or more then 360. yeares: for much more time the true Chronologie cannot allow; though I confesse, that in respect of the strange greatnesse of Semiramis Armie, and the incredible multitudes gathered, this is as short a time as can well be giuen. And if but the one halfe be true of that which is said, That her Armie consi- 10 sted of 1300000, footmen, and 500000, horsemen, it must needes bee, that long before Semiramis raigne, the greatest part of Asia (whence her huge Armie was gathered) was full of people : yea Arabia it selfe (much part whereof is barren) must long before this time of Semiramis have beene plentifully peopled; when Ninus hauing a determination to make himselfe Master of all Nations, entred (notwithstanding) in league with the King thereof: whom therefore he either feared, or fought his affiftance. And if Arabia were then so well replenished, I see no cause but Agypt might also be peopled. Now if wee may believe Trogus Pompeius (Epitomiz'd by Instine) Agypt was a most flourishing and magnificent Nation before Wines was borne. For these be his owne wordes, speaking of Winus. Fuere quidem tempe- 20 ribus antiquioribus V E X O R I S Rex Agypti, &c. But there were in times more ancient VEXORIS King of Ægypt, and TANAIS King of the Scythians: of which the one inuaded Pontus, the other Egypt. And how full of people all that part of the world was, the conquests of Ninus witnesse, who subdued with no small force the Armenians, the Medes, and afterwards the Bactrians; yea, all that whole body of Asia on this fide Incia. For Diodorus out of Ctefias numbreth the Armie, wherewith Ninus inuaded Zoroaster, at 1 700000. footmen, and 200000. horsemen: and the stories generally shew, that though Zoroasters Armie was farre short of this, yet it was greater then any that those parts of the world ener since beheld. But to what end should I seeke for forraine authoritie? for no man doubteth but that £gypt was possest by 30 Mizraim, the fonne of Ham; and that it was an established Kingdome, filled with many Citties in Abrahams time, the Scriptures tell vs. And fure to prepare and cultiue a defolate and ouergrowne ground, to beautifie it with many Citties, Lawes, and pollicies, cannot be esteemed a labour of a few dayes; and therefore it must bee inhabited in a leffe time then 200. yeares after the floud; and in the same time (if not in a shorter) before the floud. For if so many Millions of men were found within 300. yeares after the generall floud; so as not only Babylon, and Assyria, Bactria, Armenia, Media, Arabia, Agypt, Palastina, yea the farre-off Lybia on the one side, and India on the other, and Scythia (inferiour to neither) were all filled : into what fmall corners could then all those nations be comprest, which 1656, yeares brought 40 forth before the floud? euen necessitie, which cannot bee resisted, cast the abundance of mens bodies into all parts of the knowne world; especially, where Death forbare the Father, and made no place for the Sonne, till he had beheld living Na-

Of some other reasons against the opinion of PERERIVS.

F Or what a strange increase did the long lines of the first age make, when they 50 continued 800 or 900 yeares. Surely, we have reason to doubt, that the world could not containe them, rather then that they were not spred ouer the world. For let vs now reckon the date of our lines in this age of the world: wherein if one exceede 50. yeares, ten for one are cut off in that passage, and yet we finde no want of people; nay, we know the multitude fuch, as if by warres or pestilence they were not fometimes taken of by many thousands, the earth with all the industrie of man could not give them foode. What strange heapes then of soules had the first ages, who enjoyed 800, or 900, yeares, as aforefaid. These numbers, I say, cannot bee counted nor conceiued. For it would come to the fame reckoning in effect, as if all those which have beene borne in Brittaine since 3, or 4, hundred yeares before the Norman Conquest (fauing fuch as by accident or by violence were cut off) were now aliue; and if to these there were added as many as by Polygamie might have beene increased. For (to omit, that the Giants and mightie ones of the first age observed no law of matrimonie) it is to be thought that those louers of the world and of pleafure, when they knew the long and liberall time which Nature had given them, would not willingly or hastily present themselves to any danger which they could flie from or eschew. For what humane argument hath better persivation to make men carelesse of life, and searelesse of death, then the little time which keepes them afunder, and that short time also accompanied with so many paines and diseases, which this enuious old age of the world mingleth together, and foweth with the

Now if that Berofus or Annius may be alleaged for fufficient Authours, whom Pererius himselfe in this question citeth, then is it by them affirmed, and by Iosephus 20 confirmed, that the Cittie of Enoch was feated neare Lybanus in Syria: and if other parts of Syria were peopled in Cains time, I fee no caufe why Palastina (which is alfo a Province of Syria) and Ægypt (which neighbourethit) could bee left defolate both all the life time of Cain, and all those times betweene his death and the floud, which were by estimation 700. or 800. yeares. And sure though this Fragment of Berofus with Annius his Comment bee very ridiculous in many places (the ancient Coppies being corrupted or lost) yet all things in Berofus are not to bee rejected. Therefore St. Hierome for fuch Authours gives a good rule. Bona eorum eligamus, vitemus contraria, Let vs choose what is good in them, and reject the rest. And certainly in the very beginning of the first Booke, Berofus agreeth (in effect) with Mofes, touch-30 ing the generall floud: and in that first part Berosus affirmeth, that those mightie

Men and Giants which inhabited Enoch, commanded ouer all Nations, and fubiceted the vniuerfall world; and though that phrase (of all the world) be often vsed in the Scriptures for a part thereof; as in the second of the AEts. That there were dwelling at Hierufilem Iewes, menthat feared God of every Nation under heaven: vet by wordes which follow in Berofus, it is plaine that his wordes and fense were the same: for hee addeth from the Sunnes rifing to the Sunnes fetting, which cannot be taken for any fmall part thereof. Againe, we may fafely conjecture, that Woah did not part and proportion the world among his fonnes at aduenture, or left them as discouerers, but directed them to those Regions which he formerly knew had beene inhabited.

40 And it cannot be derived that the earth was more passable and easie to traugile ouer before the floud, then after it. For Pererius himselfe confesseth that Attica (by reafon of mudde and flime which the water left vpon the earth) was vninhabited 200. yeares after ogyges floud, whereby wee may gather that there was no great pleafure in palling into farre Countries after the general deluge, when the earth lay (as it were) incopfed for 100. or 130. yeares together. And therefore was the face thereof in all coniecture more beautifull, and leffe cumber fome to walke ouer, in the first age then after the generall overflowing.

Of the wordes of Moses, Gen. 10. v. vitimo, whereupon Pererivs grounded his opinion.

Aftly, whereas Pererius drawes this argument out of the last Verscof the tenth Lof Genesis. And out of these were the Nations divided after the floud : Quo significatur talem divisionem non fuisse ante dilunium, By which it appeareth (faith Pererius) that there wasno such division before the floud; which he also seeketh to confirme out of the efeuenth of Genesis, because the division of tongues was cause of the dispersion of the people. This consequence, quo significatur, &c. seemeth to me very weake; the text it felfe rather teaching the contrarie : for out of thefe (faith Moses) were the Nations divided in the earth after the floud; inferring, that before the floud the Nations were divided out of others, though after the floud out of these only. But whatsoever fendemay be gathered from this place, yet it can no way be drawne to the times before the floud, or to any plantation or diuision in that age: for if there were none else among whom the earth could be divided after the floud, but Weahs Sonnes. wherein doth that necessarie division controle the planting of the world before it? And whereas it is alleaged that the confusion of speech was the cause of this disperfion, it is true, that it was fo for that prefent; but if Babel had neuer beene built, nor 20 any confusion of languages at all, yet increase of people and time would have enforced a farther-off and generall plantation : as Berofus faics well, that when mankinde were exceedingly multiplyed, adcomparandas nouas sedes necessitas compellebat, They were driven by necessitie to seeke new habitations. For wee finde (as is before said) that within 300, yeares after the floud, there were gathered together into two Armies, fuch multitudes as the valley about Babylon could not have fultained those numbers with their increase for any long time : all Asia the greater and the leffer; all Stythia, Arabia, Palastina, and Egypt, with Greece, and the Islands thereof; Mauritania and Lybia being also at that time fully peopled. And if we beleeue Berofus, then not only those parts of the world, but (within 1 40. yeares after the floud) Spaine, Italie, 30 and France were also planted : much more then may wee thinke, that within 1656. yeares before the floud, in the time of the chiefe ftrength of mankinde, they were replenished with people. And certainely seeing all the world was ouerflowne, there were people in all the world which offended.

t. VII.

A conclusion, resoluing of that which is most likely, touching the Ægyptian antiquities: with somewhat of PHVT (another Sonne of HAM) which peopled Lybia.

Herefore, for the Antiquitie of the Egyptians, as I doe not agree with Mercator, nor judge with the Vulgar, which give too much credit to the Agyptians antiquities: so I doe not thinke the report of their Antiquities so fabulous, as either Pererius or other men conceiue it. But I rather incline to this, That Agypt being peopled before the floud, and 200. or 300. yeares, more or leffe after Adam, there might remaine vnto the Sonnes of Mizraim some monuments (in Pillers or Altars of stone or mettall) of their former Kings or Gouernours: which the Leyptians hauing added to the lift and rolle of their Kings after the floud, in succeeding time (out of the vanitie of glorie, or by some corruption in their Priests) something beyond the 50 truth might be inserted. And that the memorie of antiquitie was in such sort prescrued, Berosus affirmeth it of the Chaldeans, and so doth Epigenes. For they both write that the vie of Letters and the Art of Astronomie was knowne to the Babylonians 3634. yeare before Alexanders conquest : and this report Annius findeth to agree and reach to the time of Enolb, who was borne 1034. yeares before the floud, and wrote of the worlds destruction, both by Water and Fire : as also of Christ his comming in judgement, as St. Inde hath witneffed. But leaving these Antiquities to other mens judgements, and enery man to his owne reason, I will conclude this plantation of Egypt. It is agreed by all, that it was peopled by Mizraim, and that it tooke the name of Egypt from Egyptus the sonne of Belus, as aforesaid. Being divided into two Regions, that part from Memphis or Nicopolis to the Mediterran Sea, was called the inferiour Egypt; furnamed also Delta because the seuerall branches of Nilus breaking afunder from one body of the River, gave it the forme 10 of the Greeke letter Delta, which is the forme of a Triangle. That branch, which ranne toward the North-east and embraced the Sea, next vnto the Deserts of Sur and Pharan, had on it the Cittle of Pelulium, where Senacherib was repulfed: The other branch, which yeelded it selfe to the salt water towards the North-west, is beautified by that famous Cittie of Alexandria: The upper part of Agypt is bounded betweene Memphis and Syene neare Athiopia, and had the name of Thebaida, of that ancient Cittle of Thebes, which (according to Homer) was adorned with 100. gates : and therefore called Civitas centum portarum ; and by the Greekes Diospolis; in the Scriptures 20-hamon, which fignifieth multitudes of inhabitants, exceeding beliefe. Iosephus cals Egypt Mersin of Mizraim: and Herodotus affirmes that it had Ieseph. I.t. Ant. 20 once the name of Thebais.

Phut the third sonne of Ham tooke the next portion of land to his brother Mizraim, and inhabited Lybia: whose people were anciently called Phutei; (fayth 10sephus ) and Plinie mentioneth the river Fut in Mauritania : which river from the L.S.c.I. mountaine Atlas (knowne to the inhabitants by the name of Dyris) he maketh to be distant the space of two hundred miles. It also appeareth in the thirtieth chapter of Ezechiel, that Phut, Chulh and Lud were contermini and affociates with the Egyptians.

Of the bounds of the land of Canaan: with the names of his eleuen sonnes.

A NAAN (the fourth sonne of Ham) possest all that Region called by the Romanes Palastina; in the Scriptures Galilea, Samaria, and Iudea; in the latter times knowne by the name of the Holy Land and Inrie: the limits whercof are preciselie set downe by Moses, Genesis the tenth. Then the border of the Canaanites was from Zidon as thou goest to Gerar untill Azzah, and as thou goest unto Sodome and Gomorh, and Admah, and Zeboim, euen unto Lasha. Now how soeuer these words of the Hebrew Text (as thougoest) be converted, Moses meaning was that Gerar was the South bound of Canaan and Zidon the North; Sodome and Gomorha the East, and the other Citties 50 named stood on the frontiers thereof. For Gerar standeth in a right line from Gaza in the way of £gypt, the vttermost territoric of Canaan Southward : and this was ## of the portions of ZIDON and HETH.

Z IDON the first borne of Canaan, built the famous Cittie of Zidon in Phanicia, which afterward fell in partition to the Tribe of Aster: for Aster, Zabulon, and Nephtali had a great part of the ancient Phanicia distributed among them; but the Assertes could never obtaine Zidon it selfe. The second sonne of Canaan was Heth or Cethus: of whom came the Hethites, or Hittites, one of those seuen principall Nations (commaunders of Canaan) appointed by God to be rooted out; namely, the Gergesites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, and Heuites, and the Iebusites. The Hittites inhabited about Berfabe, and towards Hebron neere the Torrent Befor, and about Gerar, which Moses maketh the vttermost limit of Canaan, having the Desert of Pharan to 20 the South : for about Bersabe (otherwise Puteus iuramenti) foure miles from Gaza dwelt Heth and his posteritie, as farre to the Northeast as Hebron, and Manre; and of Ephraim the Hittite did Abraham buie the field of Sarahs buriall. Of which Nation Rebecca bewailed her felfe to Isaac, saying, That shee was wearie of her life for the daughters of HETH. The Giants Makim were of these Hittites, a strong 4.Kings. 67. v. 6. and fierce Nation, whose entertainement by the Kings of Israel against them the Syrians greatly feared : as in the fourth of the Kings; Ifrael hath hired against ws the Kings of the Hittites.

t. III.

Of the Iebusites and Amorites.

TEBUSEUS, the third some of Canaan, of whom came the Iebusites, and whose principall feat was Iebus, (afterward Hierusalem) were also a valiant and stubborne Nation, and held their Cittie and the Countrie neere it, till fuch time as Danid by Gods affiftance recovered both : yet were not the Iebusites extinguished, but were Tributaries to Salomon.

Amoreus was the fourth some of Canaan, of whom the Amorites tooke name, who inhabited that land to the East of Iordan below the Sea of Galilee, having Ar- 50 non and the mountaines of Galaad on the East, and Iordan on the West : of whom og (King of Basan) and Sihon (ouerthrowne by Moses) were Princes.

The Amorites had also many other habitations dispersed within the boundes of Canaan: as behind Libanus in the edge of Calefyria, or Syria Libanica. They had also their being in the mountaines of Inda, and in Idumaa neere the Metropolis thereof, Deut.1. called Duma. And hereof it came that all the Canaanites were fometime called Amorites:as in Genesis the fifteenth, for the wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full. And that this was also a powerfull Nation, wee finde in the Prophet Amos; Tet destroied I Amos. 2 the Amorite before them, whose heighth was like the heighth of a Cadar, and he was strong as the Oakes.

t. IIII.

Of the Gergesites, Heuites and Harkites.

The fift sonne of Canaan was Gergeseus or Gergeseun, (otherwise Girgass) who in-habited on the East side of the lake of Tiberias, or the Sea of Galilee, where Ptolomie sets the Cittie Gerasa, which Iosephus calles Gesera in the territorie of Decapolis. Here it was that Christ disposses the possessed with Divels; and the Gergefites defired him to depart their coaftes: because their swine filled with the guill soirits drowned themselves in the Seaof Galilee. Gergeseus also built Berytus (sometime Geris) afterward Falix Iulia, three miles from the river Adonis in Phanicia; in which the Romanes held a garrison : and to which Augustus gaue manie large 20 priuiledges.

Heucus the fixth fonne; and Father of the Heuites, inhabited vnder Libanus ncere Emath. These Heuites, howsoeuer the Caphthorim expelled a good part of them (as in Deuteronomie the second is remembred) yet many of them remained all the warre of Iosua, and afterward to the time of Salomon. For God was not pleased vtterly to roote out these Nations, but they were sometimes made Tributaries to the Israelites, and at other times served (in their falling away from the true worship of God) to afflict them : for as it is written Iudges the third; They remained. to prove Israel by them, whether they would obay the Commandements of God.

The feuenth fonne was Araceus or Harki, who betweene the foote of Libanus 30 and the Mediterran Sea, (ouer against Tripolis) built the Cittie of Archas, Arce, or Arca, afterwards Arachis.

t. / V.

of Sini and Aruadi.

CINEVS the eighth Sonne Hierofolymitanus fets at Caparorfa, which Ptolomie finds In Indianot farre from Iebus; to the South thereof, faith Innius. But it is more probable, that Sineus founded Sin, which S. Hierome cals Sim; Ptolomie Simyra: Me-40 la and Plinie Simyrus: Brochard Sycon, (called Synochis) neare Arca. Pererius thinkes that Sineus inhabited the Deferts of Sinai or thereabout; but hereof there is no other certaintie then the report of Brochard, who tooke vew of all these places, affirming that Sineus built Synochis, as Zidon built Zidon. There is also another Nation of Cini (written with the letter C. otherwise Kenai) who descended of Hobab the Sonne of Raquel the Madianite, who affifted the Israelites in their conduction through the wildernesse of Pharan. But these Cinai were admitted among the Israelites, and had a portion of Land with the Nephtalims, belied their habitations with the Inde. 4. Amalekites: against these Cinai Balaam prophecied, that they should be destroyed by 10/110.19.33; the Allyrians.

The ninth Sonne was Aradeus or Aruadeus, who in the Isle of Aradus built the Gul. Tyr. Vitria. Cittie Arados: opposite against which Island on the maine of Phanicia, they founded another Cittie of that name, which for opposition was afterwards called Antaradus. To this Cittie came S. Peter (faith Clement) and in this Isle preached the Gospell: and founded a Church in honour of our Ladie: but wee finde no such worke of his in the Acts of the Apoftles. Both the letwo were very famous; and places of skilfull Scamen: whom Executed remembreth in his prophecies against the Tyrians, The inhabitants of Zidon and Aruad were thy Marriners.

t. VI. of Zemari.

F Samareus, or Zemari, the tenth Sonne, there are divers opinions. Some thinke that he first inhabited in Caelesyria at Edessa, and founded Samaraim, 10 which in Iosua is placed in the Tribe of Beniamin. There is also Samaraijm (of the Beroat in Chron. fame Orthographie) vpon the mountaines of Ephraim (faith Beroaldus) mentioned in the second of Chronicles c. 13. v.4. which the Latine converteth amisse (faith hee) by Semeron. The Hierofolymitan Paraphrast makes Samareus (of whom were the Perizzites) the parent of the Emissani, which Plinie cals the Hemiseni, in Calefyria; and it may be that it was their first habitation, and that they afterwards inhabited those other places before remembred. But that they founded Samaria, both the Hebrew Orthographic, and this place in the first of Kings (speaking of Omri) disproueth. And he bought the mountaine Samaria or Shemeron of one SHENER, for two talents of siluer, and built in the mountaine : and called the name of the Cittie which he built, after the 20 name of SHEMER, Lord of the mountaine Samaria. But of all these places I shall speake more at large in the conquest of the holy Land, by the children of Israel. Of whomfoeuer the Samaritanes were descended, sure I am, that they were euer a perfidious Nation, and base: for as long as the state of the Iewes stood vp, they alwaies called themselues lewes: when it suffered or sanke, they then vtterly denyed to be of that Nation or Familie; for at fuch time as they were returned from their first cap-tiuitie, they became a mixt Nation; partly of the Colonies of the Affyrians; and partly of the naturals.

T Helast of Canzans Sonnes was Hamatheus, or (according to the Hebrew) Hamath of Hamath (bith Recodding Carbin) (1) mathi, of Hamath: (faith Beroaldus) of which (the aspiration taken away) the fame is pronounced Emath, whereof Hamatheus was parent. Infephus and St. Hierome confound Emath with Antioch, not that Antioch which standeth on the River Orontes, on the frontier of Comagena, betweene the mountaine Cassius and the Pronince of Pieria, and Seleucis, of which S. Peter was Bilhop, and in which S. Luke and Ignatius were borne: but Intioch, furnamed Epiphania, as Beroaldus supposeth, 40 which standeth betweene Apamea and Emesain Cassotis. Yet, indeede, Emath cannot be taken for either: for both that Antioch vpon Orontes, and that which neighboureth Emela, are farther off feated from Canaan, then euer any of those Nations ftragled. And whereas S. Hierome fetteth Emath, which hee confoundeth with Epiphania, in the Tribe of Nephtali; it is manifest, that Epiphania, which standeth to the North of Emela, hath all the Prouince of Landicea, betweene it and any part of the land divided. And if Libanon it felfe were not shared among the Tribes, then could not Epiphania belong vnto them: for both the Provinces Landicea and Libanita, are between Epiphania and any part of the holy Land . and therefore Emath fo taken could not be a part of Nephtali, as in the thirteenth of Iofua is directly proued. 50 For Infina counting the lands that remained unpossest, reckoneth all mount Libanon towards the Sunne-rifing from Baalgad under mount Hermon, untill we come to Hamath. And this reason (among others) is vsed, that Emath was not in Nephtalim, or any way belonging to the children of Ifrael: because Dauidaccepted the presents of Tohu King of Emath, and (therewithall) conditions of peace: which hee would not have done, if that Territoric had ever belonged to the children of Ifrael, but would haue recoursed it without composition, and by strong hand, as he did the rest. But this Argument (as I take it) hath no great waight. For if the promise which God made be confidered, as it is written in Deuteronomie, then might Emath bee compre- 6.11. v.34; hended, though feated altogether without the bounds of the Land promifed, according to the description of Moles and Iosua : for Emath is indeede situate on the other fide of the mountaine of Hermon, which joyneth to Libanus and is otherwise called Iturea. But whereas Hamath is named in Iofua the 19.0.25. and written in the Latine conversion Emath, therein (faith Beroaldus) was S. Hierome mistaken. Emath or Iturea is that ouer the mountaines, and the Citrie in Nephtalim should be written Hanath: and so the Septuagint (vinderstanding the difference) write it Ammath and not Emath, the fame which indeede belonged to the 2Vephtalims, leated on the fouth fide of Libanus, to the East of Affedim: which Cittie S. Hierome writes Emath, Iofephus Hamath, others Emathin, or Amatheos, and the people Amathein; of which (as I take it) Rabfakeh vaunteth in the fecond of Kings. Where is the God of Hamath. C.18. 6 193

ė T.

That the most of the Sonnes of CHV's Hi were feated in Arabia the Happie: and of the Sabaans that robbed Ios: and of the Queene that came to SALOHON,

Es A or Sabs was the eldeft Sonne of Chufe, the eldeft Sonne of Hum, to make a difference betweene him and his Nephew Sheba, the Sonne of his brother Raams, or Regma (or Ragma after Montanus) his name is written with a fingle (S) Samech, and Sheba the Sonne of Regma 40 within (S) aspirate, which is the Hebrew Schin. Seba the eldest sonne of Chulh, Regmahis brother, and Shebathe sonne of Regma possest both the shores of Arabia Fælix. Saba tooke that part toward the Red Sea, as nearest his Father Chufb, and the land of the Chufites: Regma and Sheba the East coast of the same Arabia which looketh into the Gulfe of Persia; of which Plinie. Sabei Arabum populi propter thura clarissimi ad utrag, maria porrect is gentibus habitant, The Sabaans people of Arabia, famous for their Frankintense, extending their Nations dwell along both the Seas (to wit) the Persian, and the Arabian, or Red Sea. This Countrie was afterwards called Arabia, à populi mixtione, faith Postellus. To this agreeth Prolomie, who setteth the Cittle of Saba towards the Arabian or Red Sea, and the Cittle Rhegama towards 30 the Persian, with whom also wee may leave Sabta: for so much Montanus gathereth out of Ptolomie, because he remembreth a Nation (called Stabei) neare the Persian Sea; and Massabatha which descended of them. But Montanus hath sent Regma, or (as he cals him Rahma) into Carmania, for which I fee no reason. Iosephus, who only attended his owne fancies, hath banished Saba or Sebato the border of Ethiopia.

But Beroaldus thinks it strange, that the Sabai, which stole away lobs Cattle, should runne through all Legypt and all Arabia Petrea, and finde out lob in Traconitis betweene Palestina and Calesyria 1200. miles off. Now as this coniecture was more then ridiculous, so doe I thinke, that neither the Sabai on the Red Sea, northose toward the Persian Sea, could by any meanes execute the stealth upon 10b, which socuer Beroalaus shall take for nearest. But these were the Sabai of Arabia the Desert, where Guilandinus Meichior affirmeth out of his owne experience, that the Cittie Saba is seated: the same which Ptolomie cals Sane, now Sems sand from this Saba in Arabia the Desert, came those Magior Wisemen which worthipped Christ, faith Melchior, whose wordes are these. The Magi came neither out of Mesopotamia (as 10 Chryfostome, Hierome, and Ambrofe Supposed) nor out of Arabiathe Happie, as many wife men doe beleeue, but out of Sabain Arabia the Defert : which Cittie when my felfe was there was (as I judged it) called Semifcafac. And to approue this opinion of Guilandinus it appeareth that these Shabai were neighbours to lob, and lay fit to inuade and rob him. For both the other Nations (aswell those on the Persian Sea, as those on the Red Sea) are so disloyed with large Deferts, as there is no possibilitie for strangers to paffe them, especially with any numbers of Cattle, both in respect of the mountaines, of the fands, and of the extreme want of water in those parts. Vbi nec homines nec bestia videntur, nec aues, imò nec arhores, nec germen aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxosi, altisimi, asperimi, Where there are found neither men nor beasts, no not somuch as birds, 20 or trees, nor any passure or grasse, but only sharpe, and high stonie, and craggiemountaines. Beroaldus and Pererius conceine, that the Queene of Saba which came to vilite Salomon, was of the Sabei on the East fide of Arabia Fælix; but the contrarie seemeth more probable, and that thee was Queene of Saba towards the Red fea: for Salemon at that time commanding all that part of Arabia Petraa, twixt Idumea and the Red Sea, as farre downe as Midian or Madian, and Ezion Gaber: and this Queenc of Saba which inhabited the West part of Arabia Fælix, being his neighbour might without any farre trauaile enter his Territories, free from all danger of furprise by any other Prince or Nation.

But to avoide tediousnesse, it is manifest that Seba or Saba, Sabta, Raama, or Regma, 20 with his Sonnes Sheba and Dedan, and Sabtern, were all the possessions of Arabia the Happic and the Defert: only Haulah and Nimrod dwelt together on the East side of Chulb, who held Arabia Petrea. Now for Sabta, there is found of his name the Pl'n 1.12. c.14. Cittie of Sabbatha or Sabota in the fame Arabia: of which both Plinie and Ptolomie; Ptol 1216 6.Ajie. who withall nameth Sabotale, within the wals whereof there were fometimes found fixtie Temples. Ezechiel ioyneth the Father and the Sonne together, The Merchants of Sheba and Raama were thy Merchants. And that they were the Easterne Arabians their merchandise witnesseth, formerly repeated in the Chapter of Paradise. For losephus his fancies, that Saba was the parent of the Athiopians about Meroe, and Sabta of the Athiopians Aslabari, they be not worthic any further answere then 40 hath already been given: especially seeing these Citties preserving the memoric of the names of Saba and of Sabta in Arabia were yet remaining in Ptolomies time, though in some letters changed. As also in the coasts adioyning, the names of other of the brethren of the familie of Cufb, with little alterations are preserved. In Arabia the Descrit is found the Cittie Saba or Saue, (now Semi/ca/ac) with the Cittie of Rhegana for Rhegma; and the Nation by Ptolomie himselfe called Raabeni of Raamah. In Arabia the Happie is found the Cittie of Rhegama, and Rabana, which also keepeth the found of Rhegma, the Citie of Saptha or Saptah, not far from the East coast of Arabia: as also the Metropolis and chiefe citie, in the body of the South part of Arabia, called without difference or alteration Sabatha; and to the West of Sabatha towards the 50 Red Sea the great Citie of Saba; and the Nation adioyning, Sabai: and to the fouth thereof against oward the streight entrance of the Red Sea, the Region of S. ibe. JOSEPHVS his opinion of DEDAN, one of the iffue of CHVSH to have beene feated in the West Athiopia, disproved out of EZECH:

A Nd whereas Iosephus (whom in this St Hierome followeth, as not curious here-in) sent Dedan the sonne of Raamah into West Athiopia, it is strange that Ezezhiel should couple Sheba, Raamah, and Dedan together; Dedan in the 15. verse, and Sheba and Raamab in the 22 verses to be the merchants of Tyre, if Dedan had dwelt in West Athiopia, which is distant from Raamah and Sheba (the habitation of his father and brother) aboue 4000 miles. Besides which the Marchandise that the Dedanites brought to Tyre doth not make them naked Black-mores. For they of Dedan (faith Ezechiel) were thy merchants in pretious clothes for thy charriots; and these We-s sterne Ethiopians neuer faw cloth, till the Portugals seeking those Coastes traded with them: the merchandise of the Countrie beeing Hides, Elephants teeth, some 20 Gold and Amber, Ciuct cattes, and Rice, but nothing at all of any manufacture: and all these they exchanged for linnen, or iron cheefly.

But in those daies the West part of Africa within the body of the land was known onely by imagination: and, beeing vnder the burnt Zone was held vninhabitable. And therefore that the Negros of the West Athiepia, which inhabite about Serra Liona, or Niger, could either paffe by Sea or Land to Tyre in the bottome of the Mediterran Seil, were a strange, or rather a foolish fancie. Now to put it out of dispute that Dedan also dwelt by the rest of the children of Chush, which seates they held by that name in the time of Hieremie the Prophet let vs heare Hieremie his own words. Flie yee inhabitants of Dedan, for I have brought the destruction of Es AV upon him. 30 Hecreby it appeareth that Dedan was a neighbour to the Idumwans: and Idumwa is a Province of Arabia Petraa: and Dedan which dwelt on the North part of Arabia Falix, joyned in that part to Petras, the feat of his Grand-father Chufb, which neighbor-hood and fellow thip of Dedan and the Idumwans is also confirmed by Ezechie! of theissure of Mizraim: and of the place of Hieremie Chap.

9. Vers. 7.

Fter Chulb it followeth to speake of Mizraims sonnes, whose names

(saith Saint Angustime) were plurall, to signifie the Nations, which the came of them. Ludim the eldest sonne of Mizraim was the father of the Hebrew, is to all Regions adioyning. Among the sonnes of Sthem there is also signed the said of speakers to the said of speakers which is the said of speake

Lud; but he is differenced from Lud the fonne of Mizraim by the fingular number: plurall number, as aim of the sonne of shem beeing written Lud, the sonne of Mizraim Ludin : and yet these the dual. names and nations are often confounded, not withflanding the apparent difference 50 both of names and nations. For that Ludin the sonne of Mizrain was the parent of the Lybians in Africa, and that hee was feated not farre from Mizraim his father, appeareth by the Prophet Hieremie, who isyncth them in this fort together. Come vp c1.46,vtr.9. ye Horses, and rage ye Charriots, and let the valiant men come foorth, the Black-moores, and the Lybians which beare the shield: for those Nations assisted the Egyptians beeing of one parent descended. And in Ezechiel, Phut and Lud are joyned togeather. Athiopia (or Chush) saith Ezechiel c. 30. v. 3. And PHVT and LVD, and all the common people, and the men of the land that are inleague shall fall with them by the sword : which is as much to fay, as the sonnes of Chush; (which were the Chustes) the Sonnes of Mizraim, (which were the Egyptians) and the Lybians, (descended of his sonne Lud) with other the inhabitants of Agypt and Africa shall fall together. Hierofolymitanus finds also in Africa a Nation of the Lydians. And I beleeue it : because Hieremie ioyneth the Lybians and Lydians together in the place before remembred. But Lybia in Africa is by the Hebrew called Ludim (faith Arias Montanus) though 2. Chron. 12.3. they seeme to be called Lubim or Lubis, a name somewhat nearer the 10 word Lybies, and by which it may seeme that the truer writing is, not Libyes, but Lybies. Neither is it here to be omitted, that Pintus (vpon the thirtieth of Ezechiel) vnderstandeth that which is spoken in the third Verse of Lud, not to be meant of the Libyans at all: for he will have this threatning to be meant against the people of Lyda, a Cittie (saith he) betweene Egypt and Palastina, which opinion I could not mislike if the Cittic of Lyda were so seated. But Lyda (which should be written Lydda with a double D, and is the same Cittie which was afterward Diospolis, in which S. Peter cured Anews of the palley) standeth neare the Torrent Gaas, not farre from Joppe the Port of Hierusalens. Yet it is not impossible but that this Cittie might have Lud for the Founder. For there are many Citties of one name founded in all the 20 Regions of the world, and farre a funder; as after the names of Alexander, Seleucus, and Antiochus, many Citties called Alexandria, Seleucia, and Antiochia, To of divers others. S. Hierome maketh Lehabim to bee the Father of Libya who was the third fonne of Mizraim: and fo doth Postellus; and either opinion may be true.

The rest of Mizraims Sonneshaue no proper Countries given them in the Scriptures, sauing Castahim and Caphtorim, of whom came the Philistims, whom the Scrip-

These Cassum inhabited Cassiotis, a region lying in the entrance of Egypt from Palestina, in which the Lake Sirbonis and the mountaine Cassius are found: not farre from whence Pompey was buried.

Caphtorim feated neare Cafluhim in that Tract of Agypt called Sethroitis, not farre from Pelusium. Strabo cals it Sethroitis; Stephanus and Plinie Sethroites, of the Cittie Sethron: which Ortelius takes to bee the same which Ptolomie cals Hercules parua. Of the Cassulim and Caphtorim came the Philishims, which are called by the Septuagint Allophyli (which is) Alienigena, strangers, or of a strange kindred. These Philistims inhabited the South part of the holy Land towards Egypt, of whom Palefina tooke name. For the Hebrewes (faith Isidore) doe not vie the letter (P) but in stead of it (ph.) Their principall Citties were Gaza, Ascalon, Azotus, Geth, and Accaron: and the people of them called Gafei, Mcalonita, Azoty, Gethai, and Accaronite. Midore affirmes that Mealon was first called Philistim: and of that Cittie the Coun- 40 trie adioyning. But where Isidore had it, I know not.

The first knowne King of the Philistims was that Abimelech, who had aliking to Abrahams wife; with whom Abraham made a couenant and league. This Abimelech dwelt indeede at this time in Gerar; but it is written that hee was also King of the Philistims, in these wordes. Wherefore Isaac went to Abimelech King of the Phili-Buffi voon the stims with Gerar. Now in regard that this or some ancienter Abimelech gouerned the commonwealth greatly to his glorie, the rest of his successours called themselues by Hierome vpon the fame name. The Philistims commanded that Tract of land vpon the Mediterran Sea to the Northward, from the Castle of Pilgrims (otherwise Casarea Palastina or Turris Stratonius) which was the fouth border of Phanicia, to Gafaor to the Ri- 50 ucr of Agypt. The Anakims or strong Giants were of these Philistims: and Goliah was of Geth one of the fine Citties about named. They had sometimes fine Kings, faith Liranus. They mastered the Ifraelites at seuerall times about 150. yeares, and kept them Tributaries, till they were weakened by Sampson and Samuel, but in the end this yoke was taken off by DAVID, and layed on themselues. It is objected, that because these Citties and the Countries adjoyning were held by the sonnes of Mizraim, therefore did the Israelites dispossesses the sonnes of Mizraim, and not of Canaan, by forcing those places.

To this faith Pererius, that although the Palastines or Philistims held it in the time of losus, yet at the time of the promise it was possest by the Canaanites; as in the second of Deuteronomie. The Heutes dwelt in the Villages vnto Gaza. And what meruaile if (the Canaanites being the greater part) the denomination were from them? For that the Philistims were of Caphtor, and so of Mizraim and not of Canaan, belides Mofes the Prophet Hieremic witnesseth. The Lord will destroy the Philistims, Hierem 4714. the remnant of the iffue of Caphtor: and in like manner in the ninth of Amos, the Philistims are faid to be the reliques of Caphtorim; have not I brought up Is R A E L out Amore 9. v.7. of the land of Agypt, and the Philistims from Caphtor, and ARAM from Kir? fo I reade this place with divers of the learned. For whereas the Vulgar hath, & Palastinos de Cappadocia, & Syros de Cyrene, this conucrsion Beroaldus condemneth; where Caphtor is taken for Cappadocia, and Cyrene for Kir. For Cyrene is a Cittie directly West from Azypt, betweene Ptolomais or Barce and Apollonia: but Kir in Asa under the Assyrians: Iunius hath it Kir, and not Cyrene: and so hath the Geneua. But Pererius cals Caphtorim Cappadoeia according to the Vulgar translation, to which 20 he is bound : and yet it is not altogether improbable if he meane Cappadocia in Palaflina, and not that Cappadocia by the Sea Pontus in the North of Afia the leffe. For of which fee whether they inhabited Sethreites, or Cappadocia of Palastina, it is not certainly in the second knowne. And fure in this manner hee may expound Cappadocia to bee ambiguous, as well as he doth Gyrene: taking it here not for Cyrene in Africa, but for a place in Media. For it is written in the second of Kings, that Teglasphalasser King of the Af- c.16. v.g. fyrians carryed away the inhabitants of Damascus into Kir: and so Iosephus seemes to understand this Kir, for Cyrene in Media, calling this Cyrene Media Superior: for it was the manner and pollicie of the Affyrians to transplant the people conque-are barely spoken of by rehearfall of their names, saving that it may be gathered, that Affur (who was supposed to found Niniueh) was also faid to be the Father of the Allyrians, whose iffues, and the iffues of Cham instantly contended for the Empire of the East: which sometimes the Assyrians, sometimes the Babylonians obtavned, according to the vertue of their Princes. This is the common opinion, which also teacheth vs, that all the East parts of the world were peopled by Assur, Elam, and Lud, (fauing India) which I beleeve Noah himselfe first inhabited and to whom

(according to Ptolomio) in Daniel, Vlai and feated in the border of Sufiana. Albur (as most Historians believe) the second sonne of sem, was Father of the Affyrians, who disdayning the pride of Nimrod, parted from Babel, and built Ni- 20 niue, of equall beautic and magnitude with Babylon, or exceeding it. But we shall in due place disproue that opinion: Every mans hand hath beene in this Storie, and therefore I shall not neede herein to speake much: for the Affyrians so often inuaded and spoiled the Israelites, destroyed their Citties, and led them Captines, as both in Diuine and Humane letters there is large and often mention of this nation.

But howfoeuer Herodotus and D. Siculus extend this Empire, and honour this nation with ample Dominion; yet was not the state of the All rians of any such power. after fuch time as Sardanapalus lost the Empire. For Senacherib who was one of the powerfullest Princes among them, had yet the mountaine Taurus for the vtmost of his Dominion toward the North-east, and Spria bounded him toward the West, 20 notwithstanding those vaunts of Senacherib in Esay the 37. Haue the Gods of the Nations deliuered them whom my Fathers have destroyed? as GozAN, and HARAN, and RESEPH, and the Children of EDEN which were at Telasfar. Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, and the King of the Cittie Sepharuaim, Hena and Iuah? All these were indeede but pettie Kings of Citties, and small Countries; as Haran in Mesopotamia: Reseph in Palmyrena: Hamath or Emath in Ituraa vnder Libanus: the Isle of Eden: Sepher, and others of this fort. Yea Nabuchodonofor, who was most powerfull, before the conquest of Egypt had but Chaldaa, Mesopotamia, and Syria, with Palastina and Phanicia parts thereof. But in this question of Assur, I will speake my opinion freely when I come to Nimrod, whose plantation I have omitted a- 40 mong the rest of the Chusites, because hee chablished the first Empire: from whom the most memorable storie of the world taketh beginning.

Of Arphaxad came the Chaldaans, faith S. Hierome, and Iosephus, but it must bee those Chaldeans about Vr : for the sonnes of Cham possest the rest. It is true that hee was the Father of the Hebrewes: for Arphaxad begat Shela, and Shela Heber, of fanc (which was in time long before Kemuels posteritie could bee famous) wee finde Melopotamia called Aram: and that with an addition: formetimes with Naharaum. and sometimes of Padan, to distinguish it from another Aram, which (as it seemes) then also was called Aram. For whereas Iunius thinks in his note vpon Gen. 25, 20. that Padan Aramought to be restrained to some part of Mesopotamia, (to wit) to that part which Ptolomie cals Ancobaritis (fo called from the River Chaboras, which 30 dividing it runneth into Euphrates) the promiscuous vse of Padan Aram, and Aram Naharaijm (which latter appellation questionlesse comprehends the whole Melopotamia) may seeme to refute this opinion: especially seeing the signification of this appellation agreeth with the whole Region. For it fignifieth as much as the yoke of Syria, which name agrees with this Region: because the two Rivers (as it were) yoked together goe along it. The reliques of the name Padan appeare in the name of two Citties in Ptolomie, called Aphadana: (as Iunius hath well noted) the one vppon Chaboras, the other vpon Euphrates.

The Sonnes of Aram were.

Vz or Hus inhabited about Damascus, and built that Cittie, faith Iosephus and Saint Hierome: But Tostatus milliking this opinion, both in them and in Lyra, who also Hierom in trad. followeth Iofephus, affirmeth that Abrahams Steward Eliezer was the Founder there-Hebraics of; though it were likely that Hus the eldest sonne of Aram dwelt neare vnto his father, who inhabited the body of Syria. For Hus was a Region of the fame, adjoyning to Arabia the Defert, and to Batanea or Traconitis: whereof the Prophet Hieremie. 50 Reioyce and he glad O daughter of Edom that dwellest in the land of Hus. Hus therefore Hierem, Lamet, is scatted beyond Iordan, in the East Region of Traconitis, adioyning to Basan, having Batanea Gaulonitis, and the mountaine Seir to the East, Edrai to the South, Damaseus North, and Iordan West: having in it many Citties and people, as may also bee gatheredout of Hieremie : And all forts of people : and all the Kings of the land of Hus. c.25,0,20,

CHAP. 8. S.15. 1.3. of the Historie of the World.

In this Region dwelt lob, descended of Hus, the sonne of Nahor, the brother of Abraham (faith St. Hierome) and married Dina the daughter of Iacob, faith Philo.

Hul the second Sonne of Aram, S. Hierome makes the Father of the Armenians: and Gether the third Sonne, parent to the Arcananians or Carians: which opinion, (because I finde not where to set him) I doe not disproue, though I see no reason why Gether should leave the fellowship of his owne brethren, and dwell among strangers in Ana the lesse. Iunius gives Hul (whom hee writes Chul) the Desert of Palmyrena, as farre as Euphrates, where Ptolomic fetteth the Cittie of Cholle.

Gether (faith Iosephus) founded the Bactrians: but Iosephus gaue all Noahs children feathers, to carry them farre away in all hafte. For mine owne opinion I alwaies 10 keepe the rule of neighbourhood, and thinke with Iunius: (to wit) That Gether feated himselfe neare his brothers, in the body of Syria, and in the Province of Casfiotis, and Seleucis, where Ptolomie placeth Gindarus, and the Nation by Plinie called Iunius also gineth to Mes or Mesch the North part of Syria, betweene Cilicia and Mesopotamia, neare the mountaine Massius. The certainty of those plantations can no otherwise be knowne then by this probabilitie, that Aram the Father (of whom that great Region tooke name) planted his sonnes in the same land about him: for he wanted no scope of Territorie for himselfe and them; neither then when the world was newly planted, nor in many hundred yeares after: and therefore there 20 is no reason to cast them into the desert parts of the world, so farre assunder. And as necessitie and pollicie held them together for a while: so Ambition (which began together with Angels and Men) inhabiting the hearts of their children set them afunder. For although these sonnes of Aram, and the sonnes of the rest of Noahs children, kept themselues within the bounds of some one large Kingdome; yet therein enery one also sought a Province a part, and to themselves; giving to the Citties therein built their owne names, thereby to leaue their memorie to their posteritie: the vse of letters being then rare, and knowne to few.

In this fort did the pride of the Spaniards in America cast them into so many Prouinces: euery one emulating and disdayning the greatnesse of other, as they are 30 thereby to this day subject to inuasion, expulsion, and destruction : so as (Noua Hispania and Peru excepted, because those Countries are vnaccessable to strangers) an easie force will cast them out of all the rest.

Mes the fourth Sonne is made the parent of the Maconians: of whom something Chapt 8. § 7. hath beene spoken already. Arphaxad the third Sonne of Shem, begat Shelah, and Heber. Heber had two sonnes, Phalegh and Ioctan: and in Phaleghs time was the earth

Of the division of the earth in the time of Phaleg, one of the Sonnes of Heber, of the issue of Sem.

THe many people which at the diufion (at Phaleghs birth) were then liuing, and the through plantation of all the East part of the world (at his death) hath made a doubt, whether the earth were divided at either. The Hebrewes (faith Pererius out of Sedar Holam, one of their Chronicles) affirme that this partition happened at the death of Phaleg: and Phaleg was borne in the yeare after the floud 101. and lined in all 239, yeares, which numbers added makes 340. And therefore was it so many yeares after the floud, ere the children of Noah severed themselues. But 50 to this opinion of the Hebrewes, and the doubt they make how in so few yeares as 101. (the time of Phaleghs birth) fo many people could be increased, Pererius gives this answer, that if 70. persons of the familie of Iacob increased to 600000. fighting men in 215. yeares, (besides women, children, and impotent persons) how much more is it likely, that fo foone after the floud the children of Wood might in a florter time bring forth many multitudes, having received the bleffing of God. Increase and multiply, and fill the earth? What strength this answere hath, let others judge: for the children of Ifrael were 70. and had 215. yeares time : and the formes of Woah were but three, and had but 101. yeares of time, to the birth of Phalegh.

Others conceine that Phalegh tooke that name after the dinision, in memorie thereof: as Iofephus and St. Augustine, who reason in this manner. If the division Totals, I. I. Ant. were at Phaleghs death (which happened in the yeare, which is commonly held to Aug. de Ciuntat. be the 48. of Abraham, but was by more likely computation 12. yeares before his birth) then was the division 38. yeares after Ninus, who governed 52. yeares : in the 43. yeare of whole raigne Abraham was borne. But when Ninus beganne to Pack in Gen. rule the Affyrians 80. yeares before this diulion (as this diulion is placed by the 415, 616. Hebrewes, Hierome and Chry (ostome) then was the earth fo peopled in all the East and Northerne parts, as greater numbers have not beene found at any time fince. For Ninus affociating to himfelfe Ariseus King of Arabia, a people who at that time (faith Diod. Siculus) planmum opibus atque armis prestabant, Exceeded both in riches and bodies of men, fubdued many Citties in Armenia; received Barzanis into grace; then inuaded Media, and crucified Pharnus the King thereof, with his wife and feuen children; vanquished all those Regions betweene Vilus and Tanais, the Agyptians, 20 Phonicians, the Kingdomes of Syria, and all the Nations of Persia, to the Hyrcanian Sea. For the numbers which followed Ninus (already remembred out of Ciefias) against Zoroaster and others: and Zoroaster on the other side, who made resistance with foure hundred thousand, proue it sufficiently, that if the division had not happened before the death of Phaleg, there had needed no division at that time at all. For some of them were so ill satisfied with their partitions, as they sought to be Masters of all; and greater Armies were there neuer gathered then by Ninus and Semiramis: wherefore in this opinion there is little appearance of the truth.

But for that conceit that if the division had beene made at the birth of Phalez, there were not then fufficient numbers borne to fill the earth : It was never meant 20 that the earth could be filled enery where at the inflant, but by times and degrees: And furely whatfoeuer mens opinions have beene herein, yet it is certaine, that the division of tongues and of men must goe neere together with the ceasing of the worke at Babel; and that the enterprise of Babel was left off instantly upon the confusion of languages, where followed the execution of the diussion; and so neither at the birth nor death of Phaleg: for Phaleg was borne in the yeare 101. after the floud, which was the yeare that Nimrod came into Shinaar, or 10. yeares after he

Now if it bee objected that Phaleg (the Etymologie of whole name figuifierh diuision must have lived without a name, except the name had been given him at 40 the time of this confusion and partition: to this objection it may be answered. That the change of names upon divers accidents is not rare in the Scriptures : for Iacob was called I frael after he had wreftled with the angell; Abraham was first Abram; and Edom Efau; and that Phaleg being a principall man in this division had his first name vpon this accident changed, it is most probable.

And lastly whereas the Hebrewes S. Hierome and Chrysostome account Heber a great Prophet, if that by giving his sonne the name of Phaleg, he foretold the divifion which followed: to this I fay, I doe not finde that Heber deferued any fuch honour, if he had thereupon so called his sonne: for diussion and dispersion followerh increase of people of necessitie; and this prophesie (if any such had beene) might 50 also have reference to the division, which afterwardes fell among the Hebrewes

But if we give a reasonable time to the building of the Tower and Citty of Babel, by which time many people (by reason and by demonstratine proofe) might be increased: and that vpon the fall thereof the confusion and division followed (where-vpon Phaleg tooke name) then in this opinion there is nothing either curious or monstrous

Concerning whose names to avoide confusion it is to bee observed, that among the Sonnes of Chulb, 20 two of them had also the names of Seba and Hauilah. Abraham had also a third Saba or Sheba, his grand-child by his wife Ketura. Of OPHIR one of IOCTANS sonnes and of PERV and of that voyage of SALOMON

PHIR also was an inhabitant of the East India, and as (St. Hierome vnderstands it) in one of the Islandes plentifull of gold, which are now known by the name of Molucce. Iosephus vnderstands Ophir to bee one of those great head-landes in India, which by a generall name are called Chersoness, or Peninsule : of which 10 there are two very notorious; Callecut, and Malacca. Pererius takes it rightly for an Island, as St. Hierome doth, but he sets it at the head-land of Malacca. But Ophir is found among the Moluccas farther East.

Arias Montanus out of the second of Chronicles, the third chapter and fixt verse, gathers that uphir was Peru in America, looking into the West Ocean, commonly called Mare del Sur or the South Sea; by others Mare pacificum. The wordes in the second of the Chronicles are these, And hee overlaied the house with pretious stones for beautie; and the gold was gold of Paruaim. Iunius takes this gold to bee the gold of Hauilah, rememberd by Moles in the description of Paradyle: And Gen.2.11.012 the gold of that Land is good : finding a towne in Characene a Province of Susiana Plin.1.6.c.28. 20 called Barbatia; so called (as he thinkes) by corruption for Paruaim: from whence those Kinges subjected by David brought this gold, with which they presented him; and which David præscrued for the enriching of the Temple. But this fancie of Peru hath deceived many men, before Montanus, and Plessis, who also tooke Ophir for Peru. And that this question may bee a subject of no farther dispute; it is very true, that there is no Region in the world of that name: sure I am that at least America hath none, no not any Cittie, Village, or mountaine so called. But when Francis Pifarro first discouered those landes to the South of Panama, arriving in that Region which Atabaliba commanded (a Prince of magnificence, riches and Dominion inferiour to none) fome of the Spaniards vtterly ig-30 norant of that language, demaunding by fignes ( as they could ) the name of the Countrie, and pointing with their hand athwart a river, or torrent, or brooke that ran by, the Indians answered Peru which was either the name of that brooke, or of water in generall. The Spaniar ds thereupon conceiuing that the people had rightly understood them, set it downe in the Diurnall of their enterprise, and so in the first description made, and sent ouer to Charles the Emperour, all that West part of America to the South of Panama had the name of Peru, which hath continued ever fince as divers Spaniards in the Indies affured me; which also Acofta the Isfuite in his naturall and morall Historie of the Indics confirmeth. And whereas Montanus alfo findeth, that a part of the Indies (called Iucatan) tooke that name of Ioctan. 40 who as hee supposeth nauigated from the vtmost East of India to America: it is most true, that Incatan, is nothing else in the language of that Countrie, but [ What is that or What fay you For when the Spaniards asked the name of that place (no man conceiuing their meaning) one of the Saluages answered Iucatan ( which is) What aske you, or what fay you? The like hapned touching Paria, a montanous Countrie on the South fide of Trinidado and Margarita: for when the Spaniards inquiring (as all men doe) the names of those new Regions which they discouered, pointed to the Hilles afarre off, one of the people answered, Paria, which is as much to fay; as high hilles or mountaines. For as Paria begins that meruailous ledge of mountaines, which from thence are continued to the Strait of Magellan: from 8. degrees 50 of North latitude to 52. of South; and so hath that Countrie euer since retained the name of Paria.

The same hapned among the English, which I sent under Sir Richard Greeneuile to inhabite Virginia. For when some of my people asked the name of that Countrie, one of the Saluages answered Wingandacon, which is as much to say, as, you weare good clothes, or gay clothes. The fame hapned to the Spaniard in asking the name of the Island Triniaado: for a Spaniard demaunding the name of that selfe place which the Sea incompassed, they answered Caeri, which signifieth an Island. And in this manner have many places newly discovered beene intituled; of which Peru is one. And therefore we must leave Ophir among the Moluceas whereabout such an Island is credibly affirmed to be.

Now aithough there may be found gold in Arabia it selfe (towards Persia) in Hauilah, now Suliana, and all alongst that East Indian shore; yet the greatest plentie is taken up at the Philippines, certaine Islands planted by the Spaniards from the West India. And by the length of the paffage which Salomons ships made from the Red 10 Sca, (which was three yeares in going and comming) it feemeth they went to the vttermost East, as the Molnecas or Philippines. Indeed these that now goe from Portugall, or from hence, finish that natigation in two yeare, and sometimes lesse: and Salomons thips went not about a tenth part of this our course from hence. But wee must consider, that they euermore kept the coast, and crept by the shores, which made the way exceeding long. For before the vse of the Compas was knowne, it was impossible to nauigate athwart the Ocean; and therefore Salomons ships could not finde Peru in America. Neither was it needfull for the Spaniards themselves (had it not beene for the plentie of gold in the East India Islands, farre about the mines of any one place of America) to faile energy years from the West part of America thi- 20 ther, and there to have strongly planted, and inhabited the richest of those Islands: wherein they have built a Cittie called Manilia. Salomon therefore needed not to have gone farther off then ophir in the East, to have sped worse: neither could hee nauigate from the East to the West in those dayes, whereas he had no coast to have guided him:

Tostatus also gathereth a fantasticall opinion out of Rabanus, who makes Ophir to be a Countrie, whose mountaines of gold are kept by Griffins: which mountaines Solinus affirmeth to be in Scythia Afiatica, in these wordes. Nam cum auro e's gemmis affluant, Griphes tenent univer a, alites ferocissima, Arimaspi cum his dimicant, &c. For whereas thefe Countries abound in gold, and rich stone, the Griffins defend the one and the 30 other : a kinde of Fowle the fiercest of all other; with which Griffins a Nation of people called Arimaspi make warre. These Arimaspi are said to have been men with one eye only.

like vnto the Cyclopes of Sicilia : of which Cyclopes Herodotus and Arifleus make mention; and fo doth Lucan in his third Booke; and Valerius Flaceus; and D. Siculus in the Died. Sicul. 1.16. Storic of Alexander Macedon, But (for mine owne opinion) I beleeve none of them. And for these Arimashi, I take it that this name signifying One-eyed was first given them by reason that they ysed to weare a vizard of defence, with one sight in the middle to ferue both eyes; and not that they had by nature any fuch defect. But Solinus borroweth these things out of Plinie, who speakes of such a Nation in the extreme North, at a place called Gifolitron, or the Caue of the Northeast winde. For 40 thereft, as all fables were commonly grounded upon some true stories or other things done: so might these tales of the Griffins receive this Morall. That if those men which fight against so many dangerous passages for gold, or other riches of this world, had their perfect fenses, and were not deprined of halfe their eye-fight (at least of the eye of right reason and understanding) they would content themselves with a quiet and moderate estate; and not subject themselves to famine, corrupt aire, violent heate, and cold, and to all forts of miserable diseases. And though this fable be fained in this place, yet if fuch a tale were told of some other places of the world, where wild beafts or Serpents defend mountaines of gold, it might be anow-

ed: For there are in many places of the world, especially in America, many high and 50 impaffable mountaines which are very rich and full of gold, inhabited only with Tigers, Lyons, and other rauenous and cruell beafts: into which if any man afcend (except his strength bee very great) hee shall bee sure to finde the same warre, which the Arimafi make against the Griffins: not that the one or other had any sense of gold, or feeke to defend that mettall, but being disquieted, or made afraide of themselues or their young ones, they grow inraged and aduenturous. In like fort it may be faid that the Alegartos, (which the Egyptians call the Crocadyles) defend those Pearles which lye in the Lakes of the Inland: for many times the poore Indians are caten vp by them, when they dive for the pearle. And though the Alegartos know not the pearle, yet they finde fauour in the flesh and bloud of the Indians, whom they deuoure.

Of HAVILAH the some of IOCTAN, who also passed into the East Indies: and of MESHA and SEPHER named in the bordering of the families of IOCTAN: with a conclusion of this discourse touching the plantation of the world.

OF Hanilab the sonne of Iottan, there is nothing else to be said, but that the generall opinion is, that he also inhabited in the East India in the Continent from which Ophir past into the Islands adioyning. And whereas Ganges is said to water Hauilah, it is meant by Hauilah in the East India, which tooke name of Hauilah the 20 fonne of loctan : but Hauilah, which Pifon compaffeth, was so called of Hauilah, the sonne of Chulh, as is formerly proued by this place of Scripture. SAVI smote the 1, Sam, 15.7. Amalekites from Hauilah, as thou commest to Shur, which is before Egypt. But that Saul euer made warre in the East India, no man hath suspected. For an end we may conclude, that of the thirteene sonnes of Ioctan, these three Saba, Hauilah, and Ophir; though at the first seated by their brethren about the Hill Masius or Mesh, Gen. 10. 30. (to wit) betweene Cilicia and Mesopotamia; yet at length either themselues or their issues removed into East India, leaving the other families of Ioctan, to fill the Countries of their first plantation, which the Scripture defines to have beene from Melh vnto Sephar. And although S. Hierome take Melh to bee a Region of the East 20 India, and Sephar a mountaine of the same (which mountaine Montanus would have to be the Andes in America) those fancies are farre beyond my understanding. For the word (East) in the Scriptures, where it hath reference to Iudea, is neuer farther extended then into Persia. But Mesch is that part of the mountaines of Massin the North of Mesopotamia, out of which the River Chaboras springeth which runneth by Charran: and in the same Region we also finde for Sephar (remembred by Moles) Sipphara by Ptolomie, standing to the East of the mountaines Masius; from whence Ioctan having many fonnes, some of them might passe into India, hearing of the beautie and riches thereof. But this was in processe of time.

The other fashion of planting I vnderstand not, being grounded but vpon mens 40 imaginations, contrarie to reason and possibilitie. And that this mountaine in the East was no farther off then in those Regions before remembred, it appeareth by many places of the Scripture where the same phrase is vsed: as in Numbers 23. B A- v. 7. LAC the King of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountaine of the East; which was from the East part of Mesopotamia. For Balac brought Balaam out of Me-Sopotamia, (witnesse this place of Deuteronomie.) Because they hired BALAAM the var, va Sonne of BEOR, of Pethor in Aram Naharaym, to curse thee: for Aram Naharaym was Syria fluurorum, which is Mesopotamia, as aforesaid.

This plantation of the world after the floud doth best agree, (as to me it seemes) with all the places of Scripture compared together. And these bee the reports of 50 reason and probable coniecture; the guides which I have followed herein, and which I have chosen to goe after, making no valuation of the opinions of men, conducted by their owne fancies: be they ancient or moderne. Neither have I anyend herein, private, or publike, other then the discoverie of truth. For as the partialitie of man to himselfe hath disguised all things; so the factious and hireling Historians of all Ages (especially of these latter times) have by their many volumes of vntrue reports left Honour without a Monument, and Vertue without Memorie: and (in fleadethereof) have erec'ted Statues and Trophies to those, whom the darkest forgetfulnesse out to have buried, and covered over for evermore. And although the length and dissoluting nature of time hath worne out or changed the names and memoric of the worlds tirtle planters after the should (I meane the greatest number and most part of them) yet all the footsteps of Antiquitie (as appeares by that which bath beene spoken) are not quite worne out nor overgrowne: for Babylon hath to this day the sound of Babel; Phenicia hath Zidon, to which Cittie the eldest Sonne of Caman gave name; so hath Cilicia Thassis; and the Armenians, Medes, to Stiberius, Cappadecians, Phrygians, the Syrians, Idumeans, Libyans, Moores, and other Nations, have preserved from the death of forgetfulnesse of their first Founders and prime Parents.

CHAP. IX.

Of the beginning and establishing of Gouernement.

Of the proceeding from the first Government under the eldest of families to Regall, and from Regall absolute to Regall tempered with Lawes.

T followeth now to entreate how the world beganne to receive Rule and Gouernement, which (while it had fearcitie of people) vnder-went no other Dominion their Patternitie and Elderfhip. For the Fathers of Nations were then as Kings, and the eldeft of families as Princes. Hereof it came, that the word (Elder) was alwaies vfed both for the Magiltrate, and for those of age and grauitie: the same bearing one signification almost in all languages. For in the eleuenth of Nambers God commanded Alofes to gather together 40.0. Of the Elders of the people, and Gouernours over them: the Hebrew bearing the same sense, which the Latine word sense or seniores doth. So it is written in sustaina, Then the Assembly beleeved them as those that were the Elders and Indiges of the people. And so in the words of those falle Indiges and with helse to Daviel, Shew it unto us, seeing God hath given thee the office of an Elder. Defined by the sense which the same word for the Magistrate among the Gracians. Cieero in Cato giveth two other reasons for this appellation: And Lacedamonios qui amplissimum megistratum gerunt; ut sunt, sie etiam appellation sense. Among the Lacedamonion in the chiefe Magistrates, as they are so are they called Eldermen: and againe. Ratio of pindentia will essent in senson sunt in the chiefe of the single sense possible sense of the single control of the single cont

them the eldest Sonnes. And from thence did the French, Italian, and Spaniard take the word (Signor) and out of it (Seignourie) for Lordship and Dominion : signifying (according to Loy/eau) puissance in proprietie, or proper power. The kindes of this Seignourie, Seneca makes two: the one, Potestas aut imperium, Power or command : the other . Propriet as aut dominium, Proprietie or mastership: the correlative of the one is the subject, of the other the slave. Ad Cafarem (faith he) potest as omnium pertinet, ad fingulos proprietas, Cafar hath power ouer all; and enery man proprietie in his owne: and againe, Cafar omnia imperio possidet, singuli dominio, Cafar holdeth allin his power, and every man possesseth his owne. But as men and vice beganne abundantly to increase: 10 fo obedience, (the fruit of naturall renerence, which but from excellent feede feldome ripeneth) being exceedingly overshadowed with pride, and ill examples vtterly withered and fell away. And the foft weapons of paternall perfwalions (after mankinde beganne to neglect and forget the originall and first giver of life) became in all ouer-weake, either to refift the first inclination of cuill, or after (when it became habituall) to constraine it. So that now, when the hearts of men were only guided and steered by their owne fancies, and tost too and fro on the tempestuous Seas of the world, while wifedome was feuered from power, and strength from charitie: Necessitie (which bindeth enery nature but the immortall) made both the Necessities (I fe-Wife and Foolish understand at once, that the estate of reasonable men would be mum indicium, and dominion preuent it. For the Mightie, who trufted in their owne strengths, found others againe (by interchange of times) more mightie then themselves: the feeble fell vnder the forcible; and the equal from equal received equal harmes. In so much that licentious disorder (which seemed to promise a libertic vpon the first acquaintance) proued vpon a better trially no lesse perilous then an unindurable

20 come farre more miserable then that of beasts, and that a generall floud of confusion or immutabilis promidentia powould a fecond time overflow them, did they not by a generall obedience to order teller.

These Arguments by Necessitie propounded, and by Reason maintained and confirmed, perswaded all Nations which the Heauens couer, to subject themselves 30 to a Master, and to Magistracie in some degree. Vnder which Gouernement, as the change (which brought with it leffe euill, then the former mischiefes) was generally plealing: fo time (making all men wife that observe it) found some imperfection and corrofiue in this cure. And therefore the same Necessitie which invented, and the same Reason which approued sourraigne power, bethought themselties of certaine equal rules, in which Dominion (in the beginning boundlesse) might also difcerne her owne limits. For before the invention of Lawes, private affections in fupreme Rulers made their owne fancies both their Treasurers and Hangmen: meafuring by this yard, and waighing in this ballance both good and cuill.

For as wiscome in Eldership preceded the rule of Kings: so the will of Kings 40 fore-went the inventions of lawes. Populus nullis legibus tenebatur : arbitria principum pro legibus erant. The people were not gouerned by any other lames then the willes of Princes: Hereof it followed, that when Kings left to bee good, neither did those mens vertues value them which were not fancied by their Kings, nor those mens vices deforme them that were. Amor interdum nimis videt, interdum nibil videt, Loue fees one while too much, another while starke nothing. Hence it came to passe, that after a few yeares (for direction and reftraint of Royall power) Lawes were effablished : and that gouernement which had this mixture of equalitie (holding in an euen ballance supreme power and common right) acquired the title of Regall: the other (which had it not) was knowne for Tyrannicall: the one God established in 50 fauour of his people: the other he permitted for their affliction. In the infancie of this Regall authoritie, Princes as they were chosen for their vertues only: so did they measure their powers by a great deale of moderation. And therefore (faith Fabius Pictor) Principes, quia insti crant, & religionibus dediti jure habiti De aureo secule, Dij & dicti, Princes, because they were just and religious, were rightly accounted and called part. 1.

Iob. 1 ).U.21.

And though (speaking humanely) the beginning of Empire may be cascribed to reason and necessitie; yet it was God himselfe that sirst kindled this light in the minds of men, whereby they saw that they could not liue and bee preserved without a Ruler and Conductor: God himselfe by his eternall providence having ordayned Kings; and the law of Nature leaders, and Rulers over others. For the verie Bees have their Prince; the Deere their Leaders; and Cranes (by order imposed) watch for their owne sateit. The moss lings be beareth rule over the Kingsomes of men; and appoint thour it whomsoever he pleaseth. By me (saith Wisedome, spoken by the Son of God) Kings raigne; by me Princes rule, and it is God (saith Daniel) that setted up Kings, and taketh awas Kings; and that this power is given from God, Christ himselse 10 witnesseth, speaking to Pilate. Thou coulded have no power at all against mee, except it

It was therefore by athreefold inftice that the world hath beene gouerned from the beginning, (to wir) by a inftice naturall: by which the Parents and Elders of families gouerned their children, and nephewes, and families, in which gouernement the obedience was called naturall piete: againe, by a inftice dinine, drawne from the lawes and ordinances of God: and the obedience hereunto was called confeience; and laftly by a inftice civill, begotten by both the former: and the obedience to this we call dute: . That by the fethere those of the cledeft times were commanded: and that the rule in generall was paternall, it is most evident: for Adam being Lordo-20 uer his ownechildren, inftructed them in the service of God his Creatour; as wee reade, Cain and Abel brought Oblations before God, as they had beene taught by their Parent, the Father of mankinde.

Hat other pollicie was exercifed, or state founded after such time as 30 mankinde was greatly multiplyed before the floud, it cannot bee certainly knowne, though it seeme by probable consecture, that the same was not without Kings in that first age: it being possible that many

Princes of the Azyptians (remembred among their antiquities) were before the generall floud; and very likely, that the cruell oppreffions in that age proceeded from some tyrannic in Gouernement, or from some rougher forme of

Berof.Li.

Berofus ascribeth the rule of the world in those dayes to the Giants of Libanus, who mastred (faith he) all Nations from the Sunne-rising to the Sunne-set. But in the second age of the world, and after such time as the rule of Eldership failed, three 40 severall forts of Gouernement were in several times established among men, according to the divers natures of places and people.

The first, the most ancient, most generall, and most approued, was the Gouernement of one, ruling by inft lawes, called Monarchie. To which Tyramie is opposed, being also a fole and also folute rule, exercised according to the will of the Commander, without respect or observation of the lawes of God, or Men. For a lawfull Prince or Magiltrate (faith Aristotle) is the keeper of right and equitie: and of this condition ought cuery Magistrate to be, according to the rule of Gods word. Indees and Officers shall thou make thee in thy Citties: And these shall indge the people with righ-

The second Gouernement is of divers principall persons established by order, and ruling by lawes, called Arisserate, or Optimatum potestas; to which Oligarchia (or the particular faction and vsurpation of a sew great ones) is opposed: as the Determint, or Triumvint, and the like.

The third is a State popular, (or Gouernement of the people) called Democratia, to which is opposed Othloratia, or the turbulent vniustruling of the confused multitude, seditionally swaying the state, contrarie to their owne lawes and ordinances. These three kinds of Gouernement are briefly exprest by Tholosenus; Vnius, pauco-rum, G' multorum, Of one, of sea, of many.

Now as touching the beginning and order of pollicie fince the fecond increase of mankinde, the fame grew in this fort: First for all, euery Father, or eldest of the familie, gaue lawes to his owne issues, and to the people from him and them increased. These as they were multiplyed into many housholds (man by nature louing societor ite) injuried their Cottages together in one common field or Village, which the Latines call Fissue; of the Greeke have, which signifies ha house, or of the word (Fizz) because it hath divers waies and paths leading to it. And as the first house grew into a Village, so the Village into that which is called Pagus, (being a societie of diversity of the Greeke have, which signifies ha fountaine: because many people (hauing their habitations not farre a sunder) dranke of one spring or streame of water. To this word the English Hundreds, or (as some thinke) Shires answerth not vnsith.

But as men and impietic beganne to gather strength, and as emulation and pride betweene the races of the one and the other daylie increased: so both to defend 20 themselues from outrage, and to preserve such goods as they had gathered, they beganne to ioyne and fet together divers of their Villages, inuironing them first with banks and ditches, and afterwards with wals: which being fo compaffed were then called Oppida; either ab opponendo se hostibus, Because mals were opposed against enemies, or ab opibus, because thither they gathered their riches for safetie and defence : asalfo they were called Vrbes, ab orbe; because when they were to build a Cittie. they made a Circle with a Plough (faith Varro) therewith measuring and compassfing the ground which they went to inclose or fortifie. And although Vrbs and Ciuitas be often confounded, yet the difference was anciently in this, that Vrbs fignified. no other then the very wals and buildings, and Ciutas was taken for the Cittizens, 30 inhabiting therein: fo called of Ciuis; and that, ab eo quòd multitudo coiuit, of comming together. But all inhabitants within these wals are not properly Citrizens, but only fuch as are called Free-men: who bearing proportionably the charge of the Cittie may by turnes become Officers and Magistrates thereof the rest goe under the name or fibiects, though Cittizens by the same generall name of subjects are also knowne. For euery Cittizen is also a subject, but not euery subject a Cittizen: perhaps also fome Cittizen (as the chiefe Magistrate, if he be to be termed one of the Cittizens) is no fubicet; but of this we neede not stand to inquire. The word (Magistrate) istaken à Magistro, from a Master, and the word (Master) from the Aduerbe Magis (as also magisteria, precepts of art) or else from the Greeke word (Megistos:) and 40 fo the Greekes call them Megislanes, whom the Latines call Magnates or Magistratus.

The office and dutie of every Magistrate Aristosle hath written in few wordes. Ethic.;

A Magistrate or Prime (saith he) is the keeper of right and equitie; but the same is best taught by St. Paul, who expresses the theoretic efficient, and sinall, (that is) by whom Magistrates and Princes are ordayned, together with their duties and offices. A Magistrate is the minister of God for thy wealth; but if thou doe enist, searce for Rom.13.4i he bewerth not the sword for nonght. For he is the minister of God, to take vergeance on him that doth enist. He also teacheth in the same place, That every soule ought to be V. 1. subject to the higher powers, because they are by God ordayned; and that whoseour ve. 150 spliets that power, resistent God, the giver and sountaine thereof: and shall not only be therefore subject to the judgement and condemnation of Man, but of God: For Ibid.v. 51 yeemuit be subject (saith he) not because of wrath only, but also for conscience sake.

The examples are not to be numbred of Gods punishments upon those that have resisted authoritie, by God ordayned and established. Neither ought any subject therefore to relift the power of Kings, because they may be taxed with iniustice or crueltie: for it pleaseth God sometimes to punish his people by a tyrannous hand: and the commandement of obedience is without diffinction. The Prophets and Christ himselfe subjected themselves to the power of Magistracie. Christ commanded that all due to Cesar should be given vnto him: and hee payed tribute for him-Hierem. 19. v.7. felfe and Peter. Hieremie commanded the Ifraelites (euen those that were captines under Heathen Kings) to pray for them, and for the peace of Babylon. So Abraham prayed for Abimelech; and Iacob bleffed the King of Agypt. And it is acceptable in the light of our Sautour (faith Paul) that yee make supplications and prayers for Kings, and for all that are in authoritie: and if for fuch Kings as were Idolatrous, much more 10 for Christian Kings and Magistrates. And so much did St. Chrysoftome in his Homilie to the people preferre Monarchicall Gouernement, as he rather commended the rule of Kings (though Tyrants) then that they should bee wanting: Prastat regem tyrannum habere, quam nullum, Better a tyrannous King, then no King: to which also Tacitus subscribeth. Prastat (Saith Tacitus in the first of his Historie) sub malo principe effe, quam sub nullo, It is better to have a bad Prince then none at all. And be they good Kings (which is generally presupposed) then is there no libertie more safe, then to ferue them. Neque enim libert as tutior vlla eft (faith Claudian) quam Domino feruire bono, No libertie (faith he) more fafe for vs then to be feruants to the vertuous. And certainly howfoeuer it may be disputed, yet is it fafer to line vnder one Tyrant, then 20 vnder 100000. Tyrants: vnder a wife man that is cruell, then vnder the foolish and barbarous crueltie of the multitude. For as Agesilaus answered a Cittizen of Sparta that defired an alteration of the gouernement, That kinde of rule which a man would disdayne in his owne house, were very vnfit to gouerne great Regions by.

Lastly, as many Fathers erected many Cottages for their many children; and as (for the reason before remembred) many housholds joyned themselves together, and made Villages; many Villages made Citties: so when these Citties and Cittizens ioyned together, and established lawes by consent, associating themselves vnder one Gouernour and gouernment, they so joyned were called a Commonwealth: the same being sometimes gouerned by Kings; sometimes by Magistrates; some- 30 times by the people themselues.

Q. III.

Of the good Government of the first Kings.

Ow this first Age after the floud, and after such time as the people were increased, and the families became strong, and dispersed into seucrall parts of the world, was by ancient Historians called Golden: Ambition and Couctoufneffe being as then but greene, and newly 40 growne vp, the seedes and effects whereof were as yet but potentiall, and in the blowth and budde. For while the Law of Nature was the rule of mans life, they then fought for no larger Territorie then themselnes could compasse and manure: they erected no other magnificent buildings, then fufficient to defend them from cold and tempest: they cared for no other delicacie of fare, or curiositie of dyet, then to maintayne life: nor for any other apparell then to couer them from the cold, the Raine and the Sunne.

And fure if we understand by that Age (which was called Golden) the ancient simplicity of our forefathers, this name may then truly bee cast vpon those elder times: but if it be taken otherwise, then, whether the same may be attributed more so to any one time then to another, (I meane to one limited time and none else) it may bee doubted. For good and golden Kings make good and golden Ages: and all times have brought forth of both forts. And as the infancic of Empiric, (when Princes played their prizes, and did then only woo men to obedience) might bee called the golden Age: fo may the beginning of all Princes times bee truly called golden, for be it that men affect honour it is then best purchased; or if honour affeet men, it is then that good deferuings have commonly the least impediments: and if euer Liberalitie ouerflow her bankes and bounds, the same is then best warranted both by pollicie and example. But Age and Time doe not only harden and thrinke the openest and most touial hearts, but the experience which it bringeth with it layeth Princes torne estates before their eyes, and (withall) perswadeth them to compaffionate themselues. And although there bee no Kings vinder the Sunne whose meanes are answerable vnto other mens desires; yet such as value all things

10 by their ownerespects, doe no sooner finde their appetites vnanswered, but they complaine of alteration, and account the times injurious and yron. And as this falleth out in the raigne of every King, so doth it in the life of every man, if his dayes bee many : for our younger yeares are our golden Age; which being caten up by time, we praise those seasons which our youth accompanied: and (indeede) the grieuous alterations in our felues, and the paines and difeases which never part from vs but at the graue, make the times seeme so differing and displeasing : especially the qualitie of mans nature being also such, as it adoreth and extolleth the passages of the former, and condemneth the present state how just socuer. ## à. IIII.

Of the beginning of Nobilities: and of the vaine vaunt thereof

Nd with this fupreme Rule and Kingly authoritic beganne also other degrees and differences among fubicets. For Princes made election of others by the same rule, by which themselues were chosen; vnto whom they gaue place, truft, and power. From which imployments and offices fprung those Titles, and those degrees of Honour, which 10

Verus nobilis haue continued from age to age to these dayes. But this Nobilitie, or difference non na scitter from the Vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of bloud, but to fuccession of vertue, as hereafter may bee proued. Though at length it was sufficient for those whose Parents were advanced, to be knowne for the Sonnes of such Fathers : and so there needed then no endeauour of well-doing at all, or any contention for them to excell, vpon whom glorie or worldly Nobilitie necessarily defcended. Yet hereofhad Nobilitie denomination in the beginning, That fuch as excelled others in vertue were so called. Hine dictus Nobilis, quasi virtute pra alis notabilis. But after such time as the deserved Honour of the Father was given in reward to his posteritie, St. Hierome judged of the succession in this manner. Wihil 20 aliud video in Nobilitate appetendum, nisi quod Nobiles quadam necessitate constringantur, ne ab antiquorum probitate degenerent, I fee no other thing to be affected in Nobilitie, then that Noblemen are by a kinde of necessitie bound not to degenerate from the vertue of their Ancesters. For if Nobilitie be virtus & antique diuitta, Vertue and ancient riches, then to exceede in all those thinges which are extra hominem, as riches, power, glorie, and the like, doe no otherwise define Nobilitie, then the word (animal) alone doth define a reasonable man. Or if honour (according to L. Vines) be a witnesse of vertue and well-doing: and Nobilitie (after Plutarch) the continuance of vertue in a race or linage: then are those in whom vertue is extinguished, but like vnto painted and printed papers, which ignorant men worship in steade of Christ, our 30 Ladie, and other Saints: men, in whom there remaine but the dregges and vices of ancient vertue: Flowers, and hearbes, which by change of soile and want of manuring are turned to weedes. For what is found praise-worthy in those waters, which had their beginning out of pure fountaines, if in all the rest of their course they runne soule, filthie, and defiled? Externa fertili productur aliquando cicuta venenosa, & ex terra sterili pretiosum aurum, Out of fruitfull ground ariseth sometimes porsoning benbane : and out of barren foile pretious gold. For as all thinges confift of matter and forme, so doth Charron (in his Chapter of Nobilitie) call the race and linage but the matter of Nobilitie: the forme (which gives life and perfect being) he maketh to be vertue, and qualitie, profitable to the Commonweale. For hee is truly and entirely 40 Noble, who maketh a fingular profession of publike vertue, seruing his Prince and Countrie, and being descended of Parents and Ancesters that have done the like. And although that Nobilitie, which the same Authour calleth personall, (the same which our felues acquire by our vertue and well descruings) cannot bee ballanced with that which is both naturall by descent, and also personall; yet if vertue bee wanting to the naturall, then is the personall and acquired Nobilitie by many degrees to be preferred: For (faith this Charron) this Honour (to wit) by descent, may light vpon such a one, as in his owne nature is a true Villaine. There is also a third Nobilitie which he calleth Nobilitie in Parchment, bought with filuer or fauour: and these beindeede but Honours of affection, which Kinges with the change of 50 their fancies wish they knew well how to wipe off againe. But furely if we had as much sense of our degenerating in worthinesse, as we have of vanitie in deriuing our selues of such and such Parents, wee should rather know such Nobilitie (without vertue) to be shame and dishonour, then Noblenesse, and glorie to vaunt thereof.

Dele freum fugacis hono- confider ad Euris huius, & male coronat anitorom gloria, &c. Wipe away the painting of this fleeting ho- got ap. nour, and the glittering of the ill-crowned glorie, that then thou maiest consider thy felfe nakedly : for thou camest naked out of thy Mothers wombe. Camest thou thence with thy Myter, or gliffening with Iewels, or garnifhed with filkes, or adorned with feathers, or stuffed with gold? If thou scatter and blow away all these by thy consideration as certaine morning cloudes, which doe or will foone paffe over, thou shalt meete with a naked, and poore, and wretched, and miferable man, and blufhing, because he is naked, and weeping because 10 he is borne, and repining because he is borne to labour, and not to honour.

For as touching the matter of all men, there is no difference betweene it and dust: which if thou doeft not believe (faith S. CHRYSOSTOME) looke into the Sepulchers chrisoft homil's and Monuments of thy Ancesters, and they shall easily per swade thee by their owne example, de incomposita that thou art dust and dirt : so that if man seeme more Nobie and be autifull then dust, this con,5 proceedeth not from the diversitie of his nature, but from the cunning of his Creatour.

For true Nobilitie standeth in the Trade Of vertuous life; not in the fleshly line: For bloud is brute, but Gentrie is divine.

CHAP. X.

Of NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS: and of memorable thinges about those times.

That NIMROD was the first after the floud that raignedlike foueraigne Lord: and that his beginning feemeth to have beene of just authoritie.

HE first of all that raigned as soucraigne Lord after the floud was Nimrod, the Sonne of Culb, distinguished by Moles from the rest (according to S. Augustine) in one of these two respects: either for his eminencie, and because he was the first of fame, and that tooke on him to command others : or elfe in that he was begotten by Chulb, after his other children were also become Fathers; and of a later time then some of his Grand-children and Nephewes. Howfocuer, feeing Moles in expresse wordes calleth Nimrod the Sonne of Chulb, other mens conjectures to the contrarie ought to have no respect. This Empiric of Wimrod, both the Fathers and many later Writers call tyrannicall the same beginning in Babel, (which is) confusion.

But it feemeth to mee that Melanchton conceived not amiffe hereof; the fame exposition being also made by the Authour of that worke called Onomasticum Theologicum, who affirmes that Nimrod was therefore called Amarus Dominator, A bitter or Jeuere Gouernour, because his forme of rule seemed at first farre more terrible then Paternall authoritie. And therefore is he in this respect also called amightic hunter: because he tooke and destroied both beasts and theeues. But S. Augustine vnderstands it otherwise, and converts the word (ante) by (contra) affirming therein, that Wimrod was a mightie hunter against God, Sicergo intelligendus est Gigas ille, venator contra Dominum, So is that Giant to be anderflood, a hunter against the Lord. But howfoeuer this word (a mightie hunter) be vnderstood; yet it rather appeareth, that as 10 Nimrod had the command of all those, which went with him from the East into Shinaar: fo, this charge was rather given him, then by him vsurped. For it is no where found, that Noah himselfe, or any of the Sonnes of his owne body came with this troupe into Babylonia: no mention at all being made of Noah (the yeares of his life excepted) in the succeeding Storie of the Hebrewes: nor that Sem was in this disobedient troupe, or among the builders of Babel.

The same is also confirmed by divers ancient Historians, that Nimrod, Suphne, and loctan were the Captaines and leaders of all those which came from the East. And though Sem came not himselfe so farre West as Shinaar (his lot being cast on the East parts) yet from his sonnes Nephew Heber, the name and nation of the He- 20 brewes (according to the generall opinion) tooke beginning, who inhabited the Southermost parts of Chaldan about the Citie of Vr; from whence Abraham was by God called into Charran, and thence into Canaan.

And because those of the race of Sem which came into Chaldea were no partners in the vnbeleeuing worke of the Tower: therefore (as many of the Fathers coniecture) did they retaine the first and most ancient language, which the Fathers of the first Age had left to Noah; and Noah to Semand his iffues. In familia HEBER remansit heclingua, In the family of HEBERthis language remained (saith S. Augustine out of Eviphanius;) and this language Abraham vsed: yea it was anciently and before the floud the generall speech; and therefore first called (faith Calestinus) lingua humana; 20 the humane tongue.

We know that Goropius Becamus following Theodoret, Rabbi Mofes, Agyptias, Vergara, and others, is of an other opinion; but how soener we determine of this point. we may with good probabilitie resolue, that none of the godly seede of sem were the chiefe leaders of this prefumptuous multitude. And feeing it is not likely but that some one was by order appointed for this charge, we may imagine that Nimrod rather had it by just authoritie, then by violence of vsurpation.

That NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS were three diffinct perfons.

EN 20, and out of him Nanclerus with others make many Nimrods. Eufebius confounds him with Belus; and so doth S. Hierome vpon Ofe: and these words of S. Angustine seeme to make him of the same opinion. Ibi autem NINVs regnabat post mortem patris sui BELII, qui primus illic regnauerat 63. annos; There did NINVs raigne after the death of his father BELVS, who first governed in Babylon sixtie fue yeares. But it could not be viknowne to S. Augustine, that Namrod was the establisher of that Empire: Moles being plaine and direct therein. For the beginning of NIMR ODS Kingdome (faith 50 he) was BABEL, EREC, ACCAD, and CHALNE, in the land of Shinaar: Wherefore Nimrod was the first King of Babel. And certainely it best agreeth with reason, that Ninus was the third, and not one with Nimrod, as Mercator (led by Clement) Suppofed: for in Ninus time the world was marueiloufly replenished. And if S. Augustine had vindoubtedly taken Belus for Nimrod, he would have given him the name which the Scriptures give him, rather then have borrowed any thing out of prophane Authors. And for those words of S. Augustine (qui primus illic regnaneral, sicho was the first that raigned there) supposed to be meant by Belius: those words doe not disproue that Nimrod was the founder of the Babylonian Empire. For although Inlines Cafar ouerthrew the libertie of the Romane Commonwealth, making himselfe a perpetuall Dictator, yet Augustus was the first established Emperour: and the first that raisned absolutely by sourraigne authoritie ouer the Romanes, as an Emperour. The like may be faid of Nimrod, that he first brake the rule of Eldership and paternities laying the foundation of four aignerule, as Cafar did; and yet Bolus was the first. who peaceably, and with a generall allowance exercised such a power. Pererius is of opinion, that Belus and Nimrod were the fame, because many thinges are faid of them both agreeing in time: for it was about 200, yeares after the floud (as they account) that Below raigned : but fuch agreement of times proues it not. For fo Edward the third, and his grand-child Richard the fecond, were Kings both in one yeare : the

And yet the opinion (that Nimred and Belus were one) is farre more probable then that of Mercator, who makes Ninus and Ninirod to be the fame. For it is plaine that the beginning of Nimrods Kingdome was Bakel, and the Townes adjoyning: 20 but the first and most famous worke of Ninus was the Cittle of Winiue.

one dyed; the other in the same yeare was crowned King.

Now whereas D. Siculus affirmeth that Ninus overcame and Supprest the Babylonians, the same rather proueth the contrarie, then that Ninus and Nimrod were one person. For Ninus established the seate of his Empire at Ninue in Allyria, whence the Babylonians might (perchance) in disdaine thereof fall from his obedience. whom he recourred againe by strong hand; which was case: Babylon being not walled till Semiramis time.

Further where it is alleaged, that as the Scriptures call Nimrod mightic: fo Infline hath the fame of Winus, which is one of Mercators arguments; It may be answered. that fuch an addition might have beene given to many other Kings aswell. For if we may believe tustime; then were Vexoris King of Agapt, and Tanais of Seythia mightic Kings before Ninus was borne. And if we may compare the wordes of Mofes (touching Nimrod) with the vndertakings of Ninus, there will be found great difference betweenethem. For whereas Mercator conceineth, that it was too early 40 for any that lived about the time of the confusion of languages to have invaded and mastered those Citties so farre removed from Babel; namely Erec, Accad, and Chalne: which worke he therefore afcribeth to Ainus, as a man of the greatest vindertaking: and confequently would have Named to have been long after the time, in which we suppose he flourished; and both those names of Nimbod and Ninus to belong to one person, to wit, to Ninus: to these thinges to make some answere. First, I doe not finde that supposition true, That ever Nimred invaded any of these Cities; but that hee founded them and built them from the ground, being the first after the floud, that conducted the children of Noah into those parts: and therefore had nothing built or erected to his hands.

Besides, whereas these Citties in many mens opinions are found to stand farre away from Babylon, I finde no reason to bring me to that beleefe. The Citrle of Accad which the Septungint cals Archard, and Epiphanius Arphal; Junius takes to be Nisibis in Mesopotamia: for the Region thereabout the Cosmographers (faith he) call Accabene for Accadene. Others understand Nisibis and Ninine to bee one Cittie : fo

CHAP.10. $-3.

doe Strabo and Stephanus confound it with Charran; but all mistaken. For Nijibis, Accad, and Charran are diffinet places. Though I cannot denie Accadene to be a Region of Melopotamia, the same which Arias Montanus out of S. Hierome cals Achad: and so doe the Hebrewes also call 20 islibis, which seemeth to be the cause of this mistaking. As for the Cittie of Erec, which the Septuagint call Orech, S. Augustine Oreg, and Pagninus Erec, this place Iunius vnderstands for Aracca in Susiana: but there is also a Cittie in Comagena called Arace: and indeede likelihood of name is no certaine proofe, without the affistance of other circumstances.

Concerning the third Cittie (called Chalneh) some take it for Calinisis: of which Am. Marcellinus. S. Hierome takes it for Seleucia; Hierofolymitanus for Ctefiphon: others 10 doe thinke it to be the Agrani vpon Euphrates, destroyed and razed by the Persians. But let Mo(es be the Moderator and Iudge of this dispute, who teacheth vs directly, that these Citties are not seated in so divers and distant Regions; for these behis wordes. And the beginning of his Kingdome (speaking of Nimrod) was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh, in the land of Shinaar : fo as in this Valley of Shinaar, or Babylonia, or Chaldea (being all one) we must finde them. And therefore I could (rather of the two) thinke with Viterbien is, that these foure made but one Babyion, then that they were Citties farre remoued, and in feuerall Provinces, did not the Prophet Amos precisely distinguish Chalne from Babylon. Goe you (faith A MOS) to Chalne, and from thence goe you to Hamath, and then to Gath of the Philistims. The Geneua transla- 20 tion favouring the former opinion, to let these Citties out of Shinaar, hath a marginall note expressing that Shinaar was here named: not that all these Citties were therein seated, but to distinguish Babylon of Chaldea, from Babylon in Agypt; but I finde little substance in that conceit. For sure I am, that in the beginning of Nimrods Empire there was no fuch Babylon, nor any Cittie at all to be found in £gypt : Baby lon of Ægypt being all one with the great Cittie of Cairo, which was built long after, not farre from the place where flood Memphis the ancient Cittie, but not so ancient as Babylon vpon Euphrates. Now that Chaine is fituate in the Valley of Shinaar, it hath beene formerly project in the Chapter of Paradife. So as for any argument that may be brought to the contrarie, from the remote lituation of these three Cit- 30 ties from Babylon, we may continue in our opinion, That Nimrod, Belus, and Ninus, were diftinet and fucceffiue Kings.

That NIMROD, not Assyn, built Niniue and that it is probable out of Esxy 23.13. that Assva built Vr of the Chaldees.

Ow as of Nimrod: so are the opinions of writers different touching Assur, and touching the beginning of that great state of Babylon and 40 All prior and touching the beginning of that great-Asice of Baopinnian All prior a controuerfic wearifomly diffuted without any direct proofs, conclusion, or certaintic. But to me (of whome, where the Scriptures are filent, the voice of reason hath the best hearing) the interpretation of Junius is most agreeable; who besides all necessary consequence doth not disloyne the sense of the Scriptures therein, nor confuse the understanding thereof. For in this fort he connerteth the Hebrew Text. Erat enim principium regni eius Babel, & Erech, & Accad, & Chalneh, in terra Shinaaris; è terra hac processit m Affyriam vbi adificauit Niniuen: (which is) For the beginning of this Kingdome, was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Chalneh, in the land of Shinaar : and hee went forth of this land into Affyria, and built Niniue. So as Iunius takes Affur in this place, not for any 50 person, but for the Region of Assyria: the land being so called in Moses time, and beforeit. For certainly the other construction, (where the word ( Allur ) is taken for Affur the Sonne of Sem) doth not answer the order which Moles observeth through all the Bookes of Genesis, but is quite contrarie vnto it. For in the beginning of the tenth Chapter he setteth downethe Sonnes of Noah in these wordes. Non these are the Generations of the Sonnes of NOAH: SEM, HAM, and IAPHETH, unto whom Sonnes were borne after the floud: then it followeth immediately. The Sonnes of I A-PHETH were GOMER, &c. fo as Inpheth is last named among Noahs sonnes, bee hee eldeft or youngest: because he was first to be spoken of: with whom (hauing last named him) hee proceeds and fets downe his iffue, and then the iffue of his fonnes: first, the iffue of Gomer, Japheths eldest sonne; and then speakes of Jauan and his fonnes: for of the rest of that familie heeis silent. Anon after hee numbreth the Sonnes of Ham, of which Culb was the eldelt : and then the fonnes of Culb and Mizto raim; and afterward of Canaan; leaving Shem for the last, because he would not disjoyne the Storie of the Hebrewes. But after he beginneth with Sem, he continueth

from thence by Arphaxad, Shela, and Heber, vnto Abraham, and fo to Jacob, and the Fathers of that Nation. But to have brought in one of the Sonnes of Shess in the middle of the generations of Ham, had been eagainst order; neither would Moses haue past ouer so slightly the erection of the Assiran Empire, in one of the sonnes of shem, if he had had any fuch meaning: it being the storic of shems sonnes which he mostattended. For hec nameth Nimrod apart, after the rest of the Sonnes of Culb, because he founded the Babylonian and Assyrian Empire; and in the eleventh Chapter he returnes to speake of the building of Babel in particular, having formerly named 20 it in the tenth Chapter, with those other Citties which Nimred founded in Shingar. And as hee did in the tenth Chapter, fo also in the eleuenth he maketh no report of Shem, till fuch time as he had finished so much of Nimrod as he meant to touch; and then he beginneth with the iffue of Shem, which hee continueth to Abraham and I/rael. And of Iunius opinion touching Affur, was Caluin: to which I conceive that P.Commestor in historia Scholastica gaue an entrance, who after he had delivered this place in some other sense, he vseth these wordes. Vel intelligendum non est de Assyr. filio SEM. &c. sed AssvR (idest) Regnum Assvruminde egressum est, quod tempore SARVG proavi ABRAHAMI factumest, (which is) Or elect is not to be understood of Assur the Sonne of SEM, &c. but Assur (that is the Kingdome of the Affrians)

20 came from thence (videlicet from Babylon) or was made out of it : which happened in the time of SARVG the great grand-father of ABRAHAM. After which he reconcileth the differences in this fort: If you take the ancient Belus (meaning Nimrod) to bee the first erector of the Assyrian Empire, or the first Founder thereof, it is true quantumad initium, respecting the beginning; but others conceive that it had beginning from Ninus, which is also true quantum adregni ampliationem, regarding the enlargement of the Empire. To this I may adde the opinion of Epiphanius, confirmed by Cedrenus, who takes Affur to be the fonne of Nimrod: and fo doth Methodius, and Viterbienlis. S. Hierome and Cyrillus, and now lastly Torniellus: who faith hee tooke Torniell. Annat. vpon him that name of Assurafter he had beaten the Assyrians, as Scipio did of A- fact. in Gen. 19-40 fricanus after his conquest in Africa: and that Assur was a common name to the Kings of Affyria, asit appeareth by many Scriptures, as Pfalme 81. Efay 10.0/e 5. 60c. but to helpe the matter he makes Nimrod of the race of Shem, and the sonne of Irari. But Rabanus Maurus, who was Arch-Bilhop of Mentz in the yeare of Christ 854. an ancient and learned writer, vnderstands this place with Commestor, or Commestor with him, agreeing in Substance with that translation of Junius: to which wordes of Moses he giueth this sense. De hac terra Assyriorum pullulauit imperium, qui ex nomine NINI, BELI fili, Ninum condiderunt, orbem magnam, &c. Out of this land grew the Empire of the Assyrians, who built Ninus the great Cittie, so named of NINVs the sonne of BELVS. On the contrarie Caluin objecteth this place of Efay. Behold the land of 23.11.

50 the Chaldaans, this was no people, Assva founded it by the inhabitants of the wilderneffe; then which there is no one place in the Scriptures that hath a greater diversitie in the translation and vnderstanding; insomuch as Michael de Palatio vpon Esay (though in all elfe very diligent) passeth it ouer. But Caluin seemeth hereby to inferre, that begause Affur founded the state of the Chaldrans, therefore also Affur rather then Nimrod established the Affyrian Empire, and built Nimue: contrarie to the former translation of Junius, and to his owne opinion. Now out of the Vulgar, (called Hieromes translation) it may bee gathered that Assure both founded and ruined this estate or Cittie of the Chaldaans, by E/ay remembred: vnto which Cittie people or state, hee plainly telleth the Tyrians that they cannot trust, or hope for reliefe thence. Or rather it may be taken, that the Prophet maketh this Cittle of Chaldaa, and that estate, an example vnto those Phanicians, whom in this place hee fore-telleth of their ruine; which Cittie of Chaldea being of Arength, and carefully defended, was (notwithstanding) by the Affyrians vtterly wasted and destroyed: whereby he giveth them knowledge, and foretelleth them, that their owne Cittle of Tyre, 10 (inuincible, as themselves thought) should also soone after bee overturned by the fame Affyrians: as (indeede) it was by Nabuchodonofor. And thefe be the words after Hierome. Ecce terra Chaldaorum, talis populus non fuit, Assva fundauit eam, in captinitatem traduxerunt robustos eius, suffoderunt domos eius, posuerunt eam in ruinam, (which is) Behold the land of the Chaldeans, fuch a people there were not (or this was no people, after the Geneua) Assva (or the Affyrians) founded it, they carried away their strong men captine, they undermined their houses, and ruined their Cittie. The Septuagint expresse it but in a part of another Verse, in these wordes. Et in terra Chaldeorum, & hac desolata est ab Assyrijs, quoniam murus eius corruit, making the sense perfect by the preceding Veric, which all together may be thus vnderstood. If thou goe over 20 to Chittim (which is Macedon or Greece) yet thou shalt have no rest, (speaking to the Tyrians) neither in the land of the Chaldwans, for this is made desolate by the Assirians, because their walles fell together to the ground. Pagninus and Vatablus convert it thus. Ecceterra Chasaim, iste populus non erat illic olim; nam Assva fundauit eam nauibus, erexerunt arces illius; contriuerunt ades eius, posuit eum in ruinam: which may bee thus Englished. Behold the land of the Chaldaans, this people was not once therein inhabiting: for Assva built it a harbour for ships, they erected the Towers thereof, and againe brake downe the houses thereof, and ruinated it. Iunius in the place of ships sets the word (pro Barbaris) that is, for the Barbarians : and the Geneua, by the Barbarians. But this is vndoubted that the Prophet Esay (as may be gathered by all the sense of the chapter) 30 did therein affure the Tyrians of their future destruction, which (accordingly) fell on them: wherein (for the more terrour) hee maketh choice to note the calamities of those places, Citties, and Regions, by whose Trade the state and greatnesse of the Tyrians was maintained; as by the Cilicians from Tharfis; from the Macedonians. and other Gracians under the name of Cittim; also by the Egyptians, the Chaldeans, and the rest. For Tyre was then the Mart Towne of the world most renowned. And (as it appeares in our discourse of Paradise) not the least part of her chiefe merchandize came in by the Cittie Vr or Vrchoa in Chaldea, where the body or chiefe fireame of Euphrates (euen that streame which runneth through Babylon and Otris, which now falleth into Tigris) had his passage into the Persian Gulfe: though now 40 it be stopped vp. For (as we have heretofore noted) the Arabians (that descended from Sheba and Raamah) dwelling on the East bankes of the Persian Gulfe, trading with the Tyrians (as those of Eden, Charran, and Chalne did) transported their merchandise by the mouth of Tigris, that is, from Teredon, and of Euphrates, that is, from Vr or Vrchoa: and then by Babylon, and thence by River and over Land they conveyed it into Syria, and so to Tyre: as they doe this day to Aleppo. So then Vr of the Chaldees was a Port Towne, and one of those Citties which had intelligence, trade, and exchange with the Tyrians: for it stood by the great Lakes of Chaldea, through which that part of Euphrates ranne, which paffage is now fropt vp. Eins curfum vetustas aboleuit (faith Niger.) And Plinie, locus voi Euphratis ostium fuit, slumen salsum, 50 Time hath worne away the channell of Euphrates: and the place where the mouth thereof was is a Bay of falt water. These thinges being thus, certainly (not without good probabilitie) wee may expound the Cittie of the Chaldees, whose calamities Esay here noteth for terrour of the Tyrians, to be the Cittie anciently called Fr; and (by Hecataus)

Camerina; by Ptolomie Vrchoa: and by the Greeks Chaldeopolis, The Cittie of Chaldea: which the Sonnes of Shem vntill Abrahams time inhabited. And whereas in all the Translations it is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may bee vnderstood, that Affur the Founder was the sonne of Shem; and Affur the destroiers were the Assyrians, by whom those that inhabited Vr of Chaldra, were at length oppressed and brought to ruine : which thing God fore-seeing commanded Abraham thence to Charran, and so into Canaan. And if the Hebrew word by Vatablus and Pagninus conucrted (by ships) doe beare that sense, the same may be the better approued; because it was a Port Towne; and the River so farre vp as this Cittie of Vr was in ancient time nauigable, as both by Plinie and Niger appeareth. And if the word (for the Barbarians) or (by the Barbarians) be also in the Hebrew Text, it is no lesse manifest, that the most barbarous Arabians of the Desert were and are the confronting, and next people of all other vinto it. For Chaldea is now called diachaldar, which fignifieth desertlands, because it iowneth to that part of Arabia so called: and Cicero (calling those Arabians by the name of Itureans) addeth that they are of all other people the most saluage; calling them hornines omnium maxime barbaros.

So as this place of Elay, which breedeth some doubt in Caluin, proueth in nothing the contrarie opinion, nor in any part weakeneth the former translation of Iu-20 nius, northeinterpretation of Comestor and Rabanus. For though other men haue not conceived (for any thing that I have read) that Affur is in this place diverfly taken (as for the fonne of Sem, when he is spoken of as a builder of Vr: and when as a destroyer thereof, then for the Affyrian Nation) yet certainly the euidence of the truth, and agreement of circumstances seeme to enforce it. And so this founding of the Cittie of the Chaldees by Allur (into which the most of the posteritie of Sems that came into Shinaar, and were separate for the Idolatrie of the Chusites and Nimrodians, retyred themselves) hath nothing in it to prove that the same Assur built Niniue, or that the same Assur was all one with Ninus; except wee will make Assur, who was the sonne of Shem, both an Idolater, and the sonne of Belus. For (out of 20 doubt) Winus was the first notorious facrificer to Idols;& the first that fet vp a Statue to be honoured as God. Now if Affar must bee of that race, and not of the familie of Sem, as he must be if he founded Winine, then all those which seeke to give him the honour thereof, doe him by a thousand parts more injurie, by taking from him his true Parent and Religion. Besides, if this supposed Asur whom they make the Founder of Niniue (and so the sonne of Belus) were any other, and not the same with Ninus; then what became of him? Certainly he was very vnworthy and obscure, and not like to be the Founder of such an Empire and such a Cittie, if no man haue vouchsafed to leaue to pofteritie his expulsion thence, and how he lost that Empire agains or quitted it to Ni-40 nus: whose acts and conquests are so largely written, and (according to my apprehension) farre differing from truth. It will therefore bee found best agreeing to Scripture and to Reason, and best agreeing with the storie of that age written by prophane Authours, that Nimred founded Babel, Erech, and Accad, and Chalne, the hirst workes and beginnings of his Empire, according to Moses, and that these works being finished within the Valley of Shinaar, hee looked farther abrode, and set in hand the worke of Ninus, lying neare vnto the same streame that Babel and Chalne did : which worke his grand-child Ninus afterward amplified and finished as Semiramis (this Ninus his wife) did Babylon. Hence it came to passe; that as Semiramis was counted the Foundreffe of the Cittie which shee only finished : so also Ninus of Ni-50 nine. Quam quidem Babylonem potuit instaurare, Shee might repaire or renew Babylon, faith S. Augustine. For fo did Nabuchodonosor vaunt himselfe to be the Founder of

thus. Is not this great Babel which I have built?

Dan.4.27.

Of the acts of NIMROD and BELVS, as farre as now they are known.

Vt to returne to the storie, it is plaine in Moses, that Nimrod (whom Philo interpreteth transfugium; and Iulius Africanus furnamed Saturne) was the chablisher of the Babylonian Monarchie, of whom there is no other thing written, then that his Empire in the beginning confisted of those foure Citties before remembred, Babel, Erec, Accad, and 10

Chaine: and that from hence he propagated his Empire into Assyria; and in Assyria built foure more Citties (to wit) Niniue, Rehoboth, Celah, and Refen. And seeing that he spent much time in building Babel it selfe and those adioyning, and that his trauailes were many ere he came into Shinaar: that worke of Babel (fuch as it was) with the other three Citties, and the large foundation of Niniue, and the other Citties of Affyria which he builded (confidered with the want of materials, and with other impediments) were of greater difficultie then any thing performed by his fucceffours in many yeares after: to whose vndertakings time had given so great an increase of people; and the examples and patternes of his beginning so great an aduancement and encouragement: in whose time (faith Glycas) all these Nations 20 were called Meropes, a fermonis linguarum terrag, divisione, By reason that the earth and the speech were then divided.

Belus, or Bel, or Iupiter Belus, fucceeded Nimrod, after he had raigned 1 14 yeares; of whose acts and undertakings there is little written. For it is thought that he spent much of his time in diffourdening the low lands of Babylon, and drying and making firme ground of all those great Fennes and ouerflowne Marishes which adjoyned vnto it. For any of his warres or conquests there is no report, other then of his begunne enterprise against Sabatius King of Armenia, and those parts of Scythia which Berofus cals Seythia Saga, whose Sonne and Successour Barzanes became subject and Tributarie to Ninus, that followed the warre to effect, which was by his Father Be- 30 his begunne.

That wee are not to mermaile how fo many Kingdomes could bee erected about these times: and of VEXORIS of Egypt, and TANAIS of Scythia.

Hat so many Kingdomes were erected in all those Easterne parts of the world so soone after Nimrod, (as by the storie of Ninus is made ma- 40 nifest) the causes were threefold; (namely) Opportunitie, Example, and Necessitie. For Opportunitie being a Princesse liberall and powerfull bestoweth on her first entertainers many times more benefits, then either Fortune can, or Wisedome ought; by whose presence alone the vnderstanding minds of men receive all those helps and supplies, which they either want or with for: fo as every leader of a troupe (after the division of tongues and dispersion of people) finding these faire offers made vnto them, held the power which they posses, and gouerned by discretion all those people, whom they conducted to their destined places. For it cannot be conceived, that when the Earth was first divided, mankinde straggled abroade like beasts in a Defert; but that by a- 50 greement they disposed themselves, and vndertooke to inhabite all the knowne parts of the world, and by diffinct Families and Nations: otherwise, those remote Regions from Babylon and Shinaar, which had Kings, and were peopled in Ninus time, would not have beene possest in many hundreds of yeares after, as then they were; neither did those that were sent, and trauailed farre off (order being the true parent of prosperous successe) vndertake so difficult enterprises without a Conducter or Commander. Secondly, the Example of Wimrod with whom it succeeded well, strengthened every humour that aspired. Thirdly, Necessitic resolved all men by the arguments of common miseries, that without a Commander and Magistrate, neither could those that were laborious, and of honest dispositions, enjoy the haruest of their owne trauailes : nor those which were of little strength, secure themselues against forcible violence: nor those which sought after any proportion of greatnesse, either possesse the same in quiet, or rule and order their owne ministers

That these causes had wrought these effects, the undertakings and conquests of Ninus (the sonne of Belus) made it apparent: for he found every where Kings and Monarches, what way focuer his Ambition led him in the warres.

But Nimrod (his grand-father) had no companion King, to vs knowne, when he first tooke on him soueraignetic and sole commandement of all those the children of Noah, which came from the East into Babylonia: though in his life time others also raised themselves to the same estate; of which hereafter. Below (his sonne and fucceffour) found Sabatius King of Armenia and Scythia, fufficiently powerfull to refift his attempts: which Sabatius I take to be the same, which Iustine cals Tanais; 20 and should conjecture, that Mizrain had been his Vexoris, were it not that I vehemently suspect some errour, (as Iustine placeth him) in the time of that Fexoris, who see more of by many circumstances seemes to me rightly accounted by the judicious and learned Reineceius all one with the great Sefostris, that lived certaine ages after Ninus. 6.6. This Belus, the fecond King of Babylon, raigned 65. yeares, according to the common account.

Of the name of BELVS, and other names affine unto it.

Hence this fecond King and Successour of Nimrod had the name of Bel, or Belus, question hath beene made: for it seemeth rather a name imposed, or (of addition) given by Ninus, then assumed by Belus

Cyrillus against Iulian cals the Father of Ninus Arbelus, affirming that he was the first of all men that caused himselfe to be called a God: which were it so, then might the name of Belus be thence derived. But Bel, as many learned writers have observed, signifieth the Sunne in the Chaldran tongue; and therefore did Ninus and Semiramis give that name to their Father, that hee might be honoured as 40 the Sunne, which the Babylonians worshipped as a God. And as this title was affumed in after-times by divers others of the Chaldean Princes, and Babylonian Satrapa: fo was it vsed (in imitation) by the chiefe of the Carthaginians and other Nations, as fome Historians have conceived.

To this Bel, or Belus, pertaine (as in affinitie) those voices of Baal, Baalim, Belphegor, Beelphagor, Belfebub, and Beelfephon. Those that are learned in the Hebrew and Chaldean convert the word Baal by the Latine Princeps militia, Chiefe in the warre, though Daniel was so called (faith S v 1 D A s) ob honorem explicationis arcanarum rerum, In honour of his expounding fecrets. S. Hierome makes Bel, Beel, and Baal, to have the same Hier in Ofe. e. t. fignification: and faith, that the Idoll of Babylon was fo called, which Ninus in me-50 morie of his Father fet vp to be worshipped: to which that he might adde the more honour and reuerence, he made it a Sanctuarie and refuge for all offendors. Hence (faith Lyranus) came Idolatrie, and the first vse of Images into the world. Isidore Lyrin (avien.

doth interprete Bel by Vetus, old or ancient; adding, that as among the Allyrians it is Salom, c. 11. taken for Saturne and the Sunne: foin the Punick or Carthaginian language it fignifi- 1fid.18.c.114

eth God. Glycas makes it an Affyrian name properly; and 10fephus a Tyrian. He alfo affirmeth that the Idoll which the Moabites worthipped (by them erected on the mountaine Phegor, or Peor, and called Baal) is the same which the Latines call Priapus, the God of Gardens; which was also the opinion of S. Hierome. But that the word Bel, or Beel, was as much to fay as God, appeareth by the word Beelzebub, the Idoll of Accaron. For Bel, or Beel foundeth (God) and Sebub (Flies or Hornets:) by which name (notwithstanding) the Iewes expresse the Prince of Deuils. But the Prophet Ofe teacheth vs the proper fignification of this word from the voice of God himselfe; And at that day (faith the Lord) thou shalt call me I s H I, and shalt call me no more BAALIM: for I will take away the name of BAALIM out of their mouthes. For al- 10 though the name of Baal, or Bahal, be infilly to be yied towards God; yet in respect that the same was given to Idols, God both hated it and forbad it. And the vling of the word Bel among the Chaldeans for the Sunne, was not because it properly signifieth the Sunne, but because the Sunne there was worshipped as a God: as also the Fire was, tanquam Solis particula. As for the wordes compounded (before remembred) as Belphegor, and Belsephon; Belsephon is expounded out of FAGIVS, Dominus Specula vel custodia, The Lord of the watch-tower or of the guard: the other word noteth the Idoll, and the place wherein it was worshipped. It is also written Belpeor, or Baalpeor: and Peor (they fay) is as much as Denudauit; and therefore the word iovned expresseth a naked Image. Some there are that call this Belus, the sonne of Sa- 20 turne: for it was vsed among the Ancients to name the Father Saturne, the Sonne Author. desquis Inpiter, and the grand-child Hercules. SATVRNI dicuntur familiarum Nobilium, Regum qui vrbescondiderunt senisimi; primogeniti corum I o ves & I v no nes; Her-CVLES veromepotes corum fortisimi, The ancientest of Noble families, and Kings which founded Cities, are called SATVRNES; their first borne IVPITERS and IVNOES; their valiant Nephewes HERCVLES. But this Belus (faith L.Viues) was famous by reason of his warlike sonne Ninus, who caused his Father to be worshipped as a God by the name of Iupiter Babylonius, whom the Egyptians (transported by the dreames of their antiquitie) make one of theirs. For Neptune (fay they) ypon Libya the Daughter of Epaphus begat this Inpiter Belus, who was Father to Agyptus. They 30 adde, that this Belus carrying a Colonie to the River of Euphrates there built a Cittie, in which he ordained Priests after the Agyptian manner. But were there any Belus the sonne of Epaphus and Isis, or of Neptune and Libya, or (with Eusebius) of Telegonus, who after the death of Apis married Iss, (Cecrops then raigning in Athens) the same was not this Babylonian Belus of whom we speake, but rather some other Belus, of whom the Agyptians fo much vaunted.

VII.

Of the worshipping of Images begunne from BELVS in Babel.

S for the Babylonian Belus, he was the most ancient Belus, and the Inuentour of Astronomic, if Plinie say true : from whence the Egyptians might borrow both the name and the doctrine. Some part of the Temple, in which his Statue or Image was honoured as a God, the fame Author affirmeth that it remained in his time.

ARBELVS,

Strabe.l.1 3.c.3.

Of the Sepulcher of Belus, Strabo writeth thus. Ouer the River (faith he) there are gardens, where they fay the ruines of BELVS his Tombe, which XERXES brake up, are yet remaining. It was a square Pyramis made of bricke, a furlong high, and on 50 Las. cont. Julian. enery fide it had a furlong in breadth. It appeares by Cyril against Iulian, that hee obtained divine worthip yet living: for fo hee writes of him (calling him Arbelus.) ARBELVS, vir superbus & arrogans, primus hominum dicitur à subditis Deitatis nomen accepisse: perseuer arunt igitur Asyrij, & finitima illis gentes sacriscantes ei.

CHAP.10. $.7. of the Historie of the World.

ARBELVS, a man very proud and arrogant, is accounted to be the first of all men that was euer honoured by their subjects with title of Dettie; (or with the name of God) The Assyrians therefore and the bordering Nations have perseuered, sacrificing to him. Even Arius alfo, whom Suidas cals Thuras, who fucceeded next after Ninyas, was made an Idoll-God among them, if we credit Suidas.

After Ninus (that is, after Ninyas) Thur as raigned (faith Suidas) whom they called after the name of the Planet Mars; a man of tharpe and fierce disposition, who bidding battaile to Caucasus of the stocke of Iapheth slue him. The Assyrians worshipped him for their God, and called him Baal (that is) Mars; thus farre Suidas. Neito ther is it vnlikely but that many among idolatrous Nations were Deified in their life-times, or soone after: though I denie not but that the most of their Images and Statue were first creeted without divine worship; only in memorie of the glorious acts of Benefactors, as Glycas rightly conceineth; and so afterward the Deuill crept into those wodden and brazen carcases, when posteritie had lost the memorie of their first invention. Hereof Isidor speaketh in this manner. Quos autem Pagani Deos afferunt homines fuerunt, & pro uniufcuiuf quita meritis vel magnificentia, coliapud suos post mortem caperunt: sed (damonibus persuadentibus) quos illi pro sua memoria honor auerunt, minores Deos existim arunt: a lista verò magis excolenda accesserunt Poetarum figmenta, They were men (faith he) whom the Pagans affirmed to be Gods: and every 20 one for his merits or magnificence beganne after his death to bee honoured of his owne But at length (the Deuils per swading) they accounted them lesser Gods, whose memories they honoured: and the fictions of the Poets made the opinions (concerning the honours of the dead) much more superstitious,

And that the worthipping of Images was brought in by the Pagans, and Heather Nations, it is not Isidore alone that witneffeth; but Gregorie : Gentilitas (faith hee) Greenegar inuentrix & caput of imaginum, Gentilisme is the inventresse and ground of images : and Ambros, in plat, Ambrose; Gentes lignum adorant, tanquam imaginem Dei, The Gentils adore wood as it 108. were the image of God. Eufebius also affirmeth as much, and calleth the worshipping Eufeb. 1.7. c. 18; of images a cultome borrowed of the Heathen. The like hath S. Augustine against Aug. 6.13. 30 Adimantus. Et verentur (saith LACTANTIVS) ne religio vana sit, si nihil videant Latt. lac.; quod adorent, They feare their religion would be vaine, should they not fee that which they

And (out of doubt) the Schoolemen shift this fearefull custome very strangely. For feeing the very workemanship is forbidden, how can the heart of a wife Christian fatisfie it felfe with the diffinction of Doulia and Hyperdoulia, which can imply nothing but some difference of worshipping of those images after they are made? And it is of all things the most strange, why religious and learned men should straine their wits to defend the vse of those things, which the Scriptures have not only nowhere warranted, but expresly in many places forbidden, and curfed the practifers thereof. 40 Yet this doctrine of the Deuill was fo strongly and subtilly rooted, as neither the expresse Commandement of God himselfe, Thou shalt not make any grauen image, nor all the threatnings of Moss and the Prophets after him could remoue, weede it, or by feare, or by any perswasions leade the hearts of men from it. For where shall we finde wordes of greater weight, or of plainer instruction then these? Take therefore good heede to your felues (for yee faw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horch out of the midst of the fire) that yee corrupt not your selues, and make you a grauen image, or representation of any figure, whether it be the likenesse of Mule or

And besides the expresse Commandement, Thou shalt make thee no grauen image, 50 and the prohibition in many Scriptures, fo it is written in the booke of Wifedome. That the invention of Idols was the beginning of Whoredome: and the finding of them the corruption of life : for they were not from the beginning, neither shall they continue shipping of the Heathen Idols, it is manifest that Moses spake of images of the liuing God, and not of Baal and the rest of that nature, for you faw no image (faith Mo-SES) that day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb. Surely it was excellently said of Basil, Noli aliquam in illo formamimaginari, ne circumscribas eum mente tua, Doe not imagine any forme to be in God, least thou limit or circumscribe him in thy minde too. Now, if the great Basil thought it a presumption vnlawfull to represent a patterne of the infinite God to our owne thoughts and mindes, how farre doe those men presume that put him under the greazie penfill of a painter, or the ruftic axe or other inftrument of a Carpenter or Carner?

For as this dishonour to the infinite and incomprehensible God beganne in Ba- 10 bel: fo did the Deuill transport and speede this invention into all the Regions ad-ioyning, and into Ægypt and Greece.

The Romanes for a while relifted the crection of these Idols and Images, refusing to fet them in their Temples for 170. yeares, observing therein the Law of Numa: who thought it impietie to resemble things most beautifull, by things most base. But Tarquinius Priscus afterwards prevailing, and following the vanitie of the Gracians (a Nation of all others under the Sunne most deluded by Sathan) set up the images of their Gods; which (as St. Augustine witnesseth) that learned Varro both bewailed, and vtterly condemned : and which Seneca thus derideth. Simulachra deorum venerantur, illis supplicant, genu posito illa adorant, & cum hac suspiciant, fabros 20 qui illa fecere contemnunt, The images of the Gods are worshipped, those they pray onto with bended knees; those they adore, and while they so greatly admire them, they contemne the handi-craft men that made them : which also Sedulius the Poet in this fort

> Heu miseri qui vana colunt, qui corde sinistro Religiosa sibi sculpunt simulachra, suuma, Factorem fugiunt, & que fecere verentur. Quis furor est? qua tanta animos dementialudit? Vt volucrem, turpemá, bouem, toruumá, Draconem, Semi-hominemá, canem supplex homo pronus adoret:

Ah wretched they that worship vanities, And confecrate dumbe Idols in their heart. Who their owne Maker (God on high) despise, And feare the worke of their owne hands and art. What furie? what great madneffe doth beguile Mens minds ? that man should vgly shapes adore, Of Birds, or Buls, or Dragons, or the vile Halfe-dogge-halfe-man on knees for aide implore.

And though this deuise was barbarous, and first, and many yeares practised by Heathen Nations onely, till the Iewes were corrupted in £gypt, yet it is not Seneca alone that laugheth to scorne the ignorant stupiditie of his Nation: but Instin Martyr remembreth how the Sibyls inneighed against Images: and Hospinian, how Sophocles taught, that it was pernitious to the foules of men to erect and adore those bables. Strabo and Herodotus witnesse, that the Persians did not erect or set up any Statue of their Gods. Lycurgus neuer taught it the Lacedemonians, but thought it impietie to represent immortall natures by mortall figures. Eusebius also witnesseth in his fixt booke de praparatione Euangelica, that it was forbidden by a Law in Serica, 50 or among the Brachmans in India, that Images should be worshipped. The same do Tacitus and Crimitus report of the ancient Germans. Many other Authors might be remembred that witnesse the disdaine which the Heathen themselues had of this childish Idolatrie : of which Hospinian hath written at large in his Tract de origine imaginum. And it was truly faid, Omnia mala exempla bonis inities orta funt, All ill examples have forung from good beginnings. The Heathen at first made these Statue and Images, but in memoric of fuch remarkable men, as had descrued best of their countrics and commonwealthes: Effigies hominum (faith Plinie) non folebant exprimi nife aliana illustri causa perpetuitatem merentium: Men were not wont to make pictures, but of men which merited for some notable cause to be perpetually remembred. And though of the more ancient Papiftes, some have borrowed of the Gentiles (as appeareth in Lactantius ) that defence for Images: That Simulachra are pro elemen: is literarum, vt per ea discerent homines Deum inuisibilem cognoscere: Images (say they, and so before them

10 the Heathen faid) are in stead of letters, whereby men might learne to know the inuifible God: in which understanding (perhaps) they no otherwise esteemed them then pictures indeed; yet as that of Baal or Bel fet vp in memorie of Belus the Babylonian became afterwards the most reuerenced Idoll of the world, by which so many Nations (and they which were appropriate to God himselfe) were misled and cast away: fo those very stockes and stones, and painted canuales (called the pictures of Christ, our Ladie, and others) were by thousands of ignorant people, not onely adored, but esteemed to have life, motion, and understanding. On these stockes we call (faith the booke of Wifedome ) when we paffe through the raging waves, on thefe flockes

20 This Heathen inuention of Images became fo fruitfull in after-times, breeding an infinite multitude of Gods, that they were forced to diffinguish them into degrees and orders; as Dij Consentes, seu maiorum gentium; selecti, Patritij, insigniores, dij medij : Counselling Gods, or Gods of the mightiest Nobilitie, select Gods, Patrian, Gods of marke, and common Gods ( which the Romanes called Medioxumi ) dij infimi, and terrestriall Heroes, and multitudes of other Gods: of which S. Augustine hath made large mention in his booke de Cinitate Dei. But (saith Lactantius) among all those Lib. 14. miserable soules and rotten bodies, worshipped by men more like to their idols, did Epimenides Cretensis (by what good Angell moved I know not) crect in the Athenian fields, Altars to the vnknowne God, which stood with the same title and dedi-

30 cation even to the times of S. Paul: who made them first knowe to whom those Altars belonged, and opened their cies which were capable of grace, that they might discerne the difference betwixt that light which lighteneth enery man, and the obfcure and stinking mist wherein the Deuill had so many yeares led and misled them. And it sufficed not that the multitude of these Gods was so great in generall, or that eueric Nation had some one which tooke particular and singular care of them; as Iupiter in Creete, Isis in Agypt, in Athens Minerva, in Samos Iuno, in Paphos Venus, and so of all other parts; but every Citie, and almost every familie had a God a-part. For as it is written in the second of kings: the men of Babel, made Succoth Benoth, and the men C.17, v.18.3t. of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Albima, and the Auins made Nib-

Men cut downe trees, rinde them. burne a part of them, make readie their meate, and warme themselues by the fire thereof. and of the residue hee maketh a God, an Idoll, and prayeth unto it : but God hath shut their eyes from light, and their heartes from understanding, It is therefore safest for a Christian to beleeue the commandements of God so direct against I dolatrie, to belecue the Prophets, and to beleeue Saint Paul: who speaketh thus plainely and seelingly. My beloued flie from Idolatrie, I speake as unto them which have understanding, CA4: sudge yee what I say.

Nto this Belus fucceeded Nimus, the first that commaunded the exercise of Idolatrie, the first that iniuriously inuaded his neighbour Princes; and the firft that without fhame or feare committed adultery in publique. But as of Belus there is no certaine memorie (astouching particulars:) fo of this Ninus (whose Story is gathered out of to prophane Authours) I finde nothing so warrantable, but that the same may bee disputed, and in the greatest part doubted. For although that peece of Berofus set out and commented upon by Annius hath many good things in it, and giveth great light (as Chytraus noteth) to the understanding of Diodorus Siculus, Dion, Halycarnassaus, and others: yet Lodouicus Viues, B. Rhenanus, and others after them have layed open the imperfection and defects of the fragment; proning directly that it cannot beethe same Berofus which lived in Alexanders time, cited by Athenaus and Joseph cont. Ap. Iosephus: and whose Statue the Athenians erected, faith Plinie. Yetitis from him chiefely, that many have gathered the succession of the Babylonian and Assyrian Princes, euen from Nimrod to the eightenth King Ascatades, and to the times of Iosua. 20 For of Metasthenes an Historian, of the race of the Persian Priests, there are found but certaine papers, or some fewe lines of the Chaldean and Assyrian Monarchies: but hee afterwards in the collection of the Persian Kinges is not without his cr-

Ctesias of Cnidus (a Cittie adioyning to Halicarnassus) who lined together with Cyrusthe yonger, and with Artaxerxes Mnemon, gathered his History out of the Persian Records, and reacheth as farre vpwards as Ninus and Semiramis: and though in the Story of Cyrus the yonger Xenophon approueth him in some things, and Atheneus Pausanias and Tertullian cite him; yet so base and apparent are his flatteries of the times and Princes with whome hee lived, and so incredible are the numbers 30 which he findes in the Armies of Winus, and especially of Semiramis; as what soener his reportes were, times have confumed his workes, fauing some very few excerpti-ons lately published. And therefore in things vncertaine, seeing a long discourse cannot be pleasing to men of judgement, I will passe ouer the acts of this third Asyrian, in as few wordes as I can expresse them. S. Augustine affirmes that Ninus mastered all Asia, India excepted. Others say that he wanne it all, saue India, Bactria, and Arabia. For hee made Ariens of Arabia the companion of his conquests, with whom he entred into a straight league of amitie, because he commanded many people and was his kinsman, and a Chuste, and the nearest Prince confronting Babylonia. His first enterprise was 40 vpon Syria, which hee might easily subdue, both because hee inuaded it on the sodaine, and because it lay next him: and also because the Arabians and their King Aricus (which bordered Syria) affisted him in the conquest thereof.

The King of Armenia, Barzanes, he forced to acknowledge him, and to aide him in his warre against Zoroaster : for from Armenia hee bent himselfe that way toward the East; but that euer he commanded the leffer Asia, I doe not beleeue, for none of his fucceffours had any poffession therein.

His third warre was against Pharnus, King of the Medes, whom it is said that hee ouerthrew, and cruelly murthered with his feuen children, though others affirme that they all dyed in one battaile against him. Whether hee invaded Zoroaster be- 50 fore the building or amplifying of Niniue, or after, it is vncertaine. It is faid that he made two expeditions into Bactria: and that finding little or ill fuccesse in the first he returned, and set the worke of Winiue forward: and then a second time entred Bactria with 1700000. foote, and 200000. horse, and 10000. fixe hundred Chariots: being encountred by Zoroaster with 400000. But Ninus prenailing, and Aug. de Cinit. Zoroaster flaine, he entred farther into the Countrie, and besieged the chiefe Cittie Dei. thereof, called Bactra or Bactrion (faith Stephanus: ) which by a paffage found, and stephateVrb. an affault given by Semiramis (the wife of Menon) hee entred and poffeft: Vpon this occasion Ninus both admiring her indgement and valour, together with her person and externall beautie, fancied her so strongly, as (neglecting all Princely refeects) he tooke her from her hulband, whose eyes he threatned to thrust out if hee refuled to confent. He therefore yeelding to the paffion of loue in Ninus, and to the passion of sorrow in himselfe, by the strong perswasions of shame and disho-10 nour, cast himselfe head-long into the water and died.

CHAP. XI.

Of ZOROASTER, supposed to have beene the chiefe Authour of Magick arts: and of the divers kinds of Magicke.

That ZOROASTER was not CHAM, nor the first inventor of Astrologie or of Magicke : and that there were diners great Magitians of this name.

CHAP.II. S.I.

OROASTER King of the Baltrians, Vincentius Supposeth to be Cham, the sonne of Noah: A fancie of little probabilitie. For Cham was the paternall Ancester of Ninus; the father of Chus; the grandfather of Numred, whose sonne was Belus, the father of Ninus. It may be that Vincentius had heard of that booke which was called Scripture Cham, deuised by some wicked knaue, and so intituled : of which Sixtus Senensis hath made the due mention.

It is reported by Cassianus, that Serenus Abbas gaue cassian in Ottal. the invention of Magicketo Cham, the sonne of Neab: Col. c. 21.

so did Comestor in his Scholasticall Historie: which Art (faith he) with the seuen liberall sciences he writ in fourteene pillers : seuen of which were made of braffe, to relift the defacing by the waters of the floud; and seuen of bricke against the injurie of fire. There was also another denised discourse, which went under the title of Prophetia Cham. Cassianus out of Serenus hath somewhat like vnto this of Commestor. These be Cassianus wordes. CHAM (filius NOAH) qui superstitionibus istis & facrilegis fuit artibus infectus, sciens nullum se posse super hijs memorialem librum in Arcam prorsus inferre, in qua erat cum patre iusto, &c. CHAM (the sonne of NOAH) who was infected with these superstitions, and sacrilegious Arts, knowing that he could not bring 50 any booke or memoriall of that nature into the Arke, wherein hee was to remaine with his godly Father, caused the precepts and rules thereof to be grauen in mettall and hard stone.

S. Augustine noteth that Zoroaster was said to have laught at his birth, when all other children weepe; which prefaged the great knowledge which afterward he attained vnto ; being taken for the inventor of natural 1 Magicke and other arts; for the corrupter, faith Plinie and Instine. But I doe not thinke that Zoroasier invented the doctrine of the Horoscopes or Nativities; or first found out the nature of hearbs, ftones, and minerals, or their Sympatheticall or Antipathethicall workings; of which I know not what King of Chaldea, is also made the Inuentour. I rather thinke that these knowledges were farre more ancient, and left by Noah to his sonnes. For

Abraham who had not any acquaintance with Zoroaster, (as Iosephus reporteth) was no leffe learned herein then any other in that age, if hee exceeded not all men then liuing: differing from the wifedome of after-times in this, that he knew and acknowledged the true cause, and giver of life and vertue to nature and all naturall things;

whereas others (forgetting Gods infinite, dispersed, and vniuersall power) admired 10

the inftruments, and attributed proper firength to the things themselves, (from which the effects were fensible) which belonged to that wisedome, Which being one,

Of the name of Magia : and that it was anciently farre diners from conjuring, and Witchcraft.

It is true that many men abhorre the very name and word ( Magus ) because of Simon Magus: who being indeede, not Magus, but Goes, (that is) familiar with euill spirits, vsurped that title. For Macieke, Coniuring, and Witcherie are farre differing arts, whereof Plinie being ignorant scoffeth thereat. For Nero (faith Plinie) who Plin.1.30.bif. had the most excellent Magicians of the East sent him by Tyridates King of Arme- nat. nia, who held that Kingdome by his grace, found the art after long studie and labour

Magus is a Persian word primitively, whereby is exprest such a one as is altoge- Poply & Ather conversant in things divine. And (as Plato affirmeth) the art of Magicke is the Plato in Alcib. art of worshipping God. To which effect Apollonius in his Epistles expounding the 20 word (ua) so faith, that the Persians called their Gods ways : whence he addeth that Magus is either & xard quous to Or tsparevilis કર્લા (that is) that Magus is a name sometime of him that is a God by nature; fometimes of him that is in the service of God: in which latter sense it is taken Matt.c.2. v. 1. And this is the first and highest kinde : which Piccolominie calleth divine Magicke : and these did the Latines newly Piccol.de desirit intitle sapientes or wisemen: For the feare and worship of Godisthe beginning of knowledge. Et verum Deum in offanio Mili meritamaiestate prosequitur, & Angelos ministros Dei, sed veri, eius venerationi nouit as- muysedicii cum, sistere, Idem damonas prodit terrenos, vagos, humanitatis inimicos. His Maiestie also in his first booke of Damonologie c. 3. acknowledgeth, that in the Persian tongue the word (Magus) imports as much as a contemplator of divine 40 and heauenly sciences; but vniustly so called, because the Chaldeans were ignorant of the true divinitie. And it is also right which His Maiestie anoweth, that under the name of Magicke all other vnlawfull arts are comprehended, and yet doth His Maiefire distinguish it from Necromancie, Witcheraft, and the rest: of all which hee hath written largely and most learnedly. For the Magicke which His Maiestie condemneth Demonolog, 1, 2 is of that kinde whereof the Denill is a partie. Daniel in his fecond Chapter nameth 61. foure kinds of those Wifemen: Arioli, Magi, Malesici, & Chaldai. Ariolithe old Latine translation calleth Sophistes: Vatablus and Pagninus Genethliacos, or Phylicos, or Philosophers, or (according to the note of Vatabius) Naturalists: Nempe funt Magi apud Barbaros, quod Philosophi apud Gracos (scilicet) diuinarum humanarum grerum scien-50 tiam profitentes, For the Magi are the same with the Barbarians, as the Philosophers are with the Gracians (that is) men that professe the knowledge of things both divine and humane. The Greeke and the English call them Inchaunters; Junius Magicians: Castalion Coniecturers: in the Syrian they are all foure by one name called Sapientes Babylonis, The true God. He also hath deliuered that there are Deuils earthly and wandering, and enemies and remaining in it selfe, can doe all things and reneweth all. Now whether this Zorosster (ouerthrowne by Ninus) were the same which was fo excellent a Naturalist, it is doubted. For Zoroaster the Magician, Ctesias cals Oxyartes, whom Plinie finds of a later time. And if Zoroaster were taken away by a Spirit (being in the midst of his Disciples) as some Authors report, then Zoro-Scalle, in Eugleb. after, flaine by Ninus, was not the Magician: which is also the opinion of Sca-

Againe, Tofephus and Cedrenus affirme that Seth first found out the Planets, or 20 wandring Starres, and other Motions of the Heauens; for if this art had beene inuented by Zoroafter, hee could not have attained to any fuch excellencie therein, in his owne life time; but being a man (as it feemeth) of fingular judgement, hee might adde somewhat to this kinde of knowledge, and leave it by writing to po-

But of this Zoroafter there is much dispute: and no lesse jangling about the word and art of Magicke. Arnobius remembreth foure to whom the name of Zorosster.or Zoroastres was ginen: which by Hermodorus and Dinon scemeth to bee but a cognomen, or name of art, and was as much to fay, as aftrorum cultor. The first, Arnobius calleth the Bactrian, which may be the same that Ninus ouerthrew: the second, a 30 Chaldean and the Astronomer of Winus: the third was Zoroaster Pamphylius, who liued in the time of Cyrus, and his familiar: the fourth, Zoroaster Armenius, the Nephew of Hostianes, which followed Xerxes into Greece: betweene whom and Cyrus there past 78. yeares. Suidas remembreth a fift, called Personedus sapiens: and Plato speaketh of Zoroaster the sonne of Oromasdes; which Picus Mirandula con-

Now of what Nation the first and chiefe Zoroaster was, it is doubted. Plinie and Laertius make him a Persian. Gemissihius or Pletho, Ficinus and Steuchius make him a Chaldean. But by those bookes of one Zoroaster, found by Picus Mirandula, it appeareth plainly, that the Author of them was a Chaldean by Nation, though the word 40 (Chaldean) was as often given to the learned Priests peculiarly as for any distinguishment of Nations. Porphyrius makes the Chaldei and Magi divers; Picus the fame. But that this Zoroafter was a Chaldean both by nation and profession, it appeareth by his bookes, which (faith Pieus) were written in the Chaldean tongue; and the Comment in the same language. Now that the Magi and they were not differing, it may be judged by the name of those bookes of Zoroaster, which in an Epistle of Mirandula to Ficinus, he faith, to be intituled, Patris Ezre ZOROASTRIS & MEL-CHIOR magorum oracula,

The second fort Vatablus, Pagnin, Iunius, and our English call Asirologers, Hierome and the Septuagint Magicians. The third kinde are Malefici, or Venefici; in Hierome, Pagnin, and the Septuagint

Witches, or Poyfoners : in Iunius Prastigiatores, or Sorcerers, as in English.

That Witches are also rightly so called Venefici, or Poysoners; and that indeede there is such a kinde of Malefici, which without any art of Magicke or Necromancio vse the helpe of the Deuill to doe mischiese, His Maiestie confirmeth in the first chapter of his second booke: speaking also in the fifth chapter of their practise, to mixe the powder of dead bodies with other thinges by the Deuill prepared; and atother times to make pictures of waxe, or clay, or otherwise (as it were Sacramentaliter) to 10 effect those things, which the Deuill by other meanes bringeth to passe.

The fourth, all Translatours call Chaldaans: who tooke vpon them to foretell all things to come, as well naturall as humane, and their euents: and this they vaunted to performe by the influences of the Starres by them observed, and vnderstood.

Such were, and to this day partly (if not altogether) are the corruptions, which haue made odious the very name of Magicke, hauing chiefly fought (as is the manner of all impostures) to counterfeit the highest and most noble part of it, yet so as they have also crept into the inferiour degrees.

A second kinde of Magicke was that part of Astrologie, which had respect to sowing and planting, and all kinds of agriculture and hufbandrie: which was a know-20 ledge of the motions and influences of the Starres into those lower elements.

Philo Indens goeth farther, affirming that by this part of Magicke or Astrologie together with the motions of the starres and other heavenly bodies, Abraham found out the knowledge of the true God, while he lived in Chaldea: Qui contemplation creaturarum cognouit Creatorem, (faith Io. Damascen.) Who knew the Creatour by the contemplation of the creature. Iosephus reporteth of Abraham that he instructed the A gyptians in Arithmeticke and Astronomie, who before ABRAHAMS comming unto them knew none of thefe (ciences.

And so doth Archangelus de Burgo in defence of Mirandula against Garsias. A LEX-ANDER & EVPOLEMON dicunt, quod ABRAH AM fanctitate & fapientia omnium 20 prastantissimus Chaldaos primum, deinde Phanices, demum Agyptios sacerdotes Astrologiam & diuina docuerit, ALEXANDER (faith hee, meaning Alexander Polyhistor) and EVPOLEMON affirme that ABRAHAM the holieft and wifest of men did first teach the Chaldeans, then the Phanicians, lastly the Agyptian Priests, Astrologie and di-uine knowledge.

The third kinde of Magicke containeth the whole Philosophie of nature; not the brablings of the Aristotelians, but that which bringeth to light the inmost vertues, and draweth them out of natures hidden bosome to humane vse, Virtutes in centro centrilatentes, Vertues hidden in the center of the center, according to the Chymilis. Of this fort were Albertus, Arnoldus de villa noua, Raymond, Bacon, and many others: 40 and before these, in elder times, and who better viderstood the power of nature, and how to apply things that worke to things that fuffer, were Zoroaster before spoken of: Apollonius Tyanaus remembred by St. Hierome to Paulinus; in some mens opinion Numa Pompilius among the Romanes: among the Indians Thespian: among the Agyptians Hermes: among the Babylonians Budda: the Thracians had Zamolxis: the Hyperborians (as is supposed) Abbaris: and the Italians Petrus Aponensis: The Magicke which these men profest is thus defined. Magiaest connexio à viro sapiente agentium per naturam cum patientibus, sibi congruenter respondentibus, vt inde operaprodeant non fine corum admiratione qui causamignorant, Magicke is the connexion of naturallagents * Toto in men- and patients, answerable each to other, wrought by a wife man to the bringing forth of such 50 do lucet Tring, effects, as are wonderfull to those that knownot their causes. In all these three kindes princeps, confla which other mendiuide into foure, it seemeth that Zoroaster was exceedingly learname, perfeit ned reflectally in the first and highest. For in his oracles hee consessed God to bee yand, or means the Creatour of the Vniuerfal: he beleeueth of the *Trinitie, which he could not inucfligate by any naturall knowledge: hee speaketh of Angels, and of Paradise: approucth the immortalitic of the foule : teacheth Truth, Faith, Hope, and Loue, discoursing of the Abstinence and Charitie of the Magi: which Oracles of his, Pfellus, Ficinus, Patritius, and others have gathered and translated.

Of this Zoroafter, Eusebius in the Theologie of the Phanicians ving Zoroasters owne wordes. Hac ad verbum feribit : (faith Evsebivs) Deus primus incorruptibi- Deprep. exang. lium, sempiternus, ingenitus, expers partium, sibijosi simillimus, bonorum omnium auriga, la.c.i. munera non expectans, optimus, prudentissimus, pater iuris, sine doctrina iustitiam perdoctus, natura perfectus, sapiens, sacra natura vnicus inuentor, &c. Sixtus Senensis speaking of the wisedome of the Chaldeans, doth distinguish those L.2.501.46. wise men into fine orders, (to wit) Chascedim, or Chaldaans: Asaphim, or Magicians: Chartumim; (which hee translates Arioli, or Sophists) Mecasphim, or Malefici, or Venefici, Witches, or Poysoners; and Gazarim Augures, or Aruspices, or Di-

Chaseedim were those which had the name of Chaldaans, which were Astronomers, 20 Hy calorum motus diligentissime spect arunt, These did most diligently contemplate the motions of the heauens: whom Philo in the life of Abraham describeth.

Asaphim were in the old Latine translation called Philosophers: of the Septuagint and of Hierome Magicians, qui de omnium tam diuinarum quam humanarum rerum causis Philosophati sunt, Who discoursed of the causes of all things, as well divine as humane : of whom Origen makes Balaam (the sonne of Beer) to be the first : but Laertius ascribeth Laertila the invention of this art to Zoroastres the Persian.

Chartumim, or Inchanters, the Disciples (faith S. Augustine, Plinie, and Iustine) of another Zoroastres: who corrupted the admirable wifedome of the Mags, which he received from his Ancesters.

Mecasphim, or Venefici, or Witches, are those of which we have spoken already out of His Maiesties booke of Damonologia.

Gazarim, or Aruspices (after S. Hierome) which divine from the entrailes of beafts flaine for facrifices for by Gazarim others understand Augures, who divine by the flying, finging, or feeding of birds.

By this distinction wee may perceive the difference betweene those wise men which the Kings of Babylon entertained; and that the name and profession of the Magi among the ancient Persians was most honest. For as Peucer truly observeth, praerant religioni Persica, vt in populo Dei Leuita, studij (g. vera Philosophia dediti erant : Peucer de dininec quisquam Rex Persarum poterat esse, qui non antea Magorum disciplinam scientiamá, nat.inc.de mag.

40 percepiset. The Magi (saith he) were the chiefe Ministers of the Persian Religion, as the folias. 6136. Leuites among Gods people, and they were given to the studies of true Philosophie: neither could any be king of the Persians, who had not first beene exercised in the mysteries and knowledge of the Magi. Sixtus Senensis in defence of Origen against Polychronius and Theophilus hath two kinds of Mugick, his owne wordes are these. Et ne quem moneant pra- Bibl. 1.6. fol 1424. missa Polychrony & Theophili testimonia, sciendum cst duplicem esse Magiam; alteram vbig, ab Origine damnatam, que per sudera cum damonibus inita aut verè aut apparenter operatur : alteram ab Origine laudatam, que ad practicen naturalis philosophie per tinet, docens admirabiles res operari ex applicatione mutua naturalium virtutum ad inuicem agentiumac patientium. That the testimonies of Theophilus and Polychronius (saith he) may not 50 moone any man, it is to be understood that Magick is of two fortes, the one enery where con.

demned by Origen, which worketh (whether truly or feemingly) by couenants made with Deuils; the other commended by Origen; which appertaineth to the practick part of naturall philosophie, teaching to worke admirable things by the mutuallapplication of naturall vertues, agent and suffering reciprocally. This partition Hierome doth embrace in the first of his

Commentaries vpon Daniel where confidering of the difference which Daniel makes betweene these fower kindes of wise men formerly remembred, he vseth this dittinction; Quos nos hariolos; cateri emusses (id est) incantatores interpretati sunt, videntur mihi esse qui verbis rem peragunt; Magi qui de singulis philosophantur; malesici, qui sanguine utuntur & victimis, & Jape contingunt corporamortuorum : porro in Chaldais Genethliacos significari puto, quos vulgo Mathematicos vocant. Consuetudo autem communis Magos pro Maleficis accipit, qui aliter habentur apud gentem suam, eo quòd sint Philosophi Chaldaorum : & adartis huius scientiam Regesquog & Principes eiusdem gentis omniafaciunt; unde er in nativitate Domini (aluatoris ip/i primum ortumeius intellexerunt, & venientes in [anctam Bethlehem adorauerunt puerum, stella de super o stendente. They whom we call 10 Sorcerers, and other sinterpret inchanters, seeme to mee such as performe things by words; Magicians, fuch as handle every thing philosophically; Witches, that we blood and sacrifices, and often lay hands on the body of the dead : further, among the Chaldaans Itake them to be fignified by the name of Conjecturers upon nativities, whom the vulgar call Mathematicians. But common custome takes Magicians for Witches, who are otherwise reputed in their owne nation: for they are the Philosophers of the Chaldwans: yea Kings and Princes of that nation doe all that they doe according to the knowledge of this art: whence at the nativity of the Lord our Saulour they first of all understood his birth, and comming unto holy Bethichem did worship the Childe: the starre from about shewing him unto them. By this therefore it appeareth that there is great difference betweene the doctrine of a Magician, and 20 the abuse of the word. For though some writers affirme that Magus hodie dicitur, qui ex fædere facto viitur diaboli opera ad rem quamcung; that he is called a Magician now adaies, who having entred league with the deuill v feth his helpe to any matter ; yet (as our Saujour faid of Dinorce) it was not so from the beginning. For the Art of Magicke is of the wiledome of nature; other artes which vndergoe that title were invented by the fallhood, subtletie and enuic of the Deuill. In the latter there is no other do-Etrine, then the vse of certaine ceremonics permalam fidem : by an euill faith : in the former no other ill, then the inuestigation of those vertues and hidden properties which God hath given to his creatures, and how fitly to applie things that worke to things that fuffer. And though by the Iewes, those excellent Magicians, Philosophers, 20 and Divines which came to worthip our Saujour Christ, were termed Mechaschephim, or Mecasphim; yet had they no other reason, then common custome therein. Consuctudo autem communis Magos pro maleficis accipit, Common custome (faith S. Hierome) understandeth Witches under the name of Magicians: And antiquity (faith Peter Martyr) by Pet.Mart-loci. the word (Magi) understood good and wife men Quidigitur expanescis Magi nomen formidolose, nomen Euangelio gratiosum, quod non maleficum & veneficum (ed sapientem sonat Mar. Causa fuit mirificentia quo- 40 rundam operum, qua re vera opera naturalia sunt: veruntamen quia procuratione dæmonum naturas ip (as vel coniungentium, vel commiscentium, vel aliter ad operandum expedientium facta sunt, opera domonum credebantur ab ignorantihus hac. De operibus huiusmodiest Gul. Parissen de, Magia naturalis, quam Necromantiam multi improprie vocant. The maruelousnesse of some workes, which (indeed) are naturall, hath beene the sause of this slaunder: but because these workes have been done by procurement of Deuils toyning the natures together or mingling them, or how soeuer sitting the natures to their working, they were thought the workes of the Deuils by the ignorant. Among these workes is naturall Magicke, which men call very improperly Necromancie.

Mirandula in his Apologie goeth further: for by understanding (saith he) the ut- 50 termost activitie of naturall agents we are assisted to know the Divinity of Christ: for otherwise (to vse his owne words) ignoratis terminis potentia & virtutis rerum naturalium stat nos dubitare illa eadem opera, qua fecit Christus, posse fieri per media naturalia. The termes or limits of naturall power and vertue not understood, wee must needes doubt whether those very workes which Christ did; may not bee done by naturall meanes: after which he goeth on in this fort. Ideo non haretice, non superstitiose dixi, sed verisime & Catholice, per talem Magiam adiuuari nos in cognoscenda diuinitate Christi, Therefore I said not heretically, not superstitiously, but most truly and Catholikely; that by such Magicke we are surthered in knowing the distinitie of Christ. And seeing the Jewes and others the enemies of Christian religion, doe impudently and impioufly object, that those miracles which Christ wrought were not aboue nature, but by the exquisite knowledge thereof performed: Mirandula a man for his yeares fuller of knowledge then any that this latter age hath brought forth, might with good reason anow, that the vttermost of 10 natures workes being knowne, the workes which Christ did, and which (as himfelfe witneffeth) no man could doe, doe manifestly testifie of themselues, that they were performed by that hand which held nature therein but as a pencill, and by a power infinitely supreme and divine; and thereby those that were faithlesse, were either conuerted or put to filence.

of the Historie of the World.

That the good knowledge in the ancient Magicke is not to be condemned : though the Deuill here as in other kinds hath sought to obtrude eaill things under the name and colour of good things.

CHAP.11. S.2.

Eeing therefore it is confessed by all of understanding, that a Magician (according to the Persian word) is no other then diuinorum cultor & interpres, A studious observer and expounder of divine things : and the art it selfe (I meane the Art of naturall Magicke) no other, quamnaturalis Philosophia absoluta consummatio, Then the absolute perfection of naturall

Philosophie: Certainly then it proceedeth from common ignorance, and no way forteth with wife and learned men promifeue, and without difference and diffinction. to confound lawfull and praise-worthy knowledge with that impious, and (to vie 30 S. Paules wordes) with those beggerly rudiments, which the Deuill hath shuffled in, and by them bewitcheth and befooleth gracelesse men. For if we condemne naturall Magicke, or the wisedome of nature, because the Deuill (who knoweth more then any man) doth also teach Witches and Poysoners the harmefull parts of hearbs, drugges, minerals, and excrements then may wee by the same rule condemne the Physition, and the Art of healing. For the Deuill also in the Oracles of Amphiaraus, Amphilochus, Trophonius, and the like, taught men in dreames what hearbs and drugges were proper for fuch and fuch diseases. Now no man of judgement is ignorant, that the Deuill from the beginning hath fought to thrust himselfe into the same imployment among the ministers and servants of God, changing him-

40 selfe for that purpose into an Angell of light. He hath led men to Idolatrie as a doctrinc of religion, he hath thrust in his Prophets among those of the true God; he hath corrupted the Art of Astrologie, by giving a divine power to the Starres, teaching men to esteeme them as Gods, and not as instruments. And (as Bunting obser- Bunting obserueth) it is true, that iudiciall Astrologie is corrupted with many superstitions: but the abuse of the thing takes not away the Art; considering that heauenly bodies (as euen generall experience sheweth) have and exercise their operation vpon the inferiour. For the Sunne, and the Starre of Mars doedrie; the Moone doth moisten, and gouerne the Tides of the Sea. Againe, the Planets, as they have severall and proper names, so have they severall and proper vertues: the Starres doe also

50 differ in beautic and in magnitude; and to all the Starres hath God given also their proper names, which (had they not influences and vertues different) needed not: He counteit the number of the Starres, and callett them by their names. But into the good Tallist. and profitable knowledge of the celestiall influences, the Deuil ceaseth not to shuffle in his superstitions; and so to the knowledge of the secret vertues of nature hath he fastened his doctrine of Characters, numbers, and incantations; and taught men to beleeue in the strength of wordes and letters: (which without faith in God are but inke or common breath) thereby either to equall his owne with the all-powerfull word of God, or to diminish the glorie of Gods creating word, by whom are all

Moreouer, hee was never ignorant, that both the wife and the fimple observe when the Sea-birds for fake the Thoares and flie into the land, that commonly some great storme followeth; that the high flying of the Kite and the Swallow betoken faire weather; that the crying of Crowes and bathing of Ducks foreshew raine: for they feele the aire moistened in their quilles. And it is written in Hieremie the 10 Prophet, Euen the Storke in the aire knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow. Hereupon, this enemie of mankinde, working vpon these as vpon the rest of Gods creatures, long time abused the Heathen by teaching them to observe the flying of Fowles, and thereby to judge of good or ill successe in the warre: and (withall) to looke into their entrailes for the fame, as if God had written the fecrets of unsearchable prouidence in the liners and bowels of birds and beafts. Againe, because it pleased God sometimes by dreames, not only to warne and teach his Prophets and Apostles, but Heathen Princes also; as Abimelech to restore Sara to Abraham; because he admonished Ioseph, and by dreame informed Iacob, Laban, Pharao, Salomon, Paul, Ananias, the Magi of the East, and others. For as it is remem- 20 bred in I o B : In dreames and visions of the night when sleepe falleth upon men, &c. then God openeth the eares, that he might cause man to returne from his enterprise, therefore, I fav. doth the Deuill also practise his divinations by dreames, or (after Parisiensis) divinitatis imitationes, his mocke-divinitie. This in the end grew so common, as Aristides compiled an Ephemerides of his owne dreames: Mithridates of those of his Concubines. Yea the Romanes finding the inconvenience hereof, because all dreames ( without distinction of causes) were drawne to distinction, forbad the same by a Codex de male- law, as by the wordes of prohibition (aut narrandis somnys occultam aliquam artem dininandi) it may appeare. Likewise by the law of God in Deuteronomie cap. 13. feducing dreamers were ordered to bee flaine. Yet it is not to bee contemned that 20 Marcus Antonius was told a remedy in his dreame for two grieuous diseases that op-Aug. de cura pro press him; nor that of Alexander Macedon for the cure of Ptolomies poisoned wound; mortuu agenda. nor that which S. Augustine reporteth of a Millanoise; whose sonne (the Father dead) being demanded a debt already paied, was told by his Father in a dreame where the acquittance lay to discharge it; nor that of Astrages of his Daughter, and many others of like nature. Of the reason of all which, for asmuch as the cause is not in our felues, this place denieth dispute.

ð. IIII.

That DANIELS misliking NABVCHODONOSORS condemning of the Magicians doth not instifie all their practises.

Vt it may be objected, that if fuch divination as the Heathens commonly vsed were to be condemned in them, who tooke on them very many and strange reuelations: how came it to passe that Daniel both condemned the haftie sentence of Nabuchodonosor against the Magieians of Chaldea, and in a fort forbad it? especially considering that such kinde of people God himfelfe commanded to bee flaine. To this divers answeres 10 may be given. First, it seemeth that Daniel had respect to those Chaldeans, because they acknowledged that the dreame of the King, which himselfe had forgotten, could not be knowne to any man by any art, either Naturall or Diabolicall: For there is none other (faid the Chaldeans) that can declare it before the King, except the Gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh: and herein they confessed the power of the euer-liuing God.

Secondly, it may be conicctured (and that with good reason) that among so many learned men, some of them did not exercise themselues in any cuill or vnlawfull. arts, but were meerely Magicians and Naturalists: and therefore when the King commanded to kill all, Daniel perswaded the contrarie, and called it a hastic judgement, which proceeded with furie without examination. And that some of those mens studies and Professions were lawfull, it may be gathered by Daniels instruction: for himselfe had beene taught by them, and was called chiefe of the Inchanters; of which some were termed Sooth faiers, others Astrologians, others Chaldeans, others Magi or Wifemen: and therefore of distinct professions.

Thirdly, Daniel milliked and forbad the execution of that judgement, because it was vniust. For howsoeuer those men might deserue punishment for the practise of vnlawfull Arts (though not vnlawfull according to the law of that State) yet herein they were altogether guiltlesse. For it exceeded humane power to pierce the Kings thought, which the Deuill himselfe could not know. So then in Daniels diflike, and hindering of the execution of fentence of death pronounced against the Magicians, there is no absolute instifying of their practise and profession.

The abuse of things which may be found in all kinds, is not to condemne the right vie of them.

Otwithstanding this mixture every where of good with enill, of fallehood with truth, of corruption with cleannesse and purity. The good. The truth, The puritie in enery kind may well be embraced: As in the ancient worthipping of God by facrifice; there was no man knowing God among the Elders, that therefore forbare to offer facrifice to the 20 God of all power, because the Deuill in the image of Baal, Astaroth, Chemoth, Jupiter, Apollo, and the like was fo adored.

Neither did the abuse of Astrologie terrifie Abraham (if we may believe the most ancient and religious Historians) from observing the motions and natures of hea- ex dries uenly bodies; neither can it dehort wife and learned men in these daies from attributing those vertues, influences, and inclinations to the Starres and other lights of heauen, which God hath given to those his glorious creatures.

The sympatheticall and antipatheticall working of hearbes, plants, stones, minerals, with their other vtmost vertues sometimes taught by the Deuill, and applied by his Ministers to harmefull and vncharitable endes can neuer, terrifie the honest 40 and learned Phylician or Magician from the vling of them to the helpe and comfort of mankinde : neither can the illusions, whereby the Deuill betraieth such men as are fallen from God, make other men reject the observations of dreames; so farre as with a good faith and a religious caution they may make vse of them.

Lastly the prohibition to marke flying of foules (as signes of good or cuill suc- Dent. 18.20) ceffe) hath no reference at all to the crying of Crowes against raine, or to any observation not superstitious, and whereof a reason or cause may be given. For if we confound artes with the abuse of them, wee shall not only condemne all honest trades and enterchange among men (for there are that deceive in all professions) 50 but wee shall in a short time burie in forgetfulnesseall excellent knowledge and all learning, or obscure and couer it ouer with a most scornefull and beggerly ignorance: and (as Plinie teacheth) we should shew our selves ingrates erga ees, quilabore curag, lucem nobis aperuerunt in hac luce , Vnthankefull we should shew our selves towards those, who with paines and care have discovered unto us light in this light.

· Indeed not only these naturall knowledges are condemned by those that are ignorant; but the Mathematickes also and Professors therof: though those that are excellently learned judge of it in this fort. In speculo mathematico Verumillud, quodin omni scibili quaritur relucet non modo remota similitudine, sed fulgida quadam propinquitate. In the glasse of the Mathematickes that truth doth shine, which is sought in every kind of knowledge; not in an obscure image, but in a neere and manifest reprasentation.

V I.

Of the divers kindes of unlawfull Magick

T is true that there are many artes, if we may so call them, which are covered with the name of Magick: and effected abufuely to bee as branches of that tree, on whoose root they neuer grew. The first of branches of that tree, on whoole root they neuer grew. The first of these hath the name of Necromance or Goetia: and of this agains there are divers kindes. The one is an Invocation at the graves of the dead, to whom the Deuill himselfe gives answere in stead of those that seeme to appeare. For certaineit is, that the immortal foules of men do not inhabit the dust and dead bodies, but they give motion and understanding to the living: death being nothing else but a separation of the body and soule: and therefore the soule is not to be found in the graues.

A second practise of those men, who pay tribute or are in league with Sathan, is that of conjuring or of railing up Deuils, of whome they hope to learne what they lift. These men are so distract, as they beleeue that by terrible words they make the Deuill to tremble; that being once impaled in a circle (a circle which cannot keepe out a Mouse) they therein (as they suppose) insconce themselues against that great monfter. Doubtleffe they forget that the Deuil is not terrified from doing ill and all that is contrary to God and goodnesse, no, not by the fearefull word of the Almighty: and that he feared not to offer to fit in Gods feat, that he made no feruple to tempt our Sauiour Chrift, whom himselfe called the Sonne of God. So forgetting these proud parts of his, an vnworthy wretch will yet resolue himselfe, that 20 he can draw the Deuill out of Hell, and terrifie him with a phrase: whereas in very truth, the obedience which Deuils seeme to vse, is but thereby to possesse themselves of the bodies and foules of those which raise them vp; as His Maiestie in his Booke aforenamed hath excellently taught, That the Deuils obedience is only secundum quid, scilicet ex pacto; respective, that is, upon bargaine.

I cannot tell what they can doe vpon those simple and ignorant Deuils, which genus quoddam inhabite Iamblicus imagination; but fure I am the rest are apt enough to come vncalpotential value and alwaies attending the cogitations of their servants and vassals, do no way eret em et incon- neede any fuch inforcement.

Or it may be that these Conjurers deale altogether with Cardans mortall Deuils, 40 a fallo neg, pol. following the opinion of Rabbi Suornathan and of Porphyrius, who taught that fibile different these kind of Deuils lived not above a thousand yeares: which Plutarch in his Treaan impogini.
L. vines in cap, tile de Oraculorum defectu confirmeth, making example of the great God Pan. For were it true that the Deuils were in awe of wicked men, or could be compelled by Aug de Civit dei them, then would they alwaies feare those words and threats, by which at other CHAM. exercile. times they are willingly mastered. But the Familiar of Simon Magus when he had lifted him up in the ayre, cast him headlong out of his clawes, when he was sure he should perish with the fall. If this perhaps were done by St Peters praiers (of which Euleb. biff. eecl. S. Peter no where vaunteth) yet the fame pranckat other times vpon his own accord the Deuill plaied with Theodotus: who transported (as Simon Magus was supposed 50 to have beene) had the same mortall fall that he had. The like successe had Budas, a principall piller of the Manichean herefie, as Socrates in his Ecclefiafticall Historie witneffeth: and for a manifest proofe hereof wee see it every day, that the Deuill leaues all Witches and Sorcerers at the gallowes, for whom at other times hee ma-keth himfelfe a Pegafus, to conneigh them in haft to places farre diffant, or at least makes them fo thinke: For to those that received not the truth (faith S. PAVL) God shall cornt. 5.5. (end them strong illusions. Of these their supposed transportations (yet agreeing with their confessions) His Maiestic in the second booke and the fourth chapter of the Demonologie, hath confirmed by vnanswerable reasons, that they are meerely illustue. Another fort there are who take on them to include Spirits in Glaffes and Crystals: of whom Cufanus : Fatui funt incantatores, qui in unque & vitro volunt spiritum inclu- Exercital. 2. dere : quia Spiritus non clauditur corpore, They are foolish inchanters which will shut up their fairits within their nailes or in glaffe: for a Spirit cannot be inclosed by a body.

There is also another art belides the afore mentioned, which they call Theureia, or White Magicke; a pretended conference with good Spirits or Angels, whom by facrifice and inuocation they draw out of Heauen, and Communicate withall. But the administring Spirits of God, as they require not any kinde of adoration due vnto their Creatour: fo feeing they are most free Spirits; there is no man fo abfurd to thinke (except the Deuill haue corrupted his vnderstanding) that they can bee constrained or commanded out of Heauen by threats. Wherefore let the professiours thereof couer themselves how they please by a professed puritie of life, by the ministeric of Infants, by fasting and abstinence in generall; yet all those that tamper with immateriall fubitances and abstract natures, either by facrifice, vow, or inforce-20 ment, are men of euill faith and in the power of Sathan. For good Spirits or Angels cannot be constrained; and the rest are Deuils which willingly obey. Other forts there are of wicked divinations : as by fire, called Pyromantia: by water, called Hydromantia: by the aire, called Mataotechnia, and the like.

The last, and (indeede) the worst of all other is Fascination or Witchcrast: the practifers whereof are no leffe enuious and cruell, reuengefull and bloudy, then the Deuill himselfe. And these accursed creatures having sold their soules to the Deuill worketwo waies; either by the Deuill immediatly, or by the art of poisoning. The difference betweene Necromanciers and Witches, His Maiestie hath excellently taught in a word: that the one (in a fort) command; the other obey the Deuill,

There is another kinde of petty witcherie (if it be not altogether deceit) which they call charming of beafts and birds, of which Pythagoras was accused, because an Eliantic non Eagle lighted on his shoulder in the Olympian fields. But if the same exceeded the bifter. art of Falconrie, yet was it no more to be admired then Mahomets Doue, which he had vsed to feede with wheate out of his eare: which Doue, when it was hungrie, lighted on Mahomets shoulder, and thrust his bill therein to finde his breake-fast: Mahomet perswading the rude and simple Arabians, that it was the holy Ghost that gaue him aduise. And certainly if Bankes had lived in elder times, hee would have shamed all the inchaunters of the world: for whosoeuer was most samous among them, could neuer master or instruct any beast as he did his Horse.

For the drawing of Serpents out of their dennes, or killing of them in the holes by inchantments (which the Marsians, a people of Italie practifed. Colubros difrum- Encilin Satyr. pit Marsia cantu, Inchanting Marsia makes the Snakes to burst.) That it hath beene vsed it appeares Psal. 58.6. though I doubt not, but that many impostures may bee in this kinde; and even by naturall causes it may be done. For there are many fumes that will either draw them out or destroy them; as womens haire burnt, and the like. So many things may be elaied in the entrance of their holes that will allure them : and therein I finde no other Magicke or inchantment, then to draw out a Mouse with a peece of tosted cheese.

And (besides St Augustine) Iustine Martyr, Hilarius, Tertullian, Athanasius, Chryfostome and others beleived firmely, and taught it: that the soules of men being once seperate from their bodies did not wander on the earth at all. Credere debemus (faith CYRIL) quum a corporibus sanctorum anima abierint, tanquam in manus charissimi patris bonitati dinina commendari. We must beleiue when the foules of holy men are departed from their bodies, that they be commended to the Divine Goodnesse as into the hands of of a most deere Father. If then they be in Heauen, the power of the Deuill cannot stretch so high: ifin Hell, ab inferno nulla est redemptio, from Hell there is no redemption. For 10 there are but two habitations after death; Vnum (faith AVGVSTINE) in igne aterno; alterum in regno aterno: the one in eternall fire; the other in Gods eternall kingdome. And though it bee written in Iure Pontificio, that many there are who beleiue that the dead have againe appeared to the living; yet the Glosse vpon the same Text 25,95, Epicopi. findes it ridiculous. Credunt, & male, quia funt Phantasmata (saith the Glosse) They beleiue, and they beleiue amisse, because they be but Phantasmes, or Apparitions. For whereas any fuch voice hath beene heard, faying, I am the Soule of fuch a one; hecoratio a fraude at g, deceptione diabolica est. That speach is framed by the fraud and deception of the Deuill, faith CHRYSOSTOME. Likewise of the same faith Tertullian. Absit vt animam cuiuslibet sancti, nedum Propheta, à damonio credamus extractam. God forbid that 20 wee should thinke that the soule of any holy man, much lesse of a Prophet, should bee drawne

It is true that the Scriptures call that apparition Samuel; so doe they the wodden images Cherubins: and false brazen Gods are called Gods: and the like. And whereas these of the contrary opinion build vpon that place of the 26. of Ecclesiasticus (a booke not numbred among the Canonicall Scriptures, as S. Augustine himselfe in his Treatise, if it bee his de cura pro mortuis agenda confesseth) yet Siracides following the literall sense and phrase of the Scriptures, proueth nothing at all: For though the Deuill would willingly perswade, that the soules (yea euen of inst men) were in his power, yet so farre is it from the promises of the Scriptures, and from Gods iust 30 and mercifull nature, and so contrary to all divine reason, as Saint Augustine (or whosoeuer wrote that booke before cited) might rightly terme it a detestable opinion so to thinke. For if God had so absolutely forsaken Saul, that hee resufed to answere him either by dreames, by Vrim, or by his Prophets: it were sottish to conceiue, that he would permit the Deuill, or a wicked Witch to raise a Prophet from the dead in Sauls respect : it being also contrary to his owne diuine Law to aske counsaile of the dead; as in Deuteronomie 18. and elsew here. Therefore it was the Deuill, and not the foule of a dead bodie, that gaue answere

CHAP. XII.

Of the memorable buildings of NINVs, and of his mife SEMIRAMIS: and of other of her actes.

ò. I.

Of the magnificent building of Niniue by NINVS: and of Babylon by SEMIRAMIS.

Vt to come backe to Ninus the amplifier and finisher of Niniue: whether he performed it before or after the ouerthrow of Zoroaster, it is vncertaine. As for the Citty it selfe, it is agreed by all prophane writers. and confirmed by the Scriptures, that it exceeded all other in circuit, and answerable magnificence. For it tulin, la, Died. had in compasse 440. stadia, or furlongs: the walles ii.2. whereof were an hundred foot vpright, and had fuch Sabel, I.en 1: a bredth as three charriots might passe on the ram-pire in front: these walles were garnished with 1 500. towers which gaue exceeding beautie to the rest, and a strength no lesse admirable for the nature of those times.

But this Cittie (built in the Plaines of Affgria, and on the bankes of Tigris, and in the Region of Eden,) was founded long before Ninus time; and (as ancient Histo-40 rians report, and more lately Nauderus) had the name of Campfor, at flich rime as Ninus amplified the fame, and gaue it a wall, and called it after his owne name.

For these workes of Babylon and Niniue begun by Nimrod in Chaldes, and in Affrria, Ninus and Semiramis made perfect. Ninus finished Ninue, Semiramis Babylon: Herod.L.t. 714, Namu and Semanus made perfect. Namus influed a visual, see when influed wherein shee sought to exceed her husband by farre. Indeed in the first Age when influed wherein sheet sought to exceed her husband by farre. Princes were moderate, they neither thought how to inuade others, nor feared to be inuaded : labouring to build Townes and Villages for the vse of themselues and their people without either Walles or Towers; and how they might discharge the earth of woods, briars, bulhments, and waters, to make it the more habitable and fertile. But Semiramis liuing in that age, when Ambition was in strong youth: and 50 purpoling to follow the conquest which her husband had vindertaken, gaue that beauty and strength to Babylon which it had.

of the end of NINVS: and beginning of SEMIRAMIS reigne.

His she did after the death of her husband Ninus: who after he had maistred Bactria, and subjected vnto his Empire all those Regions betweene it and the Mediterran Sea and Helleftont (Afia the leffe excepted) and finished the worke of Niniue, heleft the world in the yeare thereof 2019. after he had raigned 52. yeares. Plutarch reporteth that Semuramis defired her husband Winus, that he would graunt vnto her the absolute to fouereigne power for one day. Diod. Siculus out of Athenaus, and others, speakes of five daies. In which time (moucd either with defire of rule, or licentious liberty. or with the memory of her husband Menon, who perished for her) she caused Ninus her husband to be flaine. But this feemeth rather a fcandall cast on her by the Greekes, then that it had any truth.

Howfoeuer Ninus came to his ende, Semiramis tooke on her after his death the fole rule of the Affyrian empire : of which, Ninus was faid to be the first Monarch because he changed his seat from Babylonia in Chaldea to Niniue in Assyria. Iusline reports that Semiramis (the Better to inuest herselfe, and in her beginning without murmure or offense to take on her so great a charge) presented herselfe to the peo- 20 ple in the person of her sonne Ninias or Zameis, who bare her externall forme and proportion without any fenfible difference.

This report I take also to be fained, for which many arguments might bee made. But as she ruled long, so she performed all those memorable actes which are written of her by the name of Semiramis, and subscribed that letter which she sent to the King of India (her last challenge and undertaken conquest) by her owne name. And were it true that her sonne Ninias had such a stature at his Fathers death, as that Semiramis (who was very personable) could be taken for him; yet it is very vnlikely that she could have held the Empire from him 42. yeares after by any such subtilety: (for fo long shee reigned after the death of her Husband:) but it may bee true 20 that Ninias or Zameis (being wholly given to his pleasures as it is written of him) was well pleased with his Mothers prosperous gouernment and vndertakings.

of Semiramis parentage, and education, and Metamorphosis of her Mother.

Ome writers (of which Plutarch is one) make this famous woman to haue beene of base parentage, calling her after the name of her Coun-40 trey, a Syrian. Berofus cals her after the name of her Citty wherein she was borne, Semiramis Ascalonitis; of Ascalon, the ancient Citty and Metropolis of the Philistims. Others report her to be the daughter of Derceta, a Curtizan of Ascalon exceeding beautifull. Others say that this Derceta or Dercetis the mother of Semiramis was sometimes a Recluse, and had profest a holy and a religious life, to whom there was a Temple dedicated feated on the banke of a Lake adioyning to Ascalon; and afterward falling in love with a goodly yong man the was by him made with child, which (for feare of extreme punishment) she conuaied away, and caused the same to be hidden among the high reedes which grew on the bankes of the Lake: in which (while the child was left to the mercy of wild so beafts) the same was fed by certaine birds, which vsed to feed upon or neere those waters. But I take this tale to be like that of Lupa the harlot that fostered Romulus. For some one or other adioyning to this Lake had the charge and fosteridge of this child, who being perchance but some base and obscure creature, the mother might thereby hope the better to couer her dishonour and breach of vow; notwithstanding which the was cast from the top of her Temple into the Lake adjoining, and (as the Poets have fained) changed by Venus into a fifth, all but her face, which still held the same beauty and humane shape. It is thought that from this Derceta the inuention of that Idoll of the Philistims (called Dagon) was taken for it is true, that Dagon had a mans face, and a fishes body: into whose Temple when the Arke of God was brought, the Idoll fell twice to the ground: and at the second fall there remained only the Trunck of Dagon, the head being broken of : For fo St. Hierome hath converted that place. Vatablus, Pagninus, and Junius write it by Dagon onely, to which fignifieth a fifth, and so it only appeared: the head thereof by the second all being fundred from the body.

For my felfe I rather thinke, that this Dagon of the Philistims was an Idoll reprefenting Triton, one of those imaginary Sca-gods under Neptune. For this Citty being maritimate (as all those of the Philistims were, and so were the best of Phanicia) vied all their devotions to Neptune, and the rest of the pettie Gods which attended

Of her expedition into India, and death after discomfiture: with a note of the · improbabilitie of her vices.

Vt for her Pedigree I leave it to the Affyrian Heralds: and for her vitious life I ascribe the report therof to the envious and lying Grecians. For delicacie and ease do more often accompanie licentiousnesse in men and women, then labour and hazzard do. And if the one halfe bee true which is reported of this Lady, then there neuer lined any

Prince or Princesse more worthy of fame then Semirania was, both for the workes the did at Babylon and elsewhere, and for the warres the made with glorious successes: 30 all but her last enterprise of India; from whence both Strabo and Arianus report that the neuer returned: and that of all her most powerful! Army there survived but only twenty persons: the rest being either drowned in the river of Indus, dead of the famine, or flaine by the fword of Staurobates. But as the multitude which went out are more then reason bath numbred: so were those that returned lesse then could haue escaped of such an Army, as consisted of source millions and vpwards. For these suid, $845.lik.$6 numbers which she leuied by her Lieutenant Dercetaus (faith Suidas) did consist of Foot-men three millions; of Horsemen one million; of Charriots armed with hookes on each fide one hundred thousand; of those which fought vpon Camels as many; of Camels for burden two hundred thousand; of raw Hides for all vses 40 three hundred thousand; of Galleies with brazen heads three thousand, by which the might transport ouer Indus at once three hundred thousand fouldiers: which Gallies were furnished with Syrians, Phanicians, Cilicians, and men of Cyprus. These incredible and impossible numbers, which no one place of the earth was able to nourish (had every man and beast but fed vpon grasse) are taken from the authority of Ctesias whom Diodorus followeth. But as the one may be taxed with many friuolous reports: fo Diedorus himselfe hath nothing of certainty, but from Xerxes expedition into Greece and afterwards: whose Armic (though the same was farre inferior to that of Semiramis) yet had it weight enough to ouerlode the beliefe of any reasonable man. For all Authors consent, that Xerxes transported into Greece an Ar-50 my of 1700000 and gathered together (therein to passe the Hellespont) three thoufand Gallies, as Herodstus out of the seuerall Provinces whence those Galleies were

But of what multitude socuer the Armie of Semiramis consisted : the same being broken and ouerthrown by Staurobates upon the banks of Indus, canticum cantauit extremum: she sang her last song; and (as Antiquity hath fained) was changed by the Gods into a Doue, (the bird of Venus) whence it came that the Babylonians gaue a Doue in their enfignes.

Mong all her other memorable and more then magnificent workes 10 (belides the wall of the Citty of Babylon) was the Temple of Bel, ere-Eted in the middle of this Citty, inuironed with a wall carried fourcsquare of great heighth and beauty, having on each square certaine brazen gates curiously engrauen. In the Core of the square she raised a Tower of a furlong high, which is halfe a quarter of a mile; and vpon it agains (taking a Basis of a lesse circuit) she set a second Tower; and so eight in all, one about an other: vpon the top whereof the Chaldeans Priests made the observation of the starres, because this Tower ouer-topped the ordinary cloudes. By beholding the ruines of this Tower hanc many Trauailers beene deceived:

There were burnt in this Temple one hundred thousand talents of frankincenseeucry yeare (faith Herodotus). This Temple did Nabuchodonosor adorne with the spoiles of Hierusalem, & of the temple of Salomon: all which veffels & ornaments Cyrus redeliuered. This Temple Zerxes evened with the foile; which Alexander is faid to have repaired by the perswasions of the Chaldeans. I deny not that it might haue been in his defire so to do; but he enjoyed but a few yeares after Babylon taken, Proclin Timeo. and therefore could not performe any fuch worke. # THE FIRST PART OF THE HISTORIE OF THE WORLD:

INTREATING OF THE TIMES FROM The birth of ABRAHAM to the destruction of the Temple of Salomon.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. T.

Of the time of the birth of ABRAHAM: and of the vse of this question, for the ordering of the Sto. rie of the Assyrian Empire.

of some of the successors of Semiramis: with abriefe transition to the question, about the time of the birth of Abraham.

FTER the death of Semiramis, Ninias or Zameis succeeded her in the Empire, on whom Berofus Annianus bestowes the conquest of Ba-Etria, and the overthrow of Zoroaster; contrary to Diodorus, Iustine, Orosius, and all other approued writers. For Minias being esteemed no man of warre at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacie, there is no probability in that opinion. Now because there was nothing performed by this Ninius of any moment, other then that out of lealousie he eucry yeare changed his Prouinciall Gouernors, and built Colledges for the Chaldwan

Priests, his Astronomers: nor by Arius his successor, whom Suidas calleth Thuras; but that he reduced agains the Baltrians and Caspians, revolted as it seemeth in Nini-30 ss his time : nor of Aralius, the successor of Arius, but that he added sumptuosity, inuented iewels of gold and stone, and some engins for the warre: I will for this present passe them ouer, and a while follow Abraham, whose waies are warrantable, (till wee meet these Assertions againe in this story) by whom, and by whose issues we hall best give date to the Kings of Babylon: Abraham living at once with Ninns, Ninias, Semiramis, Arius, Aralius, and Xerxes or Balanius. For otherwise if we seeke to proue things certaine by the vicertaine, and judge of those times, which the Scriptures fet vs down without error, by the raignes of the Affrian Princes: we shall but patch vp the story at aductture, and leave it in the same confusion, in which to this day it hath remained. For where the Scriptures do not help vs, Mirum ronest in rebus antiquis Hilloriam non constare, No meruale if then inthings very ancient, Hillory want

The better therefore to finde out, in what age of the World, and how long these Affirian Kings raigned, as also for other good causes, we must first assure the time of Abrahams birth, and in what yeare the fame hapned after the floud. Now fince all 10 agree, that the fortieth three yeare of Ninus was the birth-yeare of Abraham; by prouing directly out of the Scriptures, in what yeare after the floud the birth of Abrahim hapned, we shall thereby set all the rest in square and order. But of this time there is much iangling between those Chronologers, which follow the Hebrewaccount, and others: the most part making 292.or 293. yeares 5 others 252. yeares between Abrahams birth and the floud: a matter often disputed, but neuer concluded.

Archilochus de temporibus (as we finde him in Annius) makes but 250. yeares from the floud to Ninus: then feeing that Abraham was borne in the fortieth three yeare of Ninus, according to Eulebius, and S. Augustine, it followeth by the addition of those two numbers, that the yeare of Abrahams birth was in the yeare after the 20 floud 293. or as the most part of all Chronologers gather the yeare 292.

Now, fince I do heere enter into that neuer refolued quæstion, and Labyrinth of times, it behoueth me to give reason for my owne opinion : and with so much the greater care and circumspection, because I walkeaside, and in a way apart from the multitude; yet not alone, and without companions, though the fewer in number: with whom I rather choose to endure the wounds of those dartes, which Enuie casteth at nouelty, than to goe on safely and sleepily in the casie waies of ancient mistakings: seeing to be learned in many errors, or to be ignorant in all things, hath little diuerlity.

A proposall of reasons or arguments, that are brought to prove ABRAHAM was borne in the yeare 292 after the floud, and not in the yeare 352.

Hole which secke to proue this account of 292, yeares; betweene the generall floud and Abrahams birth, ground themselues, first on these words of the Scripture. So TERAH lined 70. yeares, and begot ABRA-HAM, NAHOR, and HARAN: secondly vpon the opinion of Tosephus, 40 S. Augustine, Beda, Isidore, and many of the ancient Hebrewes before them:authorities (while they are fleightly lookt ouer) feeming of great weight.

From the place of Scripture last remembred, the latter Chronologers gather these arguments. First out of the words as they lie; that TERAH at 70. yeares begot A-BRAHAM, NAHOR and HARAN: and that Abraham being the first named, Abraham being the worthieft, Abraham being the sonne of the promise, ought in this respect to be accounted the cldest some of Terah, and so necessarily borne in the scuentieth yeare of his life. Secondly it was of Abraham that Moses had respect, in whom the Church of God was continued, who was heire of the bleffing; and not of Nahor and Haran: for the scope of this Chapter was to set downe the Gencalo- 50 gy of Christ, from Adam to Abraham, without all regard of Nahor, and Haran.

It is thirdly objected, that if Abraham were not the eldeft sonne, then there can be no certainty of his age, and so are all future times made doubtfull. For it cannot then be proued, that Abraham was borne more affuredly in the 130. yeare of Terab his age, then in the 131.132.&c. Mofes having no where fet downe precisely that Abraham went into Canaan that very yeare, in which his Father died.

Fourthly it is thought improbable, that Terah begat Abraham at 130. yeare: feeing Abraham himselfe thought it a wonder to be made a Father at 100. yeares.

The answere to one of the objections proposed, shewing that ABRAHAM made but one iourney out of Mesopotamia into Canzan : and it, after

O answere all which objections it is very easie, the way being prepared thereto by divers learned Divines long fince, and to which I will adde somewhat of mine owne, according to the small talent which God hath given me. Now for a fmuch as the state of the question cannot well be scanned, vnlcsse the time of Abrahams journey into Canaan be first considered of; before I descend vnto the particular examination of these arguments, I will make bold with order and method fo farre, as to fearch into a ftrange tradition concerning his trauails, that serueth as a ground for this opinion, 20 and a bulwarke against all that can be said to the contrary.

But it is conceiued that Abraham made two journies into Canaan; the latter after his Fathers death, the former prefently vpon his calling, which he performed without all delay, not staying for his fathers death at Haran: a conjecture, drawn from a place in the Epifle to the Hebrewes, where it is written, By faith ABRAHAM (when he was called) obcied God, to goe out into a place, which he should afterward receive for inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither hee went. This supposition (if it be granted) Heb. Et. ferues very well to vphold the opinion, that can ill stand without it. Let vs therefore fee whither we may give credit to the supposition it selfe.

Surely, that Abraham first departed Charran or Haran after the death of Terah his 30 Father, the same is proued, without the admission of any distinction, by these words of St. STEPHEN: And after bis Father was dead, God brought him into this Land, where ye now dwell, that was, out of Haran into Canaan. Against wich place so direct, and plaine, what force hath any mans fancie or supposition, perswading, that Abraham Att. 4. made two journies into Cansan; one before Terah's death, and an other after: no fuch thing being found in the Scriptures, nor any circumstance, probability, or reafonto induce it? For if any man out of this place before alleadged can pick any argument, prouing, or affording any strong presumption, that Abraham past into C4- Heb. 11.8, naan, and then returned vnto Haran, from whence he departed a second time : then I thinke it reason, that he be beleiued in the rest. But that he performed the com-40 mandement of God after his Fathers death, leaving Vr and Haran for Canaan, it is as true as the Scriptures themselues are true. For after his Father was dead, (faith the Martyr Stephen) Godbrought him into this Land. And, as Beza noteth, if Abraham made a double journey into Canaan, then must it be inferred, that Moles omitted the one, and Stephen afterwards remembred the other; and whence had Stephen, faith Beza, the knowledge of Abrahams comming into Canaan, but out of Moles: For if S:ephen had spokenany thing of those times, differing from Moses, he had offered the terres his aduerfaries toogreat an occasion both of scandalizing himselfe, and the Gospell of Christ. Indeed we shall finde small reason to make vs thinke that Abraham passed and repassed those waies, more often than he was enforced so to doe, if we consider, that 50 he had no other guide or comforter in this long and wearifome journey, than the frength of his faith in Gods promife: in which if any thing would have brought him to despaire, he had more cause then euer man had to fall into it. For he came into a Region of strong and stubborne nations: a Nation of valiant and resolved Idolaters. He was belieged with famine at his first arrivall, and driven to flie into

Ægypt for reliefe. His wife was olde, and he had no sonne to inherit the promise. And when God had given him Isaac, he commanded him to offer him up to himfelfe for Sacrifice: all which discomforts hee patiently and constantly vnder-

Secondly, let vs consider the waies themselues, which Abraham had to passe ouer, the length whereof was 300. English miles: and through Countries of which he had no manner of experience. He was to transport himselfe ouer the great river of Euphrates, to trauaile through the dangerous and barren Deferts of Palmyrena, and to climbe over the great and high mountaines of Libanus, Hermon or Gilead : and whither these were easie walkes for Abraham to march twice ouer, containing, as afore- 10 faid, 300. miles in length, let euery reasonable man judge. For if hee trauailed it twice; then was his journey in all 1800. miles from Vr to Haran: and from Haran twice into Canaan. But were there no other argument to disproue this fancie; the manner of Abrahams departing from Haran hath more proofe, that he had not animum reuertendi, not anv thought looking backward, than any mans bare coniecture, bee he of what antiquity or authority soeuer. For thus it is written of him . Then A BR A-HAM tooke SARA his wife, and LOT his brothers sonne, and all their substance that they possest, and the soules that they had gotten in Haran: and they departed to go to the land of Canaan and to the Land of Canaan they came. Now if Abraham brought all with him that was deare ynto him; his wife, and kinfmen, and his, and their goods: it is not proba- 20 ble that he meant to walke it backe againe for his pleasure, in so warme, dangerous. and barren a Country as that was : or if hee could have beene thereto moued, it is more likely that he would have then returned, when he was yet vnfetled, and preft with extreme famine at his first arrivall. For had his Father beene then alive, hee might have hoped from him to receive more affured comfort and reliefe, then among the £gyptians, to whom hee was a meere stranger both in Religion and Nation.

What the cause might be of Abrahams returne to Haran, as I will not enquire of them, that without warrant from the Scriptures have fent him backe thither, about the time of his fathers death: fo they perhaps, if they were viged, could fay 20 little elfe, than that without fuch a fecond voiage their opinion were not maintainable. One thing in good reason they should do well to make plaine, if it be not oper-troublesome. They say that Abraham was in Haran at his Fathers death, or fome time after, being then by their account 135, yeares old, or a little more. How then did it happen, that he left quite vindone the bufineffe, which as wee reade, was within foure or fine yeares after that time his greatest, or (as may seeme) his onely care? Did not he binde with a very folemne oath his principall feruant, in whom he reposed most confidence, to trauaile into those parts, and seeke out a wife for sface his sonne? and doth it not appeare by all circumstances, that neither he nor his seruant were so well acquainted in Mejopotamia, that they could particularly designe 40 any one woman, as a fit match for Ifaac? Surely if Abraham had been there in perfon so lately, as within foure or fine yeares before, hee would not have forgotten a matter of fuch importance; but would have trufted his owne judgement, in choofing a woman, fit for her picty, vertue, and other defireable qualities, to be linked in marriage with his only sonne, who was then 35. yeares old; before which age most of the Patriarches after the floud had begotten children, rather than have left all at randome to the confideration of a feruant, that neither knew any, nor was knowne of any in that Country. But let it bee supposed (if it may be beleived) that either Abraham forgot this builnes when he was there, or that somewhat hapned which no man can deuise. What might be the reason, that Abrahams man in doing his ma- 50 sters errand was faine to lay open the whole story of his masters prosperity, telling it as newes, that Sarah had borne to him a fonne in her old age? If Abraham himfelfe, a more certaine author, had so lately beene among them, would not all this have beene an idletale? It were needlesse to stand long upon a thing so evident. Whether

Whether it were lawful for Abraham to haue returned back to Haran, would perhaps be a question hardly answerable: considering how auerse hee was from permitting his sonne to be carried thither, even though a wife of his owne kindred could not con. 24.6. haue beene obtained without his personall presence. Iacob indeed was sent thither & 8. by his parents, to take a wife of his ownellinage; not without Gods especiall appro- Gen. 28, bation, by whose bleffing he prospered in that journey: yet he lived there as a feruant; suffered many injuries; and finally was driven to convey himselfe away from thence by flight. For although it bee not a sentence written, yet out of all written examples it may be observed, that God alloweth not in his servants any desire of re-

10 turning to the place, from whence hee hath taken and transplanted them. That briefe faying, Remember Lots wife, containes much matter. Let vs but confider Mesopotamia from whence Abraham was taken, and Agypt, out of which the whole nation of the Ifraelites was delinered : wee shall finde, that no bleffing iffued from either of them, to the posterity of the Hebrewes. When Ezechias was visited with an honourable Emballie from Babel, it feemes that hee conceined great pleasure in 2. Kings 20, his minde, and thought it a peece of his prosperity; but the prophecy which thereupon he heard by Esai, made him to know, that the counsaile of God was not agreeable to fuch thoughts: which more plainly appeared in a following generation, when by the waters of Babylon they fate downcand wept. Concerning Egypt we Plats 3.

20 read, that Sefae and Nece Kings of Egypt brought calamity vpon Ifrael: allo that 1.Kings 14.25.00 their confidence in the Agyptian succours was the cause of their destruction. Where their connection to return into Agypt I do not remember, nor can readily find; Dest. 17.016. but it is found in Deuteronomie, that God had faid, They flould no more returne that way; which is given, as the reason, why their King might not cause the people to returne to Agypt, for the multiplying of his Horses. Whether the Lord had laied any such iniunction pon Abraham of not returning to Mesopotamia, I cannot say; many things do argue it probably: that hee neuer did returne, all circumstances do (to my vnderstanding) both strongly and necessarily conclude.

But because this double passage of Abrahams is but an imagination : and that imato ginations of men are rather valuable among children, than that they can perfivade those of judgment or understanding: I take it sufficient, that S. Stephen hath directly taught vs, that Abraham left Haram, his Father being dead. And for the rest, when they shew any one Scripture to proue it, I will beleiue as they doe. For all the trauails of Abraham are precisely set downe in the Scriptures : as first from Vr or Camerina in Chaldea to Haran or Charran : and then from Haran (after his Fathers death) to Sichem; from Sichem hee removed to a mountaine betweene Betheland Haie: thence into Egypt: from Egypt he returned thither againe, where Lot and he parted, because their flockes and heards of Cattle were more, then could be fed in that part : from thence the second time hee removed to Mamre, neare Hebron : 40 and thence having purfued Amraphel, and refcued Lot, hee after inhabited at Gerar, in the border of Idumea, vnder Abimelee : and after neare vnto it at Berfabe, at which time hee was ready to offer up his some Isaac on the mountaine Morial. But this fiction of his retrait to Haran or Charran, appeareth not in any one story, either divine or humane. Now if it may bee suposed, that Abraham had made any for-

ded himselfe of some certaine seat, or place of abiding : and not have come a fecond time, with his wife, kinfmen, familie, goodes and Cattle, not knowing whereon to rest himselfe. But Abraham, when hee came from Charran, past 50 through the North part of Canaan, thence to Sichem, and the Plaine of Mo-Gazines. riah : where finding no place to inhabite, hee departed thence to Bethel and Hai: and so from Nation to Nation, to discouer and finde out some fit habitation : from whence againe, as it is written in Genesis the eleventh. Hee went foorth, going and iournying towards the South: and alwaies vnfetled.

By occasion of which wandring to and tro, fome fay, the Agyptians gaue him and Mont, in Caleb. his the name of Hebrai. Further, to proue that hee had not formerly beene in the Countrie, we may note, that ere hee came to Bethel and Hai, and at his first entrance into Canaan, God appeared vnto him faying, Vnto thy feed will I give this Land, thewing it him as vnto a stranger therein, and as a land to him vnknowne. For Abraham withoutany other proudent care for himselfe, beleived in the word of the living God: neither fending before, nor comming first to discouer it; but being arrived he received a fecond promise from God, that hee would give those Countries vnto him and his feede to inhabit and inherit.

Laftly, what should move any man to thinke, that Mofes would have omitted 10 auy such double iourney of Abrahams, seeing he setteth downe all his passages elswhere, long and fhort? as when he moued from Siehem, and scated betweene Hai and Bethel: the distance being but twenty miles: and when he moued thence to the valley of Mamre, being but twenty fower miles : and when hee left Mamre, and fate downe at Gerar, being leffe then fixe miles; no, Moles past over all the times of the firstage with the greater breuity, to hasten him to the story of Abraham: shutting up all betweene the Creation and the Floud in fix chapters, which age lasted 1656. yeares: but he bestoweth on the story of Abraham fourteene chapters, beginning with his birth in the eleuenth, and ending with his death in the fine and twentieth; and this time endured but 175 yeares. It hath therefore no face of truth, that Mo-20 fes forgot or neglected any thing concerning Abrahams trauailes, or other actions: or that he would fet downe those small remoues of fine miles, and omit those of three hundred. For fuch a journey ingoing and comming would have ministred fome varietie of matter, or accident, worthie the inferting and adding to Abrahams storie.

d. IIII.

The answere to another of the objections proposed, shewing that it was not unlikelie, that TERAH Should beget ABRAHAM in his hundred and thirty yeare.

Ow touching the objection, where it is faid, that it was very vnlikelie that Terah should beget Abraham in his 130. yeare, seeing ibraham himselfe thought it a wonder to have a sonne at an hundred : this is hardly worth the answering. This wonder is indeed miscast, and miscases: abraham having respect only to Sarah his wife, when he spake of their many yeares. For when the Angell faid vnto Abraham in his Tent doore at Mamre; Loe, SARAH thy wife Shall have a Sonne, it followeth in the next verse, Now ABRAHAM and SARAH were old and firicken in age, and it ceased to be with 40 SARAH after the manner of women: therefore SARAH laughed &c.

So then, in that it is faid it ceased to be with S. A.R. A. H. after the manner of women, it appeareth that the wonder was wrought on her, & not on Abraham. For Abraham by his fecod wife Keturah had many fons after Sarah's death, as Zimron, Jockfban, Medan Midian, ifhbak, and Shuah: and the eldeft of these was borne 37. yeares after Isaac: and t'ie yongest 40. yeares after. What strangenesse then, that Terah being 130. yeares old should beget Abraham, will they say, may be gathered from this supposed despaire of Abraham at one hundred yeares? For Sarah died in the yeare of the world 2145. and Isaac was borne in the yeare 2109: and Abraham did not marry Keturah till Sa-Origen, bomil. 11. rab was buried. So if we deduct the number of 2109. out of 2145, there remais 50 in Gen. Aug. de neth 36. And therefore if Abraham begat five fonnes 36. yeares after this supposed cuit. des. 1.16.6. 34. Contain: wonder, and when Abraham was 137, yeares old: it is not strange that his Father PererinGen. Terah should beget Abrahamat 130. And if Booz, Obed and Ieffe, who lived so many yeares & ages after Abraham, begat Ions at 100. yeares, or neare it, it cannot be mer-

fwered Laban and Bethuel, and faid; This thing is proceeded of Ichouah: meaning that it 60.144.50. was the will of the true God it should be so; wherein hee acknowledged Gods prouidence. Likewise in the following verse it is written; Take, take, goe that sheemay bee

uailed at, that Terah begat Abraham at 130; and Abraham others at the fame age

The answere to two more of the objections: shewing that we may have certainty of ABRA-HAMS age from the Scripture, though wee make not ABRAHAM the eldeft Sonne: and that there was great cause, why in the story of ABRAHAM his two brethren sould berefected.

T followeth now to speak something to the objection, which brings Abrahams age altogether in doubt, except wee allow him to be the eldest son of Terah, and born whon Terah was 70 yeares old. For Abrahams age beeing made vncertaine, all fucceeding times are thereby without any perfect rule or knowledge.

But this proposition, That wee cannot be certaine of Abrahams age, vnlesse wee make him the eldest sonne, is false. For it is plaine in the Scriptures, that when Terah was 205, which was the yeare of his death, then was Abraham 75. And if you aske, how I can judge of times, either preceding or fucceeding, by knowing that A-20 braham departed Haran at that age : I answere, that St. Stephen hath told vs, that Abrahams departure followed the death of his Father Terah : and Terah died at 2055 fo as the 75 yeare of Abraham was the 205. yeare of Terah: which knowne, there can be no errour in the account of times succeeding. Now to come to the objection, where it is faid, That Moses had no respect vnto Nachor and Haran, because they were out of the Church but to Abraham only, with whom God established the Couenant, and of whom Christ descended according to the flesh &c. I answere, that: Moles for many great and necessary causes had respect of Nachor and Haran. For the fuccession of Gods Church is not witnessed by Abraham alone, but by the issues of Nahor and Haran, were they Idolaters or otherwise. For Nahor was the Father of Be-20 thuel & Bethuel of Rebecca the mother of Ifrael & Haran was the parent of Lot, Sarah. and Mileah and Sarah was mother to Isaat, and grandmother to Isaab also the wife of Nahor, and mother of Bethuel, was Iacobs great grandmother : and the age of Sarah the daughter of Haran is especially noted, in that it pleased God to give her a fonne at 90 yeares, and when by nature she could not have conceived. And therefore, though it were not in regard of themselues, yet because both Nahor and Abraham married the daughters of their brother Haran; and because Islaw married Rebecca the grand-child of Nahor; and Iacob Lea and Rachel, the daughters of Labon, the grand-child also of Nahor: it was not superfluous in Moses to give light of these mens times and ages. And though sometime they worshipped strange Gods, as it is 40 10f. 24.2. yet I fee no cause to thinke, that they still continued Idolaters. For they beleisted and obeied the calling of Abraham, leaving their naturall Countrie, and

City of Vr in Chalden, as Abraham did, and remoued thence all, except Haran, who died before his Father Terah, ere they left Chaldea; but Lot, his sonne, followed Abraham into Canaan; and Sarah, the lifter of Lot, Abraham married. Nahoralfo who remained at Charran, gaue his fonnes daughters to Isaac, and Iacob his owne kinfmen: hee himselfe having also married in his owne familie; not thinking it pleasing vnto God to mixe themselves with strangers and Idolaters. And that these men at length beleiued in the God of Abraham, it can no way be doubted. For when Labar had seene the servant of Abraham standing at the Well beside Charran, hee invited 50 him to his Fathers house in this manner : Come in thou bleffed of lehoush &s. And Gongan thy masters sonnes wife, even as Jehouah hath said. This their often ying of the name of Iehouah, which is the proper name of the true God, is a figne that they had the knowledge of him.

Now although it be the opinion of Saint Chryfostome, and some later writers, as Catetan, Oleaster, Musculus, Caluin, Mercer, and others, that Laban was an Idoter. because he retained certaine Idols, or houshold Gods, which Rachel Stole from him; yet that he beleived in the true God it cannot be denied. For he acknowledgeth the God of Abraham and of Nahor, and he called Abrahams servant, blessed of Iehouah, as aforesaid. So as for my selfe I dare not anow, that these men were out of the Church, who fure I am were not out of the faith.

That the naming of ABRAHAM first of the three brethren. Gen. 11. V. 26. deth not proue that hee was the eldest: together with divers reasons proving that ABRAHAM was not the eldest sonne of TERAH.

the maine objection which I answere last, because it seemeth of most strength, by which, those that striue to shorten the times, endeuor to proue that Abraham was the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne in the 70. yeare of Terahs life: grounding themselues first and cheistly on this place of the Scripture, And TERAH lined 70. yeares and begat ABRAHAM. NAHOR and HARAN: To this Isay, that although Abraham in this verse be first named, yet the same is no proofe at all that hee was the eldest and first borne some of Terah. For it is no necessary consequence, that the first named in Scriptures was therefore eldest in bloud and birth, neither doth it appeare that it pleased God to make especiall choice of the first sonnes in nature and time: for Seth was not the first borne of Adam : nor Isaac of Abraham : nor Isaab of Isaac : nor Iuda and Iosephof Iacob: nor David the eldest of Iesse: nor Salomon of David: as

But it is written of Noah; Noah was 500. yeares old, and Noah begat Shem, Ham and laphet: showing that at the 500, yeare of his age he began to beget the first of Aug.quaft.fuger those three sonnes. For according to St. Augustine speaking generally, Nec attendendus est in his ordo nativitatis, sed significatio futura dignitatis:in qua excelluit ABRAHAM. The order of nativity is not heere to be respected, but the signification of the future dignity: in which ABRAHAM was preferred. And therefore as in the order of the sonnes of Noah : fo is it heere; where it is faid that TERAH lived 70. yeares and begat ABRA-HAM, NAHOR, and HARAN: For it was late ere Terah began to beget fonnes, himselfe being begotten by his Father Nachor at 29. as other his auncestors were at 30. The like also happened to Noah; for whereas Adam begat Seth at 130. Enosh 40 Kenan at 90; Kenan Mahalaeel at 70; Mahalaeel Iered at 60: Noah was yet 500 yeares old when he began to beget the first of his three sonnes : as aforesaid. And S. Angustine in the place before cited, rather inclineth to the opinion that Abraham was the yongest of Terahs sonnes, then otherwise: though for his excellency he was worthily named first. His owne words are these. Fieri enimpotuit vt posterior sit generatus ABRAHAM: sed merito excellentia, qua in scripturis valde commendatur, prior suerit nominatus. It might be, saith he, that ABRAHAM was begotten later: but was first named in regard of his excellency, for which in Scripture hee is much commended. So as the naming first or last, proueth nothing who was first or last borne: either in those issues of Noah or in thele of Terah : Neither hath God any respect of the eldest in na- 50 ture, as touching his election or spirituall bleffing, for Moses nameth first the children of the promise, and the eldest and first in Gods fauour. Pietas ergò vel ipso potiùs electio diuina, que comitem secùm trahit pietatem, & Dei timorem, primas partes dat SEMO in libris NOA, & ABRAHAMO in liber is Thare. Pietie faith he or rather divine election, which doth euermore draw with it or after it piete and the feare of God, gave place and precedencie to SEM among the children of NOAH, and to ABRAHAM among those

For the rest it is manifest, that Abraham entred Canaan in the 75. yeare of his age, And it was in Canaan that Hagar bare him Ismael, when Abraham had lived 86, years, Gen 12.4. It was at Gerar (the fouth border of Canaan) that Sarah bare Ifaac, when Abraham Gen. 16.16. had confumed 100. yeares. It was from the valley of Alamrein Canaan that Abrahamrose out, when herescued Lot and ouerthrew Amraphel: and hee had then but the age of 82 yeares; and it is as manifest that he parted from Haran after his Father 12.140 5th. 10 Terah was dead. But if Terah begat Abraham at 70. yeare old, then must Abraham 14. haue beene 135. yeares when hee first set his foot in Canaan: seeing Terah must bee dead ere he parted, and so 70.added to 135.made 205, the true age of Terab; which is contrary to all those places of Scripture before remembred. For hee entred at 75 : hee rescued Lotat 83 : he had Ifmael at 86 : he had Ifaac at 100 proued by the Moreouer if Abraham were the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne in the 70 years of his age: then had Terablined till Isaachad beene 35, yeares old, and Ismael AO. both which must then have been borne in Mesopotamia, and therein fostered to that age: vnleffe wee should either deny credit to St. Stephen, who saith that Abraham 20 departed from Mesopotamia after his Fathers death : or else give credit to the interpretation of Daniel Angelocrator, who in his Chronologia antoptica, faith it was about his Fathers death : because the greeke word 4472, may be transported by the Latine fub, aswell as by post: which though elsewhere it may be, yet cannot it be so in this place. For it were most improperly spoken, to say that those things were done about Terahs death, which were 60 yeares before. Wherefore supposing Abraham to have beene borne in the 70. yeare of Terah; we must give those times and places of birth to Abrahams children, which no authoritie will warrant; For Abraham had no children in Vr of Chaldaa, nor in Haran: nor in 10. yeares after his arrivall into Canaan. For the yeare of Terahs death, in which Abraham left Haran, was the yeare of 30 the World 2083; and the yeare of Ismsels birth was the Worlds yeare 2094; which maketh 10 yeares difference. And that Isaac was borne in Canaan, and was to bee offered vpon the mountaine Morial therein, 39 miles from Berlabe, where Abraham of Mamre, no man doubteth! And therefore it cannot be that any of Abrahams sonnes were borne in Mesopotamia: nor while Terah lived: nor in leffe then 10 yeares after Terahs death: and then consequently was not Abraham the eldest sonne of Terah, nor borne in the 70, yeare

then inhabited and that three Angels first of all appeared to Abraham in the valley

Thirdly, whereas Abraham came into Canaan at 75: if Terah had begotten him at 40 70, then had Terab lived but 145. for 70 and 75. make 145. which must also have Genize beenethe full age of Terah: but Terablined 205 yeare : and therefore was not Abraham borne in the 70. yeare of Terah.

Fourthly, the ages of Lot and Sarah make it manifest, that Haran was the elder, if not the eldest brother of Abraham; for Sarah or Istah wanted but 10. yeares of Abrahams age: Isaat beeing borne when Abraham was 100 and Sarah 90: yeares

It followeth then that if Abraham had beene the elder brother of Haran, Haran must have begotten Sarah at 9. yeares old : for granting that Haran was borne but one yeare after Abraham, and Sarah within 10. yeares as old as Abraham, then of 30 necessitie must Haran beget her, when he had lived but 9. yeares; which were too ridiculous to imagine.

And that Ifeah was Surah, Rab: Solomon affirmeth, both names, faith he, bearing the same signification; and names of principalitie. Againe, to what end was the word Isah or Isheah inserted in this place, if Sarah were not meant thereby? for to speake of any thing superfluous it is not vsed in Gods Bookes; and if Isah had not belonged to the story, it had beene but an idle name to no purpose remembred.

Now if it had beene trew (as those of the contrary opinion affirme) that Moles had no respect of Nachor and Haran, who were notwithstanding the parents of Bethuel and Rebecca, the mother of Ifrael, and of Christ: what regard then had Moses of Is ah in this place, were she not Sarah, but otherwise an idle name of whom there is nothing elfe first or last.

The age also of Lot disprough the eldership of Abraham: for Lot was called an old man when Abraham was but 82, yeares: And if Lot were of a greater age than Abraham, and Haran were Father to Lot, Sarah, and Milcah, Abraham marrying one of 10 Harans daughters, and Nahor the other, Sarah also being within 10. yeares as olde as Abraham: it may appeare to every reasonable man (not obstinate and prejudicate) that Haran was the eldest sonne of Terah, and not Abraham : who also died first and before his Father left Vr in Chaldas. Also Lyra reasoneth against the opinion of Abrahams eldership, vpon the same place of Genesis: drawing argument from the age of Sarah, who was but 10. yeares yonger than Abraham himselfe. Lyra his wordes arethele. Siigitur HARAN fuit iunior ipfo ABRAHAM, fequitur quòd non babebat decem annos quando genuit SARAM: imònec octo &c. and afterward, & ideò melius videtur dicendum, quod ABRAHAM fuit vitimo natus de tribus filis THARE, tamen nominatur primo, propter eius dignitatem : & quia ponenduserat caput stirpis & generati- 20 onis sequentis : & quia primo facta est cirepromisso expressa de CHRISTO, sicut supra dictum eft de SEN &c. If therefore (faith Lyra) HARAN was yonger then ABRA-HAM himfelfe, it followeth that he was not 10 yeares old when he begat SARAH: And therefore it feemeth better to be faid, that ABRAHAM was the last born of the three fonnes of THARE, neuerthelesse he is named first for his dignitie, both because he was to be ordained head of the flocke and generation following: and because the promise of CHRIST was first made unto him, as before it is said of SEM.

A conclusion of this dispute, noting the Authors on both sides : with an admonition that they which shorten the times make all ancient stories the more unprobable.

Gen.12.4.

T therefore agreeth with the Scriptures, with Nature, Time, and Reason, that Haran was the eldest sonne of Terah, and not Abraham: and that Abraham was borne in the 120 years of Terah. in the 70. yeare. For Abraham departing Charran after Terah died, according to S. Stephen, and that iourney by Abraham performed when 49 hee was 75 yeares old, these two numbers added make 205. yeares, the full age of Terah: seeing that when Terah died, then Abraham entred Canaan. For my selfe, I haue no other end hecrein then to manifest the truth of the World's Storie: I reuerence the judgements of the Fathers: but I know they were miltaken in particulars. Saint Augustine was doubtfull, and could not determine this controuerfie. For what soeuer is borrowed from him out of his 16. Booke de Civitate Dei ca. 15, the same may bee answered out of himselfe in his fine and twentieth question vpon Gen. But S. Augustine heerein followed Insephus, and Isidor: and Beda followed S. August. And it was out of a foolish pride and vanitie, that the Hebrews and Iofephus fought to make Abraham the first borne : as if God had had respect to the eldest 50 in nature . So did Iosephus together with Nicholas Dams (cenus (thinking thereby to glorifie the Iewish Nation) make Abraham a king, entitling Sarah by the name of Queene Sarah: and faid that Abraham was followed with 318. Captaines, of which euerie one had an infinite multitude under him ; trecentes & oitodecem prafectos habuit: quorum singulis infinita multitudo parebat. And that Pharae invading him with a great armie, tooke from him his wife Sarah. Such fables argue that lofephus is not to be believed, but with discreete reservations.

This account of times, allowing no more than 292. yeares from the floud to Abraham, is vpheld by manie of the Hebrews . But how thould we value the opinion of such Chronologers, as take Amraphel for Nimrod? Surely, if their judgement in such matters were worthie to be regarded, it would have appeared in setting downe the fuccession of the Persian Kings, vnder whom they lived, whose historie was not so farre remote in time, as these antiquities, nor wanting the light of manie good wri-10 ters. Yet groffely haue they erred therein, and so familiar are their mistakings in all things of like nature, that we feldome finde their opinion rehearfed without the confutation treading on the heeles of it. They of the Romane religion are also generally on the same lide: it being a thing vsual among them, to maintaine what soeuer they have beene formerly knowne to hold and beleive. Contrariwife, of the more ancient, Theodoret, and some following him: of later times Beroaldus, Codoman, Peucer, Caluin, Iumus, Beza, Broughton, Dock. Gibbons, and Moore, with divers of the Protestants, hold Abraham to have been borne in the 130 yeare of his Father Terah. From these (as in a case not concerning any point in Religion) diuers of the same Religion, and those neuerthelesse good Authors, as Bucholcerus, Chitraus, Functius 20 and others, are verie auerse hecrein, especially tosephus Scaliger with his Sethus Calvifius, proclaiming Beroaldus an Arch-heritique in Chronologie, and condemning this opinion of his as poilonous. Contrariwise Augustinus Torniellus a Pricett of the Congregation of S. Paul, a judicious, diligent, and free writer, whose Annales are newly fet forth, very earnestly defends the opinion, which I have already delivered; not alleadging Beroalaus, nor any Protestan: writer, as beeing perhaps vnwilling to owe thankes to heretiques. For my selfe I do neither mislike the contrary opinion, because commonly those of the Romish Religion labour to vphold it, Nor fauour this larger account of times, because many notable men of the Protestant writers have approved; it but for the truth it selfe. To strengthen which, after all these former 30 reasons, and testimonies of Scripture, I will adde thus much more to the rest. First, it is apparant to all men of judgement, that the best approued Historians, Divine and prophane, labour to inuestigate the truth of times, thereby to approue the stories, and forepast actions of the world: and not the truth of histories to approue the times by. Let vs then make judgment to our felues, which of these two accounts giue the best reputation to the storie of the Scriptures; teaching the worlds new plantation, and the continuancie of Gods Church: either that of Iofephia, and those which follow him; who makes but 292. yeares, or thereabouts, betweene the floud and birth of Abraham: or this other account, which makes 352. yeares betweene the one and the other: the one taking Abraham to be the first borne of Thare,

40 in the 70. yeare of his life: the other a yonger sonne of Thare, and borne when he had lived 130, yeares. And if we looke over all, and doe not haltily latisfie our vnderstanding with the first things offered, and thereby being satisfied doe slothfully and drowfily fit downe; wee shall find it more agreeable rather to allow the reckoning of the Septuagint, who according to some editions, make it about 1072. yeares betweene the floud and Abrahams birth: then to take away any part of those 352, yeares giuen. For if we aduisedly consider the state and countenance of the world, such as it was in Abrahams time, yea, before Abraham was borne, we shall find that it were verie ill done of vs, by following opinion without the guide of reason, to pare the times ouer-deeply betweene Abraham and the floud: because

50 in cutting them too neere the quicke, the reputation of the whole florie might perchance bleed thereby, were not the testimonic of the Scriptures supreame, so as no objection can approach it: and that we did not follow withall this precept of St. Augustine, That wherefocuer any one place in the Scriptures may be conceined difagreeing to the whole, the same is by ignorance of interpretation misunderstood.

Of the Floud

For in Abrahams time all the then-knowen parts of the world were peopled: all Regions and Countries had their kings. Egypt had many magnificent Cities: and fo had Palastina, and all the bordering Countries: yea, all that part of the world belides, as far as India: and those not built with stickes, but of hewen stones, and defended with walles and rampiers : which magnificence needed a parent of more antiquitie, then those other men haue supposed. And therefore, where the Scriptures are plainest, and best agreeing with reason and nature, to what end should we labour to beget doubts and scruples, or draw all things into wonders and maruailes? gining also strength thereby to common cauellers, and to those mens apish braines, who onely bend their wits to find impossibilities, and monsters in the storie to of the World and mankinde.

ð. VIII.

A computation of the times of the Assyrians and others, grounded upon the times noted in the storie of ABRAHAM.

An.mundi 2008 dil.352.natus Abrabam Eufeb. August. de Civit. Dei. l, 16. c. 17.

N this fort therefore for the reasons before allead ged, I conclude, that from the generall floud, to the birth of Abraham, 352. yeares that from the general floud, to the birth of Catraman, 572. Acades were confirmed: and taking the Affyrian Historie with vs, the same in number of yeares were spent from the floud to the 43. yeare of Ninus Abraham was borne: which hapned in the yeare of the World 2009.

Now of this time of 352. yeares, wee must give one part as well to the increase of those people which came into Shinar, as to those that staied in the East, to wit, 30. yeare to Chus, ere he begat Seba: of which, though the Scriptures are filent, yet because those of the same time had that age when they begat their first sons, wee may the more fafely give the like allowance to these. For Eber begat Peleg at 34. Peleg Regu at 30. Regu Serug at 32. Now after Seba, Chus begat Hauila, Sabta, Raama and Sabtecha: and Raama begat Sheba and Dedan, before Nimrod was borne as it appea- 30 Aug. de ciuit. reth Gen. 10: which St. Augustine approueth. Giuing then 30. yeares more to Raama ere hee begat Sheba, and five yeares to the five elder brothers of Nimrod, it may be gathered that 65, yeares were confumed ere Nimrod himselfe was borne : and that Raamah had that age ere any of his sonnes were begotten, it may be gathered, by example and comparison: for Peleg, the fourth from Noah, as Raamah was, begat Reguin the same yeare of his life.

Let vs then allow 60. yeares more after the birth of Nimrod, for two other generations to be brought forth, or else we shall hardly find people to build Babel; for sure wee are that it was done by hands, and not by miracle: because it displeased God. These two numbers of 65. and 60. make 125: The rest of the time of 131. (in 40 which yeare they arrived in Shinar whereof there are 6. yeares remaining) we may giue them for their trauels from the East: because they were pestered with women, children and Cattle: and as some ancient writers have conceived, and Becanus of la-An. a falute bu. ter times, they kept alwaies the mountaines sides, for feare of a second floud. Now mani generis ab if we take this number of 131.out of 352. there remaines 221, of which number aquis centesimo Berosus bestoweth 65. on Belus, and 42. on Ninus, before Abraham borne : both num Babylani which S. Augustine approueth: which two numbers taken againe out of 221. there cum fub nofiro remaineth 1 14. yeares of the 3 52, from the floud to Abrahams birth: which number of 114 necessitie bestoweth on Wimrod.

And if it be objected that this time given to Nimrod, is over-long: fure if we com- 50 pare the age of Nimrod with the rest of the same descent from Noah, it will rather appeare ouer-short. For Nimrod, by this accompt, lived in all but one hundred feuenty nine yeares: whereof hee raigned one hundred and twelve: whereas Sale who was the sonne of Arphaxad the sonne of Sem, lived four hundred thirty three

When Abraham was 85, yeares old, he refcued his nephew Lot, and ouerthrew by 403, a dd. furprise Amraphel king of Shinar, or Babylonia. Nimas reigned 38 yeares, and Abraham came into Canaan but 23. yeares after Serviramis died: which was the 75. yeare of his age : fo that Amy appel may feeme to haue beenethis Ninias the fonne of Ninus, and Semiramis, whose 23 yeare, as aforesaid, being the 75 yeare of Abraham, he and his fellow-kings might hade received this overthrow in the 85. yeare of Abraham, and the 33 yeare of his own reigne: after which hereigned fine yeares; which make in all 38. But the truth is, that the reasons to the contrary, vrging that this Amraphel could not be Ninias; are not casily answered. Howbert for the times of the Affyrian kings, that they are to be ordered as wee haue fet them downe, accor-20 ding to the times noted by Moses, in the storie of Abraham, it is most certaine: vn-· leffe we will either derogate from the truth of Mofes his computation, which were impietic : or account the whole Historie of Ninus and Semramis to bee a fiction; which were to condemne all ancient Historians for fablers.

d. IX.

may probably be thought to have beene NINIAS the Sonne of NINVs.

Nd now touching this Amraphel, whom Moses makes king of Shinar or Babylonia, in the 85. yeare of Abrahams life, that is, in the 33. yeare of the reigne of Ninias Zameis the king of the Affyrians, the fonne of Winus and Semiramis, it is hard to affirme what he was, and how hee could bee at this time king of Babylonia: Ninias Zameis then reigning there. To this doubt the answere which first offereth it selfe as most probable, is that which hath beene alreadic noted, that this Ninius or Zameis, was no other then our Amraphel: who inuaded Traconitis or Bafan, and ouerthrew those fine kings of Pentapolis, or the valley of Siddim. For the Scriptures tell vs, that Amraphel was king 40 of Shimar, which is Babylonia: and the times before accounted make him to be the fuccessor of Ninus and Semiramis: and it falleth out with the 85. yeare of Abrahams life : wherein herefcued Let, flew Chedorlaomer, and ouerthrew the reft. Trive it is, that this Amraphel was not at this time the greatest Monarke : for Chedorlaomer commanded in cheife, though Amraphel bee first named by Moses in the first verse of the 14. Chapter of Genesis, For the Kings of the valley of Siddim, or of Pentapolis, or of the flue Cities, were the vaffals of Chedorl. and not of Amraphel: as it is Written. Twelue yeares were they Subject to Che Dor L'Aomer, but in the 13. yeare Gual44. they rebelled, and in the 14. year came CHEDORLAOMER and the kings that were with him: and therefore was Chedorl, the principall in this criterprise, who was then king

50 of Elam, which is Persia: Now Persia being seated ouer Tigris, and to the East of Amraphels Countrie; and the other two kings, which were companions with Amraphel, being seated to the West of Shinar or Babylonia: Amraphel, who held Babylonia it selfe, feemeth at this time to haue had no great scope or large dominion. For had Amraphel beene so great a Prince as prophane Historians make Ninus or Semiramis whom he succeeded, he should not have needed the affistance of three other kings for this expedition. But though Chedorlaomer were the fitst and greatest of those fower Kings, (as it is manifest that he was: For these little kings of Sodome, Gomora, cre, were his vassals, and not Amraphels) yet this makes not the coniecture lesse probable, but that this Amraphel might be Ninias. For it may be, that the great and potent Empire of Affria, had now (as we shall show more plainly in that which followeth) received a downe-right fall, at the time of this warre : though not long before it commanded all the kingdomes betweene India and the Phanician Sea: to wit, in the times of Ninus and Semiramis.

ò. X.

Of ARIOCH another of the foure Kings, and that ELLAS: whereof he is faid to haue beene King, lies betweene Coelesyria and Arabia Petrœa.

Ow the two other kings joined with Amraphel, and Chedorl, were Arioch and Tidal; the one king of Ellassar, the other of the Nations. For Ellassar, Aquila and Hierome write Pontus: fo Tostatus thinketh that it should be Hellespont: which opinion Pererius fauoureth. But this is 20 onely to defend the Latine translation. For as Pontus, so is Hellespont farre distant, and out of the way to send any armies into Arabia Petraa, or into Idumea: which Countries these foure Kings cheifly inuaded, Besides that, it is certaine, that the Asyrians (when they were greatest) had neuer any dominion in Asia the leffe. For at fuch time as the Afsyrians feared the invalion of the Medes and Perlians, they fent not into Afia the leffe as commaunders: but vsed all the art they had to inuite Crafus to their affistance: perswading him that nothing could be more dangerous for himselfe, and the other Kings of those parts, than the successe of the Medes against the Asyrians. But examine the enterprise what it was. These kings (faith the Text) made warre with BERA, king of Sodome, BIRSHA king of Gomor- 30 ha. SHINAB king of Admath, and SHEMEBAR king of Zeboim, and the king of BELA which is Zoar. All which five kings had not fo much ground as Middlefex: being fuch a kind of Reguli, as Iofua found in the land long after: namely Lords of Cities and small territories adioyning; of which Canaan had 32, all slaine or hanged by 10/11a. Neither can the other Countries, which in the Text they are faid also to haue inuaded, be imagined to haue beene at that time of any great power: and therefore to call in Kings from Pontus or Hellefont, had manifested a great impotencie and weaknesse in the kings of Babylon and Persia.

And though it be alleadged for an example, that divers kings far off, came to affift Pompey against Cafar: yet these same examples without like occasions and cir- 40 cumstances, do neither lead nor teach. For there was no cause to scare the greatnesse of these pettie kings, or of the other Countries: But the eies of the world were fixed on Cafar; and his vndertakings and intents were to all other Princes, no leffe doubtfull then fearefull: But the whole Countrie by these foure kings maistered in their paffage, was afterward given to the halfe tribe of Manaffe, Gad, and Ruben: a narrow valley of ground lying betweene Iordan and the mountaines of Seir inclofed by the river of Arnon on the South fide, and by Lybanus on the North, confifting of the two small Provinces of Traconitis or Basan, and the Region of the Moabites: a conquest farre vnualuable, and little answering the power of the Assyrian Empire, if the same had remained in any comparable estate with the times of Ninus and Se-50 miramis, who subjected all the great kings of that part of the World, without the affiftance of any of the kings of Helle front, or any other part of Afia the leffe. But as the Vulgar and Aquila convert Ellassar by Pontus: so Symmachus makes Ariocha king of the Scythians, aking indeed, as farre fetched to joyne with the Affyrians in this warre, as the World had any at that time. The Septuagint doe not change the word of Ellss ar at all, but as they keep the word Ararat, on the mountaines wherof the Arke did reft, so doe they in this place retaine the Hebrew word Eduffer, being doubtfull to giue it a wrong interpretation. And Pererius himselfe remembreth other opinions farre more probable then this of Pontus or Hellespont: yet he dares not auow his liking of them, because the Latine Translation hath it otherwise. For Stephanus de Vrbibus a Gracian Cosmographer, findeth the Citie of Ellas in the border of Cælelyria . and St. Hierome calleth Ellas the Citie of Arioch, as in truth it was. Now although the same be seated by Stephanus in Calesyria, yet it standeth on the border 10 of Arabia, of which Arioch was king: who formerly joined with Ninus in all his conquests, being of the same familie, and descended from Cham and Chus: after whom the name of Arius was by the Hebrens written Arisch: and afterward againe Aretas: as in the Macchabes: the kings of Arabia holding that name even to the time of St. Mac.z.c. g.v.s. Paul, who was sought to be betraied by the Lieutenant of Aretas commanding in Cor. 2.11. Damaseus. They were Princes for the most part confederate and depending vpon the Affyrian Empire. It is true that we finde in Daniel, that in the time of Nabucho- Dan. 2, donofor, one Arioch was Generall of his armie, and the principall Commander under him, who was a king of kings: which makes it plain, that Arisch heere spoken of, the fonne of that Arioch confederate of Ninus, was no king of Pontus, nor of Scythia: regi-20 ons farre remoued from the Assyrians and Babylonians. The name also of Arioch who commanded vnder Nabuchodono for is mentioned in Indith, by the name of king of the Elymeans: who are a Nation of Persians bordering Assyria: according to Stephanus: though Plinie fets it betweene the Sea-coast, and Media: and if any brother of the Arabian Kings or other of that house (knowne by the name of Arius, Arioch, Areta or Aretas) had the gouernment of that Persian Province called Elymais (asit seemeth they had by the places of Daniel and Iudith) yet the same was in Nabuchodonoforstime. But this Arioch heere spoken of may with more reason bee taken for the king of Arabia, the sonne of Arius, the confederate of Ninus: whose sonnes held league, as their Fathers did, being the next bordering Prince of all on that fide to-20 wards the West to Bahylonia, and Chaldaa: and in amitie with them from the beginning, and of their own house, and bloud: which D. Siculus also confirmeth.

of TIDAL another of the foure Kings.

He fourth King by Abraham ouerthrowne was Tidal, king of the Nations. The Hebrew writes it Goum, which Vatablus takes to be a proper name: Lyra of mixt people: Caluin of runnagates without habitation: Pererius out of Strabe, findes that Galilaa was inhabited by divers Nations, which were a mixt people: namely of Ægyptians, Arabians, and Straboli. 16.fe, Phænicians. Nam tales sunt qui Galilaam habitant, Such are the inhabitants of Galilee saith 523-

Strabo: and therefore was Tidal called king of these Nations, as they suppose. And it may be so : but the authoritie of Strabo is nothing in this question. For Galilaa was not peopled at this time, as it was in the time of Strabo. For when Abraham came Gon, 12,6. into Canaan, the Cananite was then in the Land, how socuer they might be afterwards mixt; which I know not. But there are many pettic kingdomes adioyning to Phonicia, and Palossina; as Palmyrena, Batanea, Laodicene, Apamena, Chalcidice, Caßiotis, Chalibonitis, and all these doe also ioine themselves to Mesopotamia, on the North, and to 50 Arabia on the East. And that these Nations gathered themselues together under Tidal, I take to be the probablest coniccture.

That CHEDORLAOMER the chiefe of the 4. Kings was not of Affyria, but of Persia: and that the Assyrian Empire at this time was much impaired.

Astly, whereas it is conceived that Chedorlaomer was the Assyrian Emperor, and that Amraphel was but a Satrape, Viceroy, or Provincial gouernour of Babylonia, and that the other kings named were fuch alfo, I cannot agree with Pererius in this. For Moses was too well acquainted with the names of Affur, and Shinar, to call the Affyrian a king of E- 10

lam: those kings being in the Scriptures euermore called by the name of Chaldea, Shinar, Babylonia, or Affyria: but neuer by Elam; and Chedorlaomer or Kedarlaomer was so called of Kidor, from Cidarim which in the Hebrew fignificth Regale: for so Q. Curtims calleth the garment which the Persian kings ware on their heads.

Neither doe I beleiue that the Affyrian or Babylonian Empire stood in any greatnesse at the time of this inuasion, and my reasons are these: First, example and experience teach vs, that those things which are set vp hastily, or forced violently, do not long last: Alexander became Lord of all Asia, on this side of Indus, in a time of so short a life, as it lasted not to ouer-looke what it selfe had brought forth. His fortunes were violent, but not perpetuall. For his Empire died at once with himselfe : all 20 whose cheife Commanders became kings after him. Tamberlain conquered Asia and India with a storme-like and terrible successe: but to prevalent furie God hath adjoined a short life: and what socuer things Nature herselfe worketh in hast, she taketh the least care of their continuance. The fruit of his victories perished with him, if

Ninus beeing the first whom the madnesse of boundlesse dominion transported, inuaded his neighbour Princes, and became victorious ouer them: a man violent, infolent, and cruell. Semiramis taking the opportunitie, and being more proud, aduenturous, and ambitious, then her Paramor: enlarged the Babylonian Empire, and beautified many places therein with buildings vnexampled. But her sonne hauing chan- 20 ged Nature and Condition with his Mother, proued no leffe feminine then the was masculine. And as wounds and wrongs, by their continual! smart, put the Patient in minde how to cure the one, and reuenge the other: fo those kings adjoining (whose subjection, and calamities incident was but new, and therefore the more greiuous) could not fleepe, when the aduantage wasoffered by fuch a fucceffour. For in regno Babylonico hic parum resplenduit, this King shined little (saith Nauclerus of Ninias) in the Babylonian kingdome. And likely it is that the neckes of mortall men having been neuer before gawled with the yoke of forraine dominion. Nor having euer had experience of that most miserable and detested condition of living in slavery: no long descent having as yet invested the Assyrian with a right: nor any other 40 title being for him to bee pretended than a strong hand; the foolish and effeminate fonne of a tyrannous and hated Father, could very ill hold fo many great Princes and Nations his vaffals, with a powerleffe maftering, and a mindleffe industrious than his Father, and Mother had vsed before him. And he that was so much given ouer to licentious idlenesse, as to suffer his Mother to raigne 42 yeares, and thereof the greatest part after he came to mans estate: witnessed thereby to the World, that he so much preferred ease before honour, and bodily pleasures before greatnesse, -as he neither indeauoured to gaine what he could not gouerne nor to keep what he could not without contentious perill enjoy.

These Considerations being joyned to the storie of Amraphel, deliuered by Mo- 50 fes, by which we finde that Amraphelking of Shinar was rather an inferiour to the king of Persia, than either his superiour, or equall, make it seeme probable, that the Empire of Ninus and Semiramis was at that time broken afunder, and restrained again to Babylonia.

For conclusion I will adde these two arguments confirming the former: First, that at fuch time as it pleased God to impose that great travaile vpon Abraham, from Vr in Chaldea to Charran, and then to Canaan, a passage of 700. miles, or little lesse, with women, children, and carriages: the Countries through which he wandred werethen setled, and in peace. For it was in the 23 yeare of Ninias, when Abraham obeying the voice of God, tooke this great journey in hand : in which time of 23. yeares after the death of Semirams, the neighbor Princes had recoursed their libertic and former estates. For Semiramis armie of foure millions, with herselfe vtterly strab.l.15 confirmed in India, and all her armes and engins of war, at the fame time loft, gaue an

10 occasion and opportunitie euen to the poorest soules and weakest hearted creatures of the World, to repurchase their former libertie.

Secondly, it is affirmed by the best and auncientest Historians, that Arius the sonne of Ninias, or Amraphel, inuaded the Battrians and Caspians, and againe subjected them : which needed not if they had not been revolted from Ninias, after Ninus death. And as Arioth recoursed one part, so did Baleus or Balaneus, otherwise Xerxes, reduce the rest revolted to their former obedience. Of whom it is said that he conquered from Agypt to India: and therefore was called Xerxes, ideft Victor & triumphator, a conquerour and triumpher, which vndertakings had been no other then the effects of madnesse, had not those Countries freed themselves, from the Babylonian sub-20 iection. Now if we shall make any doubt heereof, that is of the reconquest of Arius and Ninus, wee may as well thinke the rest of Ninus and Semiramis to be but fained: but if wee graunt this reconquest, then is it true that while Nimias or Amraphel ruled, the Affyrian Empire was torne afunder, according to that which hath beene gathered out of Moles as before remembred.

That it is not unprobable that the foure Kings had no dominion in the Countries named, but that they had else-where with their colonies planted themselues: and soretained the names of the Countries whence they came: which if it be fo, we neede not fay that AMRAPHEL was NINIAS, nor trouble our (elues with many other difficulties.

He consent of all writers, whose workes have come to my perusall, agreeing as they doe, that these 4 kings, Amaphel of Shinar, Chedorlao-mer of Elam, and their fellowes were Lords of those Regions, whereunto they are or feeme intituled:doth almost insorce vs to thinke that the Historie must so be vnderstood, as I haue deliuered. But if in this place, as often elswhere in the Scriptures, the names of Countries may be set for people of those lands, or if (as Hierome hath it) Chedorlaomer was king of the Elamites, as Tidal was faid to be of the Nations, that is of people either wanting a fixed habitati-40 on, or gathered out of fundrie regions: then may we otherwise conceine of this Historie; remouing thereby some difficulties which men perhaps have been vnwilling to find, because they could not find how to resolue them. For as it had been a strange coniecture to thinke that Arioch was drawn to affift the Persian, against the Sodomite; as far as from Pontus, where it is very vnlikely that Chedorlaomer was knowne, and almost impossible that the vale of siddim should have been once named: so in true estimation it is a thing of great improbabilitie, that Chedorlaomer, if he were king of Persta alone, should passe through so great a part of the World, as the Countries of Ass. ria, Chaldaa, Melapotamia, Syria, and part of Arabia, and Canaan, to Subdue those five Townes, whose very names how they should come to his care, being dissoined by so 50 many great Nations of different languages, a wife-man could hardly coniecture. And if all the Countries bordering Persia together with the Babylonian himselfe, yea the kingdome of Ellafar, & that of Tidal, so far offremoued were become his dependants, what reason can we finde that might have induced him to hearken after Solome and

by rooting out the posteritie of Ninus (as Ninus had dealt by Pharnus of Media, and Zoroalter of Bactria) then to imploy the forces of Amraphel, and those other kings, against five pettic townes, leaving Tyrus, and Sidon, and the great Citie of Dama/co, with many other places of much importance, and farre neerer vnto him, vnfubdued? Now as these doubts which may bee alleadged against the first conquest of the vale of Siddim, are exceeding vehement : fo are the objections to be made against his reconquest of these fine Cities, when they had revolted, as forcible; year and more, as being grounded partly vpon the text it selfe. For first, what madnesse had it beene in that small Province to rebell against so powerfull a Monarch? Or if it were so that they dwelling farre from him, hoped rather to bee forgotten, then that hee should come or fend to reclaime them; was it not more then madnesse in them, when his terrible armie approached, still to entertaine hope of euasion: yea to make resistance (being themselves a dissolute and therefore vnwarlike people) against the power of all the Nations betweene Euphrates, yea betweene themselues and the riuer of Indus? Likewise on the part of Chedorlaomer we should finde no greater wisedome, if he knowing the weakenesse of this people, had raised such a world of men against them : whom by any Lieutenant, with small forces hee might have subdued. For the perpetuall inheritance of that little Countrie, was not sufficient to counteruaile one moneths charges of so huge an armie; How small then must his valour haue beene, who with so mightic preparations effected no more then the wasting of 20 that Falley, wherein he left the Cities standing, taking no one of them; but returned well contented with a few prisoners, and the pillage of the Countrie, although hee had broken their armie in the field? Now the Scriptures doe not of this inualion (supposed so great) make any fearefull matter: but compose the two armies, as equally matcht, saying they were foure kings against five: yea, if the place be literally expounded, we shall finde that Abraham slew all these kings, of which great slaughter no Historie makes mention : Neither will the raigne of Ninias who lived foure or fine yeares longer, permit that he should have died so soone: neither would Histories have forgotten the manner of his death, if hee had so strangely perished in Stria. Whereby it appeares that these foure kings, were not the same that they are 20 commonly thought: nor their forces fo great as opinion hath made them. It may therefore well bee true, that these kings were such as many others, who in that age carried the same title: Lords and Commanders every one of his owne companie, which he carried forth as a Colonie, feeking place where to fettle himfelfe and them, as was the viuall manner of those times.

Neither is it vnprobable, that Chedorlaomer leading a troupe of Persians, Amaphel some people out of Shinar, and Tidal others gathered out of fundry places, might consort together, and make the weakest of the Countrie which lay about them, to pay them tribute. Who ocuer will consider the beginning of the first booke of Thuey dides, with the manner of discoueries, conquests and plantations, in the infan- 42 cie of Greece, or the manner of the Saracens inuading Affrica, and Spaine, with almost as many kings as feuerall Armies: or the proceedings of the Spanyards in their new discoueries, passages, and conquests in the West-Indies: may easily perceive, that it was neither vnusuall, for the leaders of Colonies to receive title from the people whom they conducted: nor to make alliances together, and breake them againe, disturbing sometimes one the other, sometimes helping in pursuit of a conquest. That Amraphel and his affociates were fuch manner of Commanders, it may feeme the more likely, by the flothfull qualitie of Ninias then raigning in Affyria: whose vnmanlike temper was fuch, as might well give occasion to fuch vndertaking spirits, as wanted the imploiments whereunto they were accustomed, in the raigne of Semi- 50 ramis, rather to feeke aduentures abroad, than to remain at home vnregarded: whilft others more vnworthie than themselues, were advanced. If the consent of the whole streame of writers upon this place make this coniecture disagreable to the Text, to the authoritie whereof all humane reason must subscribe, then we may hold our felues to the former coniecture, that Amraphel was Ninias: and that the power of his Auncestours being by his sloth decaied, he might well be inferiour to the Persian Chedorlaomer : or if this doe not satisfie, wee may say that Amraphel was an Vnder-king or Satrape of Shinar, under Ninias: who may be supposed to have had his Imperial feat in his Fathers Citie Niniue: and to have preferred it before Shinar and Babylon the Citic of his Mother, whom hee hated as an vsurper of his right. But if it were possible that in a case not concerning any mans Saluation; and wherein therefore none hath cared to take great paines, all might erre: then can I thinke that the opinion, That these foure kings were leaders of Colonies, sent out of the 10 Countries named in the Text, and not kings of the Countries themselves, is most consonant both to the condition of those times, and to the Scripture. And hecreto adde that Chedorlaomer seemes rather called a Persian king, then king of Persia: and that Arioch (whole kingdome vndoubtedly was betweene Syria and Arabia) having beenea man of action, or being a worthy mans sonne, was very well pleased, to giue passage and assistance, to these Captaines or pettie kings. These and such like things heere to vrge, were but with circumstances to adorne a supposition, which either may stand without them, or if it must fall, is vnworthie to have cost bestowed vpon it : especially considering, that it is not my intent to imploy any more time in making it good, but to leaue it wholy to the Readers pleasure, to follow any of these 20 opinions, or any other, if he finde any that shall seeme better than these. But of what Countries or people societ these foure were kings, this expedition is the only publique action that we know of performed by Abraham. And as for other things belonging to his Storie, and of his sonnes, and of his Nephews E/au and Iacob, as they are registred by Moses, because it is not our purpose, neither to stand vpon things generally knowne to all Christians, nor to repeate what hath beene elsewhere alreadie spoken, nor to preuent ourselves in things that may hereafter in due place be remembred, wee passe them heere in silence. And because in this Storie of Abraham and his posteritie, there is much mention of Egypt: by which it appeares that euen in the time of Abraham, it was a fetled and flourishing kingdome, it will not be amiffe in the next place to speake somewhat of the antiquities, and first kings thereof.

CHAP. II.

Of the kings of Ægypt from the first peopling of it after the floud, to the time of the deliuerie of the Isra-lites from thence.

Abreife of the names and times of the first kings of Ægypt: with a note of the causes of difficultie inresoluting of the truth in these points.

Oone after the confusion at Babel (as it seemes) Cham with many of his iffue and followers (hauing doubtleffe known the fertilitie of Ægypt before the floud) came thither and tooke possession of the Countrie: in which they built many Cities: and began the kingdome one hundred ninetie one yeares after the 20 deluge. The ancient Gouernours of this kingdome till fuch time as Ifrael departed Agypt are shewen in the Table following.

The Table and especially the Chronologie, is to be confirmed by probabilities and coniectures, because in such obscuritie manifest and resistlesse truth cannot be found. For S. Augustine, a man of exceeding great judgement, and incomparable diligence, who had fought into all antiquities, and had read the bookes of Varro, which now are lost, yet omitted the succession of the Egyptian kings: which he would not have done, if they had not beene more vncertaine then the Sicyonians, whom he remembreth, then whom doubtleffe they were more glorious. One great occasion of this obscuritie in the Egyptian Storie, was the ambition of the Preists: who to magnifie their antiquities, filled the Recordes (which were in their hands) with many leafings : and recounted vinto strangers, the names of many kings that neuer reigned. 50 What ground they had for these reports of supposed kings, it shall appeare anon. Sure it is that the magnificent workes and royall buildings in £gypt, fuch as are neuer found but in States that have greatly flourished, witnesse that their Princes were of meruailous greatnesse: and that the reports of the Preists were not altogether falle. A second cause of our ignorance in the Agyptian Historie, was the too much credulitie of some good Authors, who beleiuing the manifold and contraric reports of fundrie Azyptians, and publishing in their own name, such as pleased them best; haue confirmed them, and as it were enforced them vpon vs, by their authoritie. A third and generall cause of more than Agyptian darkenesse in all auncient Histories,, is the edition of many Authors by John Annus, of whom (if to the censures of sundrieveric learned I may adde mine) I thinke thus; That Annius having scene some fragments of those writers, and added vnto them what he would. may be credited, as an auoucher of true Histories, where approued writers confirme 10 him: but otherwise is to be deemed fabulous. Heereupon it commeth to passe that the account of Authors, either in the Chronologie or Genealogie of the Agyptian Kings, runnes three altogether different waies. The Christian writers, such as are ancient, for the most part follow Eufebius: Many late writers follow the edition of Annius his Authors: The prophane Histories follow Herodotus, Diodorus, and fuch others.

ø. II.

That by the account of the Agyptian Dynasties, and otherwise, it appeares that CHAMS reigne in Ægypt began in the yeare after the Floud 101.

O reconcile these, or gather out of them the times of the auncient kings, about whom is most controucrsie, the best meane is by helpe of the Dynasties: of whose continuance there is little or no disagreement. The account of the Dynasties (besides the authoritie of approued Authors) hath this good ground, that it agreeth for the most part, if not altogether with the Histories of the Assyrians, Iroians, Italians, and others, &c. The beginning of the 16. Dyn. is joined by general confent, with the 43. yeare of 20 Ninus : in which Abraham was borne. The twelue first Dynasties lasted each of them seuen yeares, vnder the twelue, which were called the greater Gods: so that all the yeares of their continuance were 84. The thirteenth Dynast indured source teene yeares : the foureteenth 26 : the fifteenth 37. These three last are said to haue beene under the three yonger Gods. So the hiteene first Dynastes, lasted 161. yeares. As I doe not therefore beleine that the continuance of these Dyn. was such as hath beene mentioned, because Annius in such-wise limits out their time : so I cannot reject the account vpon this only reason, That Annius hath it so : considering that both hitherto it hath paffed as currant, and is greatly strengthened by manie good reasons. For, whereas Eusebius placeth the beginning of the sixteenth 40 Dynastic, in the yeare of Abrahams birth, as aforesaid : the reckoning is easily casts by which the summe of 161. yeares, which according to our account were spent in the fifteene former, being subducted out of the summe of 352 yeares, which were betweene the floud and Abrahams birth, shew that the beginning of the first Dynastie, which was the beginning of Chams reigne in Egypt, was in the yeare 191. Asalfo by other probabilities the same may appeare. For it is generally agreed, that the multitude of mankind which came into Shinar, arrived at Babel, Anno à diluuio 131. In building the Tower were confumed fortic yeares as Glycas recordeth: whose report I have else-where confirmed with divers probabilities. That Chan was long in paffing with his companie, their Wiues, Children, Cattle, and fubfiance, 30 through all Syria then defolate, and full of bogges, Forrests, and bryers (which the deluge and want of culture in one hundred seuentic one yeares had brought vpon it) no reasonable man will doubt. To this his passage therefore, and the seating of himselsein Ægypt, wee allow twentie yeare: and these summes being added together, to wit one hundred thirtie one yeares after the floud, before they arrived at

Babel, 40. yeares for their stay there, and 20. for Chams passage into Agypt, and setling there, make vp the summe of 191 yeares: at which time we faid that Cham began his reigne in £gypt, in the beginning of the first Dynastie. And to this summe of 101. yeares if we adde the 161. yeares of the 15. first Dynasties, as they are numbred in common account, wee shall fall right with the yeare of Abrahams birth, which was An. Dil. 352. And heereto omitting manie other reasons, which might be brought to proue that these first Dynasties must needes have beene verie short, and not containing in the whole summe of their seuerall times aboue 161. yeares: Let it suffice that had they lasted longer, then either must Ægypt haue beene peopled as sooneas Babel after the floud : or the Dynasties (as Mercator thinkes) must have beene before 10 the floud. That the arrivall at Babel was manie yeares before the plantation of Ægypt, after the floud, enough hath beene faid to proue: and that the Dynasties were not before the floud, the number of the longliu'd generations betweene Adam and the floud, which was leffe than the number of the Dynaslies, may sufficiently witnesse. Or if we will thinke, that one life might (perhaps) be divided into manie Dynasties, then may this have have been aswell after the floud, as before : considering that the sonnes of Noah did not in cuerie Countrie creet such forme of Policie, as had been vsed in the same ere the Deluge: but such, as the disposition of the people, the authoritie and power of the Conducter, together with manie other circumstances, did induce or inforce them to.

à. III.

That these Dynasties were not divers families of kings, but rather successions of Regents, oft times many under one king.

He short continuance of the Dynasties, doth shew that they were not feuerall races of kings, as the vaunting Agyptums were wont to file them. What they were it cannot certainly be warranted. For inrefitutions of decaied antiquities, it is more easse to denie than to ak 30 firme. But this may bee said, partly vpon good circumstance, partly vpon the furest proofe, That it was the manner of the Agyptian kings, to put the government of the Countrie into the hands of some trustic Counsellor, only re-Teruing the sourraigntie to themselves, as the old kings of France were wont to the Masters of the Palace, and as the Turke doth to the chiefe Visier. This is confirmed first by the number of the Dynasties, whereof many are vnder Cham, and more then one under Ofiris or Mizraim; and must therefore have beene successions, not of Kings, but rather of Counfailors and Regents. Secondly, by custome of such Princes borderers to Agypt, as are mentioned in the Scriptures : of whom Abimilech the Philistim in his dealing with Abraham and Isaac about confederation, did no- 40 thing without Phicol Captaine of his Hoste; though in taking Abrahams wife, and in his private carriage, hee followed his owne pleasure. Likewise of Abimilech the fonne of Gideon it was faid : Is not hee the fonne of IERVBBAAL? and ZEBVL is his officer? Also Ilbosheth the sonne of Saul, feared Abner the Captaine of the Hoste. Yea, David himselfe hating Ioab for his crueltie did not punish him, in regard of his greatnesse, which was such, as was feared even of Hadad the Edomite living then in Agypt. Thirdly, this is confirmed by the temper and disposition of Cham, who was lewd, as appeares by the Scriptures: therefore likely both for his owne idlenesse and pleasure, to have laied the burthen of gouernment vpon others; and vpon iealousie, the companion of vnworthinesse, to haue changed his Lieute- 50 nants often. Aboue all other proofes is the advancement of Ioleph by Pharaoh. william. Tr.de For Pharaoh faid to Ioseph; Only in the Kings throne will I bee about thee : behold I bell Sacro, Lig. have fet thee over all the Land of Ægypt. William, Arch-bishop of Tyre, who flourished about the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred eightie, affirmes that the like or verie same forme of gouernment by Viceroies, was in his time practifed in £aypt, having there beene in vse (as he beleived) ever fince the time of loseph. He plainly shewes, that the Soldans of Agypt were not Lords of the Countrie, how euer they have been so deemed; but that they acknowledged and humbly perfourmed the dutie of subjects vnto the Caliphe: who residing in a most magnificent Palace in Cairo, did commit the charge, not only of civile government, but the power of making war and peace, with the whole office and authoritie roiall into the Soidens hands. He that shall reade in William of Tyre, the state of the Caliphe, or Mulene Ellia- Linguist dech, with the fourme of his Court, shall plainly behold the image of the ancient 10 Pharaoh, ruling by a Lieutenant, as great in authoritie as Iofeph was, though farre in-

CHAP.2. S.4.

To thinke that manie names of fuch Regents or Lieutenants as Ioseph was, haue crept into the list of the Azyptian Kings, were no strange imagination. For Inferim Called him . Theman that is Lord of the Land, and the Lord of General Control the Countrie: Besides, it is not valikely that the vainglorious Agyptian Preists 33. would as casily report him a king to posteritie, as ignorant men and strangers deeme him such, under whose hand all dispatches of importance, and rotall managing of the State had passed, whilst that the king himselfe intending his quiet had given his office to another. How strangers have mistaken in this kinde, the example alreadie 20 cited of losephs brethren, doth sufficiently witnesse. The reports of presists do appear in Diodorus, and Herodotus: each of whom, citing their relations, as good authoritie, lay; Diodorus, that Sefostris was the ninetieth king after Menas; Herodotus, that he was the 322 after Menas: which could not have been if Menas had been Adam. Therfore we may well conclude, That the Dynasties were not so many races of kings, but successions of Regents, appointed by the kings of so many fundrie linages or sorts of men. Now by what soeuer means a Dynastie or Regencie continued: whether in one famiic, as being made an hereditarie office: or in one order of men, as held by faction: fure it is that it was the kings guift, and free choice, that gaue the office. But the Crown roial alwaies passed by descent, & not by election: which (beside consent of Authors) 30 the Scriptures also proue. For whereas Iofeph bought all the land of Agypt for Pharash, if the crowne had passed by election, then should Pharash's children heereby either have beene inthralled amongst the rest of the people, to the next succession: or inioying their Fathers land, though not his estate, haue beene more mightie then the king: as Land-lords of all Agypt, and the king himselfe their Tenant. Likewise wee finde in Exod. 12. that God finote the first borne of PHARAOH, that was to set on his throne: And in Efay it is faid of PHARAOH: I am the sonne of the ancient king.

of CHAM, and his sonne MIZRAIM, Or OSIRIS.

Hat the succession of kings began, and continued in such wise as the Table hath showed from Chamto Chencres, now it followeth to show.

Legypt is called in the Scripture, the land of HAM. That this name is not Pfel, 18, 10. giuen to it because the posteritie of Cham did reigne there, but for that 109.13. himselfie did first plant it, we may gather by many circumstances. For 106.13.

I thinke it is no where found, that the Countries of Cush, Put, or Canaan, as well as Ægypt, were called the land of Ham. Further it is found in Diodorus Siculus, that O- Diod. Sic.l.t. fris calleth himselfe the eldest sonne of Cham, saying; Minipater Saturnus deorum om-50 nium iunior : also, Sum Saturni filius antiquior, germen ex pulchro & generoso ortum : which must needs be vnderstood of Cham: for this Saturnus Agyptius was Cham: as it is faid, that on the monument of Ninus was an inscription, wherein Cham was called Saturnus Ægyptus. Likewise the Temple of Hammon not farre from Ægypt doth testifie, that Ham resided in those parts. And St. Hierome in quastionibus Hebrai-eis faith, that the Agyptians themselves did in his daies call their Countrie Ham; as in foure severall places in the Psalmes this Countrie is called the land of Cham. And Ortelius, noting out of Plutarch in Ofride, that in the facrifices of the Agyptians this Countrie of Agypt was called Chemia, expounds it for Chamia: vt puto (faith he) d Chamo No Es filio, to which also he addeth out of Isidor, Agyptum V/g, hodie Agyptiorum lingua K A M vocari: that Ægypt unto this day in the tongue of the Ægyptians is called K A M. For the beginning and continuance of Chams reigne, the same reasons may suffice to be alleadged, which I have already given in profe of the time Spent in the 15. first Dynasties: Neither is it strange that the reigne of Cham, should last so long as 161. yeares: considering that Sem lived 600. Arpachshad and Shelah 10 each about 400. But strange it had beene, if one Saltis created by Manetho, had in those long-lived generations reigned there, 19. yeares, and with Baon, Apachnas, Apochis, and others of the same brood, obscured the same and gloric of Ofiris, Orus, and Sefoftris. Reineccius in histor. Iulia, placeth Mizraim next, otherwise called Ofiris according to Diodorus: who faith he was the fonne of Hammon: Krentshemius faith that Mizraim and Ofiris are words of neere affinitie and found in the Hebrew tongue. Howsoeuer it bee, weeknow that Mizraim the sonne of Cham, was Lord of A. gypt, and Reineccius citing good authoritie in this case, affirmeth that Agypt is now called by the naturals in their owne language Mezre. Neither doe I fee caufe of doubt whether Ofiris were the same with Mizraim. It is more necessarie, and hard 20 to shew manifestly, how long Mizraim or Ofiris reigned. For whereas the yeare of his death is no where precifely fet downe, we must be faine to follow probabilities. That he is not vainly faid by Annius his Berofus, to have begun his reigne at the birth of Abraham, when the Dynaslie of the Thebai began, it appeareth, first, by the authoritie of Eulebius: who auoucheth as much: next by Diodorus, who faith that he inhabited Thebes: which habitation of Ofris there, that it might be cause of that Dynaft. I can well believe : affenting to farre to Reineccius, who thinkes the Dynafties were named only, according to the feuerall feates of the kings.

Of the time when Osiris reigneended: and that IACOB came into Agypt in the time of ORVs the Sonne of OSIRIS.

He death of Ofiris, when it was, none can certainly affirme. The only coniecture that I know, is made thus. Lehabim the sonne of Mizraim called Hercules Lybius, made warre in Italie, to reuenge his Fathers death, on the affociates of Typhon, in the 41. yeare of Baleus king of Af-(yria: before which yeare he had made many great warres in £gypt, Phanicia, Phrygia, Crete, Lybia, and Spaine: and having ended his Agyptian warres, 40 left the kingdome to Orus. Thus farre Berofus, or authors following Berofus. That piod. Sic. l. 2.0.1 Orus last of all the Gods (as they were stilled) held the kingdome of Is, Diodorus Siculus plainly faith and Plutarch as much; to which all old Histories agree. Krentzhemius heereupon inferres, that fixe yeares may be allowed to the warres, which Heroncules made in so many Countries, after the Agyptian warres were ended: so should the death of Ofris have beene the 34.0f Baleus: when himselfe had reigned 297. yeares. I thinke that Krentzhemius was a greater Scholler than Souldier. For furely in those daies when commerce was not such as now, but all Nauigation made by coasting, a farre longer time would have been required, to the subduing of so manie Countries. An allowance of more time though it would alter his computation, yet 10 would it well agree with his intent: which was (doubtlesse) to finde the truth. If according to his account the death of Ofiris had beene the 34. of Baleus, then must Israel haue come into £gypt but seuen yeares before the death of Osiris: and haue fined there in the reigne of Typhon. A thing not eafily beleined. For it was the fame

king who aduanced Ioseph, bad him fend for his Father, and gaue him leave to goe into Canaan, to the performance of his Fathers funerall: as may eafily be gathered out of the booke of Genesis. Whereas therefore the raigne of Ofres, cannot be extended by any possible allowance in account of times, beyond the seventh yeare of 1/5 raels comming into Agypt : we must needs cut off 23. yeares from that number, which Krentzhemius coniectures his raigne to have continued: namely feuen which he should have lived after Incobs comming into Agypt: nine in which 10/eph had there flourished, ere his fathers comming: and other seuen in which Typhon and Hereules had raigned after the death of Ofiris, yet before Infephs advanagement.

Neither will this disagree with the time of Hercules Lybius his wars. For the war which Hereules made in Italie, is faid to have indured 10. yeares: After which proportion we may well give not only fixe yeares, as Krentz hemius doth, but 23 more to fo many wars in fo many and fo far-diffant Countries, as are named before: yea, by this proportion we may attribute vnto Orus the 13. yeares, which passed betweene the time of Iofephs being fold into Agypt, vnto his advancement : confidering that Putiphar who bought him, and whose daughter he may seeme to have married, continued all that while cheif Steward vnto Pharaoh: a thing not likely to haue been, if so violent alterations had hapned the whilest in Agypt, as the tyranous vsurpation of Typhon must needs have brought in. If citing some fragment of a lost old author, I shold 20 confidently fay, that Puiphar for his faithfulneffe to Orm, the sonne of Ofris, was by him in the beginning of his raigne made his cheif Steward: at which time buying Infept and finding him a just man, and one under whose hand all things did prosper, he rather committed his estate into Infephs hands, than vnto any of his Agyptian followers (many of whom he had found either false-hearted, or weake and valueky in the trouble som daies of Typhon) I know not what could be objected against this. Perhaps I might proceed further & fay, That when the faying of Iofeph pleased Pharaoh, and all his feruants: then Putiphar Preist of On, being cheise Officer to Pharaoh, did acknowledge in Iofeph, the ancient graces of God, & his iniurious imprisonment: whereupon he gaue him his daughter to wife! and being old refigned his office of cheife 30 steward vnto him:who afterward in regard of Putiphar, did fauour the Preists, when he bought the lands of all other Egyptians. This might appeare to some a tale not valike to the frierly book of Afenath, Putiphars daughter: but vato fuch as confider that God workes vitally by means: and that Putiphar was the Steward of that king, vnder whom Iseob died it would feeme a matter not vnprobable, had it an Author of sufficient credit to anouch it. Concerning the warres of Hercules, in which by this reck oning he should have spent 42 yeares after he left £gypt, ere he began in Italie, it is a circumstance which (the length of his Italian wars considered, & his former enterprises & archeiuements proportioned to them) doth not make against vs. but for vs: or if it were against vs, yet could it not so weaken our supposition, as these 40 Probabilities collected out of the vndisputable truth of Scripture doe confirme it. Neuerthelesse I freely grant that all these profesare no other, than such as may be gathered out of Authors, not well agreeing, nor to be reconciled in such obscuritie, otherwise than by likelihoods.answerable to the holy Text.

ð. V I. of Typnon, Hercyles Ægyptivs, Orvs, and the two Sesostres, fuccessively, reigning after Mizraim and of divers errors about the former Sesostres.

Oncerning the reigne of Typhon, and of Hercules, I finde none that precifely doth define how long either of them continued. Daniel Angelogrator giueth three yeares to Typhon, omitting Hercules. But he is fo peremptorie without profe, as if his owne worde were sufficient authoritie, in many points verie questionable; alledging no witnesse, but as it were faying, Testemeipso: yet herein we may thinke him to speake probably, forasmuch as the tearned Krentzhemius affirmeth, that Hercules did verie soone which summe divers other waies may be collected. Since therefore to the departure out of £gypt, there doe remaine (as is aforesaid) onely 122. yeares from the death of orw: wee are now to confider how many of them are to be allowed vnto 20 Sefastris or Sefanchasis: who is placed next vnto Orus, by authoritie of the Scholiastes Apollony : not without good probabilitie. For this great king or conquerour, is by many Histories recorded to haue ouer-run a great part of Alia: to haue built a fleete of shippeson the red Sea: and so to have entred into India: likewise with an other fleete on the middle-earth Seas, to have passed into Europe, and subdued manie Nations. This is he (as Reineccius iudgeth) whom Iustine erring in account of his time calleth Vexoris: For Iulline placeth Vexoris in ages before Ninus: whereby it would follow that selostris, if hee were Vexoris, was more ancient then was Ofiris (otherwise Mizrain) a thing altogether vnlikely. Certaine it is that after the departure of Israel out of Agypt, no one Pharaoh came into the land of Canaan (which lieth in the 20 way from Egypt into Asia) till the Father in law of Salomon, Pharaoh Vaphres, tooke Gerar, and gaue it to his daughter: after which time Sefac oppressed Rehoboars, and gaue it to his daughter : after which sime Sefue oppressed Rehoboam, & Necho sought passage through the land of Israel, when hee made his expedition against the Chaldeans. Ofking Vaphres and Nechoitis out of question, that neither of them was the great king Sefostris. Of Sesac it is doubted by some, for asmuch as he came into 14das, with a great armie. Reineccius propounding the doubt leaueth it vndecided; vnleffeit bee sufficient proofe of his owne opinion, that hee himselfe placeth Sefastris next to Orus: following the Scholiastes Apollony. But further answere may be made to shew that they were not one. For as Instine witnesseth, Sesostris, otherwise Vex- 40 oris, made warre on people farre remoued, abstaining from his neighbours. Selas camevp purposely against Hierusalem. Sesostris, as Diod. witnesseth, had but 24000. horse : Sefac had 60000 : Sefostris had 8020. Chariots, Sefac but 1200 : Sefostris made his expedition for no private purpose, but to get a great name : Sefac, as most agree, had no other purpose then to succour Ieroboam, and give him countenance in his new reigne: whom he had fauoured euen against Salomon: therfore Selostris must needes haue reigned whilft Ifrael abode in Egypt.

Whereas Krentzhemius collecteth out of Herodotus, and Diodorus, that one Menas, or Menas, was next to Orus: because those Historians affirme that hee related next after the Gods; it moueth me nothing. For Ostra did succed those 14 Gods, 10 namely the twelve greater and three selfer: himselfe also (as the learned Kaintenian noteth) being called Manas. Which name, as also Minass, and Menis were titles of dignitic: though militaken by some as proper names. Krentzhemius doth we rie probably gather, that Menas was Mercurius Ter-maximus; the Hebrew word.

Meni signifying an Arithmetician: which name Ter-maximue might well be attributed to Ofiris: who was agreat Conquerour, Philosopher, and benefactor to mankind, by giuing good Lawes, and teaching profitable Artes. In prowesse and great vndertakings Sefostris was no whit inferiour to Osiris. For he sought victorie not for gaine, but for honour only : and beeing well contented, that many Nations had acknowledged his power, and fubmitted themselues to his will and roiali disposition. leauing them in a manner to their libertic, returned into Agypt. Soone vpon his returne he was endangered by a great Treason, the house in which he was, being by his owne brother purposely fired : which neuerthelesse hee is said to have escaped, 10 and to have reigned in all thirtie three yeares: after which time hee chose rather to die then to liue : because he fell blinde. Both Herodotus, and Diodorus, affirme that Selofiris left a fonne, whose name was Pheron or Pherones: who afterwardes tooke the name of Sefosiris: but was nothing like to his Father in glorie: for hee shortly fell blinde. The cause of his blindnesse Herodotus attributes to his affaulting the river Nilus with a iaueline: which tale Diodorus having likewise heard, yet reports as a fable, saying that perhaps he tooke the disease naturally from his Father. How long this man reigned it is no where expressed yet for a smuch as Orus the second, (otherwise Busins) who succeeded him, began 14. yeares after that this Sesostris had been king, it must needes bee that this reigned 14. yeares at least. That Businis began not 20 vntill these 14. yeares at least were expired, the very account of time from the first of Busins, to the departure of Israelout of Ægypt plainly shewes, beeing almost generally agreed upon, to have beene 75 yeares. That none came betweene Sesostria the second and Busiris or Orus the second, it stands only vpon probabilities: which are these. After Sefostris had reigned somewhile, he fell blinde: after certaine yeares hee recoucred his fight, as is faid : which may have beene true, but is more like to haue beene a fable: furely the manner of his recouerie as it is fet downe, is verie fabulous: namely that by looking vpon a woman, or washing his cies with her water, who had onely knowne her owne husband, he got his sight againe. As the time of his reigne, before his blindnesse, and when hee was well againe (if euer hee were) 20 may haue taken vp a good part of 14. yeares: so his workes which were great doe much more strongly argue, that his reigne was not verie short. His words are largely set downe by Herodotus, and Diodorus: a part of which may seeme to have beene the finishing of that which his Father had begun, about the channels and fluces of Nilus: whom I thinke he rather frighted, (as his Father had done) with spades and shouels, then with darts, and iauelins: and by his diligent ouerlight of that worke, was like enough to loofe both his eye-fight and his peoples loue: whom his Father had verie bufily emploied in excelline labour about it.

d. VII.

Of Business the first oppression of the Israelises; and of his successor Queene There

Nd heerein (if I may prefume to coniceture) Busins, who was afterwards king, is like to have dealt with him, as Ierobam did with the fonne of Salomon. For that Busins himselfe was much addicted to magnificent workes, it well appeared, by the drudgerie wherewith he wearied the children of Israel in his buildings: If therfore he were emploied by the great Sefoffris, as teroboam was by Salomon, in the ouerlight of those businesses, the had good opportunitie to worke his greatnesses with the king by industrie; and afterward with the people by incensing them against their new king; as teroboam did. For what the multitude will endure at one Princes hands, they will not at an others: vnlesse he hauceither an equall spirit, or a surer foundation. If moreouer he sought to derive all the paine and labour of publique workes from the Agyptians Y 2

Ægyptians, to the Ifraelites: he furely did that which to his owne people was verie plautible:who (as appeares in Exodus) were nothing flack in fulfilling the kings crueltie. Now that Orus the 2. or Businis was the king that first oppressed Israel, and made the Edict of drowning the Hebrew children, which (faith Cedrenus) lasted tenne moneths:it is a common opinion of many great & most learned writers; who also think that hereupon grew the fable of Busiris facrificing strangers. It is also a common interpretation of that place, Ex. 1. that the King, who knew not 10 seph, was a king of a new family. That Busiris was of a new familie, Reineccius doth shew: who also thinks him Author of the bloudy edict. Neuertheleffe, true it is, that Bufir is according to all mens computation, began his reigne 5. yeares after the birth of Moses; before whose 10 birth it is most manifest, that the Law was made, and much more that the persecution began: which Bunting thinks to have lasted 87. yeares, ere the departure out of Aeypt. Let vs the fore consider, besides the blindnesse of Selostris the second how great the power of the Regents or Viceroyes in Agypt was : and how great confidence the kings did put in them: feeing Ioseph ruled with fuch full power, that he bought al Ægypi, & all the Ægyptians for bread; giving at the same time the best of the land to his owne father & brethren, for nothing: seeing also that when the Agyptians cried out vpo Pharaoh, for bread: Pharaoh said to all the Agyptians, Go to Ioseph: what he saith to you, do ye. If to a stranger borne, lately fetcht out of prison, a king well able to have gouerned himself, would give such trust, and soveraigne authoritie: it is not vnlikely 20 that a blind Prince should do it to a man of especial reputation. For God often profpers, not only the good (fuch as toleph was) but wicked men also, as his instruments against the day of wrath. Therfore perhaps the king did (as many haue done) resigne his kingdom to him, though his reign was not accounted to have begun, til the death of Sefostris. But whether Busiris did vsurpe the kingdom, or protection of the land by violence or whether the blind king religned it, keeping the title; or whether Businis were only Regent, whilft the king lived, and afterwards (as is acknowledged by all) king himselfe: it might well be said that Pharaohs daughter tooke vp Moles, and that Pharaoh vexed Israel: seeing he both at that time was king in effect, and shortly after king in deed and title both. It were not abfurd for vs to fay that the blind king Se- 30 fostris the second oppressed Israel: but forasmuch as it may seeme that the wicked Tirant shewed his cuill nature even when he first arose: I thinke it more likely, that Busiris did it, vsing at first the power of a king, and shortly after the stile. Thus of the 122. yeares which passed betweene the beginning of Sefostris his reigne, and the departure of Israel out of Agypt, 47. being spent: the 75. which remaine, are to bee accounted to Busiris or Orus the second, and his children. Busiris himselfe reigned 30. yeares, according to Eulebius: whom verie many indicious authors herein approue. After him his daughter, who tooke Moses out of the water, is said by all that I haue read, to haue reigned 12. yeares : Her name was Thermutis Phareis, or Muthis according to Cedrenus: Eufeb. cals her Aceneris: and out of Artabanus his Historie Me- 40 ris: Iosephus cals her both Acenchere,& Thermutis. Epiphanius in Panario saith that she was honoured afterward of the Egyptians, by the name of Thermutis the daughter of Amenoph, the fon of Pharaoh. Of this last title question might be made & much spoken: for the Scriptures call her not Pharaohs sonnes daughter, but Pharohs daughter. Amenophis indeed is placed next before Busiris or Orus the second by Eusebius and others: but whether he were a king or onely a Regent I cannot coniccture. For Herodotus, Diodorus, and the ancient Historians name the sonne of Sefostris, Pheron. Perhaps his name was Pharaoh Amenophis: and his daughter by the Agyptians called rather the neece or grandchilde, then the daughter of Pharach, because of the gloric of Sefostris, and the disreputation of his sonne. If so, and if that Busiris or Orus the se- 50 cond marrying her, pretended any title by her, then is our coniccture strengthened, and then was she both daughter, grandchild, and wife vnto Pharaoh: and furniting him, Queene of the land, 12. yeares. But if the were the daughter of Orus the 2. & fifter of Athoris, or Rathoris, as many thinke, to whose conjecture I will not oppose mine, of the Historie of the World. CHAP.2. $.8.

then may it seeme; that either her brethren were degenerate, or too yong to rule of the two brethren of Queene THERMVTIS: and what king it was, under whom Moses was borne: and who it was that perished

when her Farher died.

Hee had two brethren the one was Rathoris or Athoris, who fucceeded her; the other Telegonus, who is only named by Eufebius: but his lineage and offpring described by Reineccius. Rathoris after his listers death reigned 9. yeares: after whom Chenchres, thought to be his fon, reigned 10.and then perished in the red Sea. During the reign of Chencres, Eulebius faith, that Telegonus begat Epaphus vpon Io: of which Historic elswhere he reporteth otherwise. After the death of Chencres (whom some call Acencheres: but all or most do stile sequero a fighter against God) Acherres reigned 8. yeares: and then Cherres 15. This descent seemes from Father to sonne. In the 11. yeare of Cherres it is said by Euseb that Epaphus reigning in the lower part of Egypt built 20 Memphis. This is an argument of that which otherwise was not vnlikely : viz. That £gypt was greatly brought out of order by the plagues which God had laid you it, and the destruction of her king and armie in the red Sea : else could it not have had two reigning in it at once; the later of whom, or his posteritie seemes to have taken all from Cherres the grand-child of Chencres. For whereas Armais is faid to have reigned 4. yeares after Cherres: and Armesis one after Armais: these two kings are by Eufebius and others accounted as one; and his reigne faid to have beene 5. yeares. Hisname is called Armeus, otherwise Danaus and his pedigree thus described by Reineccius in Historia Iulia.

Agenor, Belus, and Busiris.

Agyptus or Ramelles who gaue name to the Countrie, hauing expelled his brother Danaus, reigned, and begat Lynceus, maried to-Hypermnestra. --

Danaus or Armeus expelled by his brother &gyptus, after hee had reigned fine yeares, became king of Argos in Greece: was Father to Hypermnestra.

How it might come to passe that the Nephews sons of Epaphus shoul have occupied the kingdome after Cherres, it is hard to fay : confidering that Epaphus himfelf is reported by Eulebius to have been borne in the time of Cheneres. But for almuch as the Historic of Epaphus his birth, is diversly related by Eusebius, it may suffice, that Belus the Father of Danaus & Agyptus, otherwise called Armeus and Ramesses, was e-50 qually distant from Busiris or Orus the secod, with Cherres the grandchild of Cheneres, And that the posteritie of Telegonus did marrie very yong, it appeares by the historie of these two brethren, Danaus & Agyptus: of whom the former had 50 daughters, the later 50. sons: perhaps, or rather questionlesse, by divers women yet surely they began to beget children in their first youth : Howsoeuer it were, the generall confent of writers is, that Armeus or Danaus did succeede Cherres: and (according to Eufebius and good Authors approuing him) reigned flue yeares. **Ramessign followed, who reigned 68 yares. This **Ramessign for the **Egyptus** is that **Armessign for the reigned flue yeares. **Approved the theorem in the opinion of **Mercator**, **Abssign for the opinion of **Mercator**, **Abssign for the reigned fo an at the 40. yeare of his age: and fled into the wildernefle, and there abode for feare: 10 all which Circumfiances could agree with none, but this Rameffes, who reigned fo long: wherefore defirous rather to hold a true Paradox, then a common errour, hee placeth one Aliftragmathofs (whofe name is found in the lift of Egyptian kings, but the time vincertaine wherein he reigned) in an age 112.0 113. yeares more ancient than others left him in: and so continuing the Catalogue of his successors from the others from Themofs (whom Eufcals Amassis) downwards with no other variation of the length of each mans reigne, than is the difference betweene Manetho and Euseb. he findes Mose borne vnder Armessimum: and Israel delivered in the daies of his sonne Amenophis. The verie name of Alistragmathofs seemes to him with little alteration to sound like Pharatates, of which name one was thought to have flourished either as 10 a king, or a wise man about the time of Islae. For (saith he) from Alistragmathofs to Phragmathofs, Pharmathofs, Pharatassis, or Pharatases, the change is not great. Mercater was a man of excellent learning and industrie: and one to whom the World is by these reasons. First, I see all other writers agree, that Chencres was the king who was drowned in the red Sea: Secondly, the place Exod. 4. all are dead &x. may better be vndershood of Busiris and all his children, then of one king alone: Thirdly, St. Cyrill in his first booke against Inlian the Apostata, saith that Dardanus built Dardania, when Moses was 120. yeares old: Ramesex, which was this Armesessimmum, being then king of Ægypt. After Ramesses, Amenophis reigned 19. yeares: who is thought 30

Exod.4.19.

by Mercator, and peremptorily by Bunting pronounced, to be the king that perilied in the red Sea: of which our opinion beeing alreadie laied open, I thinke it most expedient to referre the kings ensuing to their owne times (which a Chronolo-gicall Table (hall lay open) and heere to speake of that great delinerance of Israel out of Exppt: which for manie great considerations depending thereupon, we may not lightly ouer-passe.

Q. I.
Of the time of Moses birth, and how long the Ifraelites were oppreffel in £gypt.

Rue it is that the Historie it selfe is generally and well knowne: yet concerning the time of Moses his birth, who was the excellent and famous instrument of this, and other great workes of the Highes, the different opinions are verie necreas manic, as the men that have written of that Argument.

L.Viues in his annotations upon St. Augustine citeth manic of their conicctures: a sthat of Porphyrie out of Samchoniato, that Moses lived in the time of Semiramis; but if he meant the first Semiramis, it was but a fond conceit: for besides that the same is contrarie to all stories Diuine and humane; while that Semiramis liued shee commanded Syria, and all the parts thereof absolutely: neither were the Ammonites or Moabites or Edomites while she ruled, in rerumnatura.

A second opinion he remembreth of Appion, taken from Ptolomica Preist of Mendes, who saith that Moses was borne while Inachus ruled the Argiues, and Amesis in Ægypt.

The third opinion is taken out of Polemon, in his Greeke Historie the first booke : that Mofes was borne while Apis the third king ruled Argos.

A fourth is borrowed from Tatianus Affrius, who though hee cite some authorities, that Affect lived after the Troian warre, is himselfe of opinion, that Moses was faire more ancient, proving it by manie arguments.

Fiftly, he setteth downe the teltimonic of Numerius the Philosopher, who tooke

Musus and Moses to be one: confirming the same out of Artapanas, who confessed that Mass was called Musus, by the Gracian: and who farther delivereth that he was adopted by Chenephis, or Thermutis, the daughter of Egypt: the same which Eupolemus calleth Merisjothers (as Rabanus Maurus) Thermothes. Eusoim also affirment that by Eupolemus in his first booke de bono, Moses vir Deo coniunstissimus is called Musus Indeorum. Eusophis in his Chronologic, sindes that Moses was born while Europ. Amenophis ruled Egypt. The ancient Maerithon cals that Phara, which lived at Moses with the Grammarian will have to be Amoss, and elsewhere Amenophis the Father of Sethoss: to whom Institute and Cornelius Tacius give the name of Boschoris. To ome it seemeth most probable, that while Saphrus, called also Sphenus or Phiereus, governed Asspris, Orthopolis Sicyonia; and Criesus the Arigines; that then (Sesofiris the Geond ruling in Asspr) Moses was borne. For if we beleive St. Augustine, it was about the end of Cereps time, that Moses led Ifraelout of Egypt. Educit Moses (saith he) led the decumbination of the control of the second of the s people of God out of Agypt, about the end of Ceca or sime king of the Athenians. 2514.

In this fort therefore is the time of Mose birth, and of his departure out of Agypt best proued. St. August affirmes (as before remembred) that Moses was borne:

Saphrus gouerning Assignia, and that he left Agypt about the end of Cecrops time.

Now

Exod.I.

Now Saphrus ruled 20, yeares; his fucceffor Mamelus 20, yeares; Sparetus after him 40. yeares : in whose fourth yeare Cecrops began to gouerne in Attica : Ascatades followed Sparetus, and held the Empire 41: So as Moles beeing borne while Saphrus ruled Allyria: Orthopolis Sicyonia; and Criafus Argos (for these three kings lived at once at his birth, faith S. Augustine, as Cecrops did when he departed Agypt) it will follow that the birth of Moles was in the nineteenth yeare of the Affrian Saphrus : for take one yeare remaining of 20. (for fo long Saphrus reigned) to which adde the thirtie yeares of Mamelus, and the 40. yeares of Sparetus, these make 71. with which there were wasted three yeares of Cecrops his 50. yeares: then take nine yeares out of the reigne of Ascatades, who was Sparetus successour, those nine yeares added to 71 make 10 80 at which age Moles left Agypt: and adde these nine yeares to the three yeares of Cecrops formerly spent, there will termine but soure yeares of Cecrops his 50: and so it falleth right with S. Augustines words, affirming that towards the end of Cecrops his time, Moles led the people of Ifrael out of Egypt.

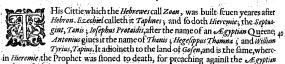

Now the time in which the Hebrewes were opprest in £gypt, seemeth to have had beginning some eight or nine yeare before the birth of Moses, and 54. yeare, or rather more, after Iofeph : betweene whose death and the birth of Moses, there were confirmed 64. yeares: some of which time, and 80. yeares after, they lived in great feruitude and miserie. For as it is written in Exodus: They set taske-masters over them, to keepe them under with burdens : and they built the Cities Pithom and 20 Ramases erc. And by crueltie they caused the children of Israel to serue; and made them wearie of their lines, by fore labour in claie and brick, and in all worke of the field, with all manner of bondage. All which laid vpon them by a masteting power and strong hand, they endured to the time by the wifedome of God appointed: euen from 74. yeares, or not much more after the death of Iofeph, who left the World, when it had lafted 2370. yeares, to the eightieth yeare of Moles, and untill he wrought his miracles in the field of Zoan, which he perfourmed in the Worlds age 2514, towards the end thereof, according to Codoman, or after our account, 2513. And because those things which we deliuer of Egypt, may the better be vnderstood. I thinke it necesfarie to speake a few wordes of the principall places therein named, in this dif 30

Zoan or Taphnes was in Moles time the Metropolis of the lower Agypt, in which their Pharaohs then commonly refided; and not vnlikely to be the fame Citie, where Abraham in his time found him. But Eusebius out of Artapanus affirmeth, that Abraham read Astronomie in Heliopolis or On, to Pharetates King of Agypt, Alex. Polyhistor out of Eupolemus hath it otherwise : saying, that Abraham instructed the Agyptian Priests, and not the king; both which authorities Eusebius citeth. The Sep- 10 tuagint, and the Vulgar edition, for Zoan write Heliopolis. Pagnin, Vatablus, Iunius, and our English call it on; and Ptolomie Onium. There are two Cities of that name; the one on the frontier of the lower Agypt, towards the South; the other somewhat lower on the Easter-most branch of Ailus falling into the Sea at Pelusium. Andit it may be that Heliopolis to the South of the river Train, was the same which Vatablus, and our English call Auen. Of the latter it is, that the Scriptures take certaine Execusion knowledge : the same which Pomp Mela, and Plinie call Solis oppidum ; Tyrius in the Holie warre, Malbec; the Arabians Bahalbeth; and Simeon Sethi, fons Solis. Of this Heliopolis or On, was Putiphar Priest, or Prince, whose daughter Infeph married. In the territorie adioining Iacob inhabited, while he lived in Agypt. In the confines of this Joseph. 1. bell. Citie, Onias the high Priest of the Ierres built a Temple, dedicated to the eternall Indiaic.c.s. God; not much inferiour to that of Hierusalem (Ptolomic Philopater then governing in Agypt) which flood to the time of Vespasian, 333. yeares after the foundation by 10 Onias, whom Iofephus falfely reporteth, heerein to have fulfilled a prophecie of E/ai. c.19. In die illa erit altare Domini in medio terra Ægypti. In that day shall the altar of the Lord be in the middest of the land of Ægypt. Antiochus Epiphanes at that time of the building tyrannifing ouer the Iewes, gaue the occasion for the erecting of this Temple in Egypt. Lastly, there it was, that our Sauiour Christ Iesus remained, while Io-(eph and the Virgin Marie feared the violence of Herod : neare which (faith Brochard) Brochser, Good the fountaine is still found, called Iefus Well, whose streames doe afterward water the gardens of Ballamum, no where else found in Agypt. And heereof see more in Brochard in his description of Egypt.

There is also the Citie of Noph, remembred by Esai and Ezechiel; the same which Esai.19.13. 20 Hosea the prophet calleth Moph: which latter name it tooke from a mountaine ad- Equip. 13.13 ioining, fo called, which mountaine Herodotus remembreth. And this is that great Hofea 9.6. Citie, which was called Memphis; and so the Septuagint write it. It is knowne to the Arabians by the name of Mazar. The Chaldeans name it Alchabyr; and Tudalen, Pelusium, which Vatablus, Pagnin, Junius, and our English write Sin; the Septuagint call Sais : and Montanus Lebna ; is not the same with Damiata, as Gul. Tyrius witnes- G.Tyr.l. 20,617 feth. In the time of Baldwin the third, Pelusium was called Belbeis. Belbeis (faith Tyri- lib.z.c.5. us) qua olim dicta est Pelusium, Belbeis, that in times past was called Pelusium.

The Citie of No, the Septuagint call Diospolis. Of which name there are two or Excels 30.15.16 30 three in Agypt. Hierome converts it Alexandria, by anticipation, because it was so called in the future.

Bubastus, for fo Hierome and Ziegler write it, is the same which the Hebrews call Exch 30.17.

To make the storie the more perceiuable, I have added a description of the land of Gosen, in which the Israelites inhabited; with those Cities and places so often remembred in the Scripture: as of Taphnes or Zoan, Heliopolis or Bethfemes, Balfephon, Succoth, and the rest; together with Moses passage through the Desertes of Arabia the Stonie. For all storie without the knowledge of the places, wherein the actions were perfourmed, as it wanteth a great part of the pleasure; so it no way enricheth 40 the knowledge and vnderstanding of the Reader; neither doth any thing serue to retaine, what we read, in our memories, so well as these pictures and descriptions do. In which respect I am driven to digresse in manie places, and to interpose some such discourse, otherwise seeming impertinent : taking for my authoritie, after many others more ancient, that great learned man Arias Montanus; who in his Preface to the Storie of the Holie land, hath these words. Si enim absalocorum observatione res gesta narrentur, aut sine Topographia cognitione historia legantur, adeò confusa atá, perturbata erunt omnia, vt ex ijs nihil non obscurum, nihil non difficile elici posit. If nurration (faith he) be made of those things which are perfourmed, without the observation of the places, wherein they were done: or if Histories be read without Topographicall knowledge; all 30 things will appeare so intricate and confused, as we shall thereby understand nothing but obscurely, nor draw thence any knowledge, but with the greatest difficultie.

Of the crueltie against the Israelites yong children in Agypt: and of Moses his preferuation, and education.

Vt to returne to the storic it selfe. It appeareth that notwithstanding the labour and flauerie, which the ffraelites endured, yet they decrease fed not in numbers: infomuch as thurash confidering the danger of difcontented pouerty, and the able bodies of an opprefied multitude, how perilous they might be to his chate, by suggestion of the Deuill 10

resoluted to slaughter all the male children of the Hebrews, as sooneas they should be born. To which end he sent for Sephora & Thua, women the most famous and expert amongst them, que preerant (saith Commestor) multitudini obstetricum, who had commaund given them over all midwives; by whom (as it seemeth) he gave order to all the rest for the execution of his Edict. For to have called all the midwives of Agypt together, had beene a strange Parliament. Now whether these two, before named, were of the Hebrews, or of the Agyptians, it is diverfly diffruted. St. Augustine calls them Hebrewes, because it is written Exodus the first, The King of Agypt commanded the mixwiues of the Hebrew women coc. To preuent which, (and prefuming that he could relift the ordinance of God, by a mean, contrarie to the lawes of Heauen and of nature) he stretched out his bloudie and mercilesse hand to the execution of his former intent. The same prevention Herodlong after practifed, when fearing the spirituall kingdome of Christ, as if it should have beene temporall, he caufed all the male children at that time borne to be flaughtered. And that Pharaoh had some kinde of foreknowledge of the future successe, it may be gathered by these his owne words, in the tenth verse of the fift of Exodus. Come,let vs workewisely with 40 them, least they multiplie; and it come to passe, that if there bee warre, they ioine themselues also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and get them out of the Land. But wee see, and time hath told it vs from the beginning, how God derideth the wisedome of the worldly men, when forgetting the Lord of all power, they relic on the inventions of their owne most feeble; and altogether darkened vnderstanding. For even by the hands of the dearely beloued daughter of this tyrant, was that great Prophet and minister of Gods meruailous workes taken out of Nilus, being thereinto turned off, in an Arkeof reedes, a fucking and powerleffe infant. And this Princeffe hauing beheld the child his forme and beautie, though but yet in the blouth, so peirced her compassion, as she did not only preserue it, and cause it to be sostered; but 50 commanded that it should be esseemed as her owne, and with equal care to the fonne of a King nourished. And for memorie that it was her deede, shee called the childe Moses, as it were, extractus, or ereptus, taken out, to wit, out of the water : or,

Hen Moles was growne to mans estate, Tolephus and Eulebins, out of Artapanus, tell vs of ten yeares warre that he madeagainst the Ethiopians: of the belieging of Saba, afterward by Cambyfes called Meroe: and how he recoursed that Citie by the fauour of Tharbis, a Daughter of Athiopia, whom he tooke to wife. So hath Commestor a pretie tale of Moles, Howafter the end of that warre, Tharbis religting his returne into Leggt, Moles, most skilfull in Afronomie, caused two Images to be ingraven in two pretions fromes : whereof the one encreased memorie; the other caused forgetfulnesse. These he set in two rings; whereof he gaue the one, to wit, that of oblinion, 20 to his wife Tharbis, referuing the other of memorie for himselfe; which ring of forgetfulnesse, after thee had awhile worne, thee beganne to neglect the loue thee bare her hulband : and to Moles without danger returned into Agree. But leaving these fancies to the Authors of them : It is true, that about the 40 lyeare of Mofer age, when hee beheld an Agyptian offering violence to one of the oppressed Hebrawes, moued by compassion in respect of his brother, and stirred up by distance against the other; in the contention he flew the Egyptian. Soone after which act, finding a disposition in some of his owne Nation to accuse him, for whose defence hee had thus greatly endangered his owne life: by the ordinance and adulfe of God, whose chosen servant hee was, hee fled into Arabia Petres, the next bordering Countrie to 40 Egypt; where wandring all alone, as a man left and for laken, in a place vak nowne vnto him, as among a Nation of barbarous frangers, and who in fiture times were the irreconciliable enemies of the Hebrewes it pleased God (working the greatest things by the weakest worldlie meanes) to make the watering of a few theepe, and the affifting of the Daughters of Riggel the Madianite, an occasion whereby to prouide him a wife of one of those, and a father in law, that fed him, and sustained him in a Countrie nearest Egypt; fittest to return from : necessarie to bee knowne, because interjacent betweene Egypt and Indea, through which he was to leade the Visaditer: and wherein God held him, till the occasion which God presented, best ferued. That Moles in this time of his abode at Madan, wrote the Booke of 10h, as Pererius Supposeth, I cannot judge of it, because it is thought, that leb was at that time liuing. Neither dare I subscribe to Pererius opinion. That Moles, while heliued in that part of Arabia, wrote the bookes of Genesis; although I cannot denie the reason of Pererius coniecture, That by the example of Jobs parience hee might ftrengthen the oppressed Hebrewes: and by the promises of God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, put them in affurance of their deliverie from the Egyptian flaterie, and of the Land of rest, and plentie promised. Of his calling backe into Egypt by the Angell of God, and the meruailes and

For when cuery one of the Hebrewes had (according to direction from Mofes receiued) flaine a Lambe, without spot or blemish, for the Passeouer, (a Sacrament of the 20 most cleane and vnspotted Saujour) and with the bloud thereof coloured the poste and linterne of the dores; the Angell of God in the dead of the night smote every first-borne of £gypt, from the sonne of the King, to that of the becger and slaue: the children of the Ifraelites excepted. At which terrible judgement of God, Pharash being more then euer amazed, yeelded, as before is faid, to their departure. The Egyptians (faith Epiphanius) did in after times imitate this colouring with Epiphan, lib is bloud, which the Ifraelites vsed after the Passeouer; ascribing an exceeding vertue cont. CHAP. 2. S.5.

Ow, when the people were remoued, and on their way, (his heart being hardened by God ) hee bethought him aswell of the honour loft, as of the shame remaining after so many calamities and plagues, in suffering them to depart with the spoiles of his pleople, and in despight of himselfe. And having before this time great companies of 40 Souldiers in readinesse, hee consulted with himselse, what way the Israelites were like to take. He knew that the shortest and fairest passage was through the Countrie of the Philistims. But because these people were very strong, and a warlike Nation, and in all probabilitie of his Allies, hee suspected that Moses meant to finde fome other outlet, to wit, through the Defert of Etham; and there, because the Countrie was exceeding mountainous, and of hard acceffe, and that Moses was pestered with multitudes of women, children, and cattaile, he thought it impossible for the Israelites to escape him that way. In the meane while having gathered together all the Chariots of £gypt, and 600. of his owne, and Captaines ouer them; he de- exod. 1427. termined to set vpon them in the plaines of Gosen, which way soeuer they turned 50 themselves. For it was the ancient manner to fight in those Chariots, armed with brode and sharpe hookes on both sides, in fashion like the Mowers Sythe. Which kinde of fight in Chariots, but not hooked, the Brittaines vsed against the Romanes, while they made the Warre for the Conquest of this Land. horse, and 20000. foot; which, were it true, then it cannot be doubted, but that Pharaoh intended long before to affaile the Hebrewesat their departure, or to destroy them in Gofen; and refused them passage, till such time as he had prepared an armie, to let on them. For, as it is written in the first of Exodus, hee doubted two things, either that the Hebrewes might joyne themselues to his enemies within the Land, or being so multiplied, as they were, might leave his service, and get themselves thence at their pleasure. But the plagues which God grieued him withall, enforst him at this time to give an affent to their departure: perchance fore-running his intent. But were it otherwise, and Iosephus partiall in this affaire, yet by the wordes of the Text it appeareth, that he gathered all the Chariots of Egypt: which could not be done in haft. For Moses made but three daies march, ere Pharaoh was at his heeles; and yet the last day he went on sixteene miles: which, in so hot a Countrie, and to drive their cattell and sheepe with them, pestered with a world of women and children. was a march witnessing the dread of a powerfull enemie at hand. Now, as Moles well knew, that he went out with a mightie hand, and that God guided his vnderstanding in all his enterprises : so he lay not still in the ditch crying for helpe, but vfing the vnderstanding which God had given him, he left nothing vnperformed, becomming a naturall wife man, a valiant and a skilfull conductor; as by all his actions and counfailes from this day to his death well appeared.

When Moses perceived that Pharaoh was enraged against him, and commanded 20 him not to dare to come thenceforth into his presence : after hee had warned Israel of the Paffeouer, he appointed a generall Affemblie or Rende-vous of all the Hebrewes The territorie at Ramases, in the Territoric of Gosen; a Citie standing indifferent to receive from of Golen was af- all others parts of the Countrie the dispersed Hebrewes: and gaue commandement, terward called that every familie should bring with them such store as they had, of Dow and Paste, the name of not staying to make it into bread: knowing then that Pharaoh was on foot, and on this Citie, as his way towards them. Which done, and having confidered the great strength of appeareth in Pharaohs Horse-men and Chariots, of which kinde of defence Moses was vtterly vnprouided (though as it is written, the Israelites went vp armed) hee marched from Ramafes Eastward, towards the Deserts of Etham, and incamped at Succoth; which 20 he performed on the fifteenth day of the Moneth Abib. Which Moneth from that time forward they were commanded to account, as the first Moneth of the yeare. Whether in former times they had been accultomed to beginne their yeare Exad. 23. v. 16. in some other Moneth, following the manner of the Egyptians, and were now recalled by Moses to the rule of their forefathers, it is vncertaine. Certaine it is, that they had, and retained, another beginning of their politike yeare, which was not now abrogated, but rather by some solemnities thereunto annexed was confirmed. and still continued in vse. Wherefore in referring things done, or happening among them, vnto the beginning, middest, or ending of the yeare; that distinction of the Sacred, and the Politike years is not to bee neglected. Concerning the number of 40 daies in enery Moneth, and the whole forme of their yeare, like enough it is that Moles himselfe in fourtie yeares space, did sufficiently instruct the Priests, to whose care the ordering thereof (as common opinion holds) was given in trust; but that any rule of framing their Kalendar, was made publike, before the captiuitie of Babylon, I doe not finde. Now because time and motion beginne together, it will not. I thinke, be any great breach of order, to shew here at their first setting forth, what was the forme of the Hebrew yeare: with the difference betweene them and other Nations, in ordering the accompt of time.

For God appointed especiall Feasts Dout.16. to be celebrated precifely in such a Moneth of the yeare, and withall on a set day, both of the Moone and of the Monerh; as the Feast of the first fruits; the new Moones, and the like: which could not have so beene kept; if either the day of the 30 Moone had fallen in some other part of the Moneth, or the Moneth it selfe beene found farre distant from his place in the season of the yeare.

Other Nations, the better to observe their solemnities in the due time; and to ascertaine all reckonings and remembrances, (which is the principall commoditie of time, that is the measure of endurance) were driven in like manner to make their yeares vnequall, by adding fometimes, and fometimes abating one or motedaies; as the errour committed in foregoing yeares required. The errour grew at first, by not knowing what number of daies made up a compleat yeare. For though by the continuall course of the Sunne, causing Sommer and Winter duly to succeede each other, it is plaine enough euen to the most sauage of all people, when a yeare hath 40 passed ouer them; yet the necessitie of ordinarie occurrences, that are to bee numbred by a shorter talie, makes this long measure of whole yeares insufficient for the smaller fort of more daily affaires. Therefore men observed the monethly conspicuous revolution of the Moone, by which they divided the yeare into twelve parts, Subdividing the Moneth into 29, daies and nights, and those againe into their quarters and houres. But as the markes, of time are sentible and easily discerned rso the exact calculation of it is very intricate, and worketh much perplexitie in the vnderstanding. Twelue renolutions of the Moone, containing lesse time by eleuen daies orthereabout, than the year clie course of the Sunne, through the Zodiack, in the space of sixteene yeares, euery Moneth was found in the quite contrarie part of the 30 yeare, to that wherein it was placed at the first. This caused them to adde some daies to the yeare, making it to confift of twelue Moneths, and as many daies more, as they thought would make the courses of the Sunne and Moone to agree. But herein were committed many new errours. For neither did the Sunne determine his yearelie renolution by any fet number of whole daies; neither did the Moone change alwaies at one houre; but the very minutes and leffer fractions were to bee observed by him, that would seeke to reduce their motions (which motions also were not still alike) into any certaine rule. Here lay much wifedome and deepe art, which could not soone be brought to perfection. Yeras making an estimate at randome, the Athenians held the yeare to containe 360. daies, wherein most of the Greekes concurred with them. That 360 daies filled up the Gracian yeare (befides many collaterall proofes) it is manifest by that which Plime directly affirmeth, telline of the Statues, erected in honour of Demetrius Phalereus, which were (faith he) 360. whilest as yet the yeare exceeded not that number of daies. By this account neither did any certain eage of the Moone beginne or end their Moneths, neither 10 could their Moneths continue many yeares, in their owne places that must needes be shifted by little and little, from Winter to Sommer, and from Sommer to Winter, as the daies forgotten, to be inferted into the Almanacke by men, but not forgotten by the superiour bodies in their courses, should occupie their owne roomes in their due turnes. Now, because the solemnitie of the Olympian games was to be held at the full Moone, and withall on the 15. day of the Moneth Hecatombeon (which answereth in a manner to our Iune) they were carefull to take order; that this moneth might ener beginne with the new Moone; which they effected by adding fometwo daies to the last moneth of every yeare; those games being held once infoure yeares. This intercalation sufficed not to make the matter euen; which 20 caused them sometimes to omit one day in the fourth yeare, which was the second of the moneth Badromian ; (agreeing nearely withour August ) fometimes not to omit it, or (which is all one) to infert another for it into the fourth Lunarie yeare, accounting by the Moone; after a manner that was not vulgar. All this notwithstanding, their moneth of Iune would every yeare have growne colder and colder, had they not fought to keepe all vpright, by intercalating in each other Olympiad, that is, each eighth yeare one whole moneth, which they called the second Posideon, or December; which was the deuice of Harpalus, who also taught them to make one moneth of 29 daies, another of 30 and so successively through the whole yeare. Thus with much labour they kept their yeare as neare as they could, vnto the high 30 way of the Planets; but these markes which they observed, were found at length to be deceiptfull guides. For it was not possible so to fashion this eighth yeares intercalation, that it should not deceive them in 11. hours and 18. minutes at the least, or some waies in 24. houres and 10. minutes, or 36. and 41. minutes; which differences would, in few ages, haue bred much confusion. The first that introduced a good methode, likely to continue, was Meton the Athenian, who not regarding the Olympiads, and the eighth yeares intercalation, deuised a Cycle of 19. yeares, wherein the Moone having 235, times runne her circuit, met with the Sunne in the same place, and on the same day of the yeare, as in the 19. yeare before past shee had done. This invention of Meton was entertained with great applause, and paffing 40 from Greece to Rome, was there inferted into the Kalendar in golden letters, being called the golden number, which name it retaineth vnto this day. Hereby were auoided the great and vncertaine intercalations that formerly had beene vied; for by the intercalation of 7. moneths in the 19. yeares, all was fo euen, that no fenfible difference could be found. Yet that errour which in one yeare could not be perceiued, was very apparent in a few of those Cycles; the new Moones anticipating in one Cycle 7. houres, and some minutes of the precise rule. Therefore Calippus denised a new Cycle containing foure of Metons, that is to fay, 76. yeares, and afterwards Hipparchus, a noble Astrologer, framed another, containing foure of Calippus his Periods, each of them finding some errour in the former observations, which they diligently 50 corrected. The last reformation of the Kalendar was that which Iulius Casar made, who by aduise of the best Mathematicians, then to be found, examining the courses of those heauenlie bodies, reduced the yeare vnto the forme which is now in vse with vs, containing 365. daies and fixe houres, which houres in foure yeares make vp one whole day, that is intercalated enery fourth yeare, the 24. of Februarie. The correction of the Iulian yeare by Pope Gregorie the 13. Anno Domin. 1582. is not as yet entertained by generall confent; it was indeede, but as a note added vnto the worke of Cafar : yet a note of great importance. For whereas it was observed, that the Sunne, which at the time of the Nicene Councell, Anno Dom. 324 entred the Æquinoctiallon the 21. day of March, was in the yeare 1582, ten daies sooner found in that time, Pope Gregorie strooke out of the Kalendar ten daies, following the fourth of October, so that in steade of the fifth day was written the fifteenth; by which meanes the moueable Feafts depending on the Sunnes entrance into Aries, were a-To gaine celebrated in fuch time, as at the Nicene Councell they had beene. And the better to preuent the like alterations, it was by the Councell of Trent ordained, that from thence forward in enery hundreth yeare, the leape day should be omitted, excepting still the fourth hundred : because the Sunne doth not in his yearelie course take up full fixe houres aboue the 365. daies; but faileth fo many minutes; as in 400. yeares make about 3. whole daies.

But the Cycle of 19. yearcs, which the Hebrewes vsed, was such as neither did neede any nice curiolitie of houres, minutes, and other leffer fractions to helpe it; neither did in summing wo the daies of the whole yeare, neglect the daies of the Moone, confounding one Moneth with another. For with them it fellout fo, that 20 alwaies the Kalends or first day of the moneth was at the new Moone, and because that day was festivall, they were very carefull aswell to observe the short yeare of the Moone, paffing through all the 12. fignes in one moneth, as that longer of the Sunne, which is needfully regarded in greater accounts. First, therefore they gaue to Nilan their first moneth, which is about our March or Aprill, 30. daies; to Iar their second moneth 29. daies; and so successively 30. to one, 29. to another. Hereby it came to passe, that every two moneths of theirs contained somewhat euenly two revolutions of the Moone, allowing 29. daies, 12. hours, and odde minutes, from change to change. The spare minutes were bestowed among the superfluous or Epact daies, which made up 7. moneths in 19. yeares, to 6. of which 7. 20 were commonly given 30 daies; to one of them 20 daies, or otherwise as was found requifite. Their common yeare (as appeareth by the seuerall daies of each moneth) contained 354. daies, which faile of the yeare, wherein the Sunne finisheth his course, 11. whole daies, with some fractions of time. But these daies, and other broken peeces, howfoeuer they were neglected in one yeare, yet in the Cycle of 10. yeares were so disposed of by convenient intercalations, that still at the end of that Cycle, both the Sunne and Moone were found on the same day of the yeare; moneth and weeke, yea commonly on the same houre of the day, where they had beene at the beginning of it 19. yeares before. Divers have diverfly fet downe the forme of the Hebrew yeare, with the man-40 ner of their intercalations. Sigonius tells vs, that every second yeare they did adde Sig dere, Matri a moneth of 22. daies; enery fourth yeare a moneth of 23. in the regard of 11. 13.6.1. daies and a halfe wanting in 12. Moones to fulfill a yeare of the Sunne. But herein Sigonius was very much deceiued. For the Moone doth neuer finish her course in 22. or 23. daies: and therefore to have added fo many daies to the end of the years. had been the way to change the fashion of all the moneths in the yeares following, which could not have begunne as they ought, with the new Moone. Genebrard faith, Goneb, chan, that enery third years, or lecond years, as neede required, they did intercalate one 4.2. moneth, adding it at the yeares end vnto the other 12. This I believe to have been true; but in which of the yeares the intercalation was ( if it be worthy of confide-50 ration) me thinks they do not probably deliuer, who keepe all farre from euenneffe untill the very last of the 19. yeares. For (to omit such as erregrosly) some there are who fay, that after three yeares, when belides the daies spent in 36. courses of the Moone, 33. daies are left remaining, that is, 11. daies of each yeare; then did

vnto the next account. The like, fay they, was done at the end of the fixt yeare; at which time, besides the intercalarie moneth, remained fixe daies, namely three surmounting that moneth, and the Epact of three yeares, belides the three formerly reserved. Thus they goe on to the 18. yeare; at which time they have 18. daies in hand: all which with the Epact of the 19. yeare make vp a moneth of 29. daies, that being intercalated at the end of the Cycle makes all euen.

Whether this were the practife, I can neither affirme nor denie; yet furely it must needes haue bred a great confusion, if in the 18. yeare euery moneth were remoued from his owne place by the distance of 48. daies, that is, halfe a quarter of the yeare and more; which inconvenience by fuch a reckoning was vnauoidable. Wherefore, 10 I preferre the common opinion, which preuenteth fuch diflocation of the moneths. by fetting downe a more conuenient way of intercalation in the 8. yeare. For the 6. daies remaining after the 2. former intercalations made in the 3d and 6th yeares, added vnto the 22. daies, arifing out of the Epacts of the 7th and 8th yeares, doe fitly serue to make vpa moneth, with the borrowing of one day or two from the yeare following; and this borrowing of two daics is fo farre from causing any disorder, that indeede it helps to make the yeares enfuing varie the leffe from the proper seafon of euery moneth. This may fuffice to bee spoken of the Hebrew Moneths and Yeares, by which they guided their accompts.

d. VII.

Of the passage of Israel from Succeth towards the Red Sea: and of the divers waies leading out of Agypt.

Rom Succeth in the morning following, Moses led the Israelites towards the Desert of Etham, to recour the mountaine foot, by the edge of that Wilderneffe, though he intended nothing leffe then to goe out that way, of all other the nearest. But being affured of the multitude of Horsemen and armed Chariots, that followed him, he kept himselfe 30 from being incompassed, by keeping the rough and mountainous ground on his left hand. At Etham he rested but one night, and then he rested backe from the entrance thereof, and marched away directly towards the South; the distance betweene it and Succoth being about eight mile. That he forbare to enter Arabia being then in fight thereof, it feemeth to proceede from three respects; the first two naturall; the third divine. For Pharaoh being then at hand, and having received intelligence of the way which Moles tooke, perswaded himselfe, that the numbers which Moses led, consisting of aboue a Million, if not two millions of soules, (for as It is probable it is written Exed. the 12. Great multitudes of fundrie forts of people went out with them) that all those could not possibly passe over those defert and high mountaines with so great multiathers brought tudes of Women, Children, and Cattell, but that at the very entrance of that fastby the Hebrews neffe he should have ouer-taken them, and destroied the greatest numbers of them. to the know- For these his owne wordes. They are tangled in the Land, the Wildernesse hath shut them God, followed in, doe shew his hopes and intents; which Moses by turning another way did fru-Moles at his de- strate. Secondly, Moles by offering to enter Arabia that way, drew Pharaoh towards the East fide of the land of Gofen, or Ramefes: from whence (miffing Mofes there) his pursuit after him with his Chariots was more difficult, by reason of the roughnesse of the way; and howsoeuer, yet while the Hebrewes kept the mountaine foot on the left hand, they were better fecured from the ouer-hearing violence both of the horse and chariots. Thirdly, Moses confidence in the all-powerfull God was 50 fuch, by whose spirit, only wise, he was directed, as he rather made choice to leave the glorie of his deliuerance and yistorie to almightie God, than either by an escape the next way, or by the strength of his multitude, consisting of 600000. men, to cast the successe vpon his owne vnderstanding, wife conduction, or valour. The third day he marched with a double pace from Etham towards the Valley of Pihacheroth, 16. mile distant; and fate downe betweenetwo ledges of mountaines adioyning to the Red Sea; to wit, the mountaines of Etham on the North, and Balzephon towards the South : the same which Oferius calleth Climax : on the top whereof there stood a Climax is rather Temple dedicated to Baal. And, as Phagius noteth, the word so compounded, is as so called in remuch to fay, as Dominus specule, sine custodie, Lord of the watch tower. For the Agyp- fact of a pattians believed, or at least made their stance below that items of them of them of the past items of them of them. tians beleeued, or at least made their flaues beleeue, that if any of them offered toe-downe, than scape that way into Arabia, this Idoll would both arrest them, and force them to that it is any returne to their Lords and Masters. For the Agyptians had Gods for all turnes. Proper name, 10 Ægyptij Dijs fæcundi; The Ægyptians were fruitfull in Gods, saith St. Hierome. But Moses who incamped at the foot of this mountaine with a million of soules, or as other conceine, with two millions, found this Lord of the watch-tower afleepe, or out of countenance.

Now these two passages leading out of Agypt into Arabia vpon the firme land Moles refused, as well that of Pelusium and Caliotis, the fairest and shortest of all other, in respect of Iudaa, as the other by Etham; from which he reslected, for the Exed. 13, 12.19. reasons before remembred, and tooke the way by the valley of Pihacheroth, between the mountaines, which made a straight entrance towards the Sea. After whom Pharaoh made so great speede with his horsemen and chariots, as hee gaue the He-20 brewes no time at all to rest them after so long a march; but gat sight of them, and they of him, even at the very brincke and wash of the Sea: insomuch as the Hebrewes being terrified with Pharaohs sudden approch beganne to despaire, and to mutine, at that time when it behoued them most to have taken courage for their owne defence; laying it to Moses charge, that themselves foresaw those perils in which they were wrapped. And feare, which, faith the booke of Wifedome, is the be- c.17. 11. traying of those succours which reason offereth, made them both despaire in Gods for-

Of their passage oner the Red Sea : and of the Red Sea it selfe.

Vt Moses who seared nothing but God himselfe, perswaded them to be confident in his goodnesse, who hath never abandoned those, that assured the tribing of the confortable and resolved, speech, Fewernet, See. for the Egyptians whom yee have seene this day, yee shall exad 14. v.13, never see them again. fes calling on God for fuccour, received encouragement, and commandement to goe on, in these wordes. Wherefore stiest thou anto me: speake anto the children of 1st Exad. 14. 2.16. 40 rael that they goe forward; and lift thou up thyrod, and firetch out thy hand woon the Sea, and divide it, and let the children of Ifrael goe on drie ground through the middleft of the Sea. Moles obeying the voice of God, in the darke of the night finding the fands vncouered, past on towards the other side and coast of Arabia: two purts of the night being spent ere hee entred the Foord, which it pleased God by a forcible

Easterne winde, and by Moses rod to prepare. . Pharaoh followed him eyen at the heeles, finding the fame drie ground which Mofes trod on. Therefore ast is written, The Angel of God which went before the Host of Israel, removed, and went behinde them: also the piller of the cloud went from before them, and foodbehind them; which is, that it pleased God therein either by his im-50 mediate power, or by the ministerie of his Angell, to interpose his desence between the Hebrewes and their enemies; to the end that the Agyptians might hereby bee 10/1014.07. blinded, in such fort, as they could not pursue ifrael with any harmefull speede. But in the morning watch Moses seised the other banke of Arahia side: and Pharaeh (as the dawne of day beganne to illighten the obscureaire) finding a beginning of the Exed, 14, v.37. Seas returne, hasted himselfe towards his owne coast: but Moses stretched forth bis hand, and the Sea returned to his force, that is; the Sea moued by the power of God, ranne backe towards the land with unrestitable furie and swiftnesse, and ouerwhelmed the whole Armie of Pharabh, so as not one setaped. For it is written, that God tooke off their Chariot wheeles, that is; when the waters began to couer the sands, the Legyptians being strucken with seare of death, ranne one athwart another, and missing the path by which they had passon after the Hebrewer, their wheeles strucke salt in the mudde and quick-lands, and could not be drawne out: the Sea comming against them with supernaturall violence.

Lyranus vpon Exèd. 14. and others, following the opinions or old Traditions of 10 the Hebrewes, conceiued, that after Moses had by the power of God divided the Red Sea, and that the children of Israel were fearfull to enter it, Miniadab Prince or Leader of the Tribe of Inda first made the adventure, and that therefore was that Tribe ever after honoured about the rest, according to the prophecie of Iacob, Gen. 49.8. The fathers somes shall bow home unto thee. But Hierome vpon the 11. of Hosee condemnes this opinion. And though it be true, that Inda had the first place in all their marches in the Desert, and, as we now call it, led the Vanguard; (whereyon it may bee inferred, that he also led the way through the Red Sea) yet that Moses himselfe was the conducter of Israel at that time, it is generally received. For, as it is written in the 77. Plalme; Thou didstead thy people like speep by the hand of 20

The Hebrewes haue also another fancie, that the Red Sea was divided into 12. parts, and that euery Tribe path ouer in a path apart, because it is written in the 13. Fishme, according to the Yulgar, Divisit maverubrum in divisiones; thee divided the Red Sea in divisions. Also that the bottome of the Sea became as a greene field or parture. But Origen, Epiphanius, Abulensis, and Genebrard, fauouring this conceit, had forgotten to consider, that there were not 12. pillers, nor 12. armies of the Agyptians. It is written in the 77. Flalme, v. 16. Thy was in the Sea, not thy maies; and in the last of the booke of Wifedome, vers. 7. In the Red Seather was a way.

Now this Sea, through which Molespalt, and in which Pharach, otherwise cal- 30 led Chenchres, perished in the 16. yeare of his raigne, is commonly knowne by the name of the Red Sea; though the same differ nothing at all in naturall colour from other waters. But as Philostratus in his third booke noteth, and our selues know by experience, it is of a blewish colour, as other Seas are. It entreth at a narrow strait betweene Arabia the Happic and Ethiopia, or the land of the Abylins : the mouth of the indraught from the Cape, which Ptolomie calleth Possodium, to the other land of Athiapia, hath not about fixe leagues in breadth: and the same also filled every where with ilands, but afterwards it extendeth it selfe 58. leagues from coast to coast: and it runneth vp betweene Arabia the Happie, and Arabia Petraa, on one side, and Athiopia and Agypt on the other, as farre as Sues, the vttermost end and in- 40 draught of that Sea: where the Turke now keepeth his fleete of Gallies. The Cofmographers commonly give it the name of the Arabian Gulfe: but the North part towards Sues, and where Moles path, is called Heropolites of the Citic Hero, formetime Troy and of later times Sues. Plinie calls it Cambifu, by which name it was knowne, faith he, before it was called Hero many yeares. The Arabians call this Sea towards the North, Apocopa, Eccant, and Eant. Artemidorus writes it Aleniticum: King Iuba Leniticum: others more properly Elaniticum, of the Port and Citie Elana: which the Septuagint call Elath: Ptolomie Elana: Plinie Lana: Iofephus Ilana, and Marius Niger Aila: there is alfo Ilalah in Affyria, to which Salamanaffer carried the Ifraelites captive Kings 2. c. 8. 11. which Ilalah in Affyria, the Septuagint call Elas and in the first of 50 Chron. the 5. Ala. But as for this red Sea or the parts thereof, thus diverfly named, the Moores and Arabians (Vaffals to the Turke) know it by no other appellation, then the Gulfe of Meca, after the name of Mahomets Towne Mecca. The Greekes write it the Sea Erythraum . of a King called Erythras, or Erythraus : and because Erythres in the Greeke fignifieth red, hence it is, that, being denominated of this Erythreus, the sonne of Perseus and Andromeda, yet it tooke the name of the red Sea, as Quin. Curtius coniectureth: which Arianus and Strabo confirme. But it seemeth to Arian, de get, me by the view of a discoucrie of that Sea in the yeare 1544, performed by Steuen Alex.mag. 18. Gama, Viceroy of the East India for the King of Portugall, that this Sea was so called Strabol. 6. from a reflection of rednesse, both from the bancks, clifts, and fands of many Ilands, and part of the Continent bordering it. For I finde by the report of Caltro, a principall commander vnder Gama (which discourse I gaue Mr. Richard Haclast to publish) that there is an Iland called Dalaqua, formetime Leques, containing in length 25. to leagues, and 12 in breadth, the earth, fands, and clifts, of which Iland, being of a reddilla colour, serue for a foile to the waters about it : and make it seeme altogether of the same colour. Secondly, the same Castro reporteth, that from 24. degrees of Septentrionall latitude, to 27 (which make in length of coast 180. mile, lying as it doth Northerly and Southerly) all the clifts and banks are of red earth, or stone, which by reflection of the Sunne beames, give a kinde of reddiff lufter to the waters. Thirdly, those Portugals report, and weeknow it by many testimonies, that there are found in the bottome of this Sea towards the shore; great abundance of red stones, on which the greatest store of Corrall growes, which is carried into most parts of Europe, and elsewhere. There are also on the Ilands of this Sea many red 20 trees, faith Strabo, and those growing under water, may also be a cause of such a colour. Of these appearances of rednesse by the shadowes of these stones, sands, earth, and clifts, I suppose that it first tooke the name of the red Sea, because in so many places it feemeth to be fuch: which Iohannes Barros in his fecond Decade, eight Booke and first Chapter, confirmeth.

The breadth of this Sea from Blana, or Ezion Gaber adioyning, now Tore, called by the ancient Cosmographers Sinus Elaniticus, which washeth the banks of Madian or Midian, is for 16. or 17. leagues together, along Northward towardes Sues. fome three leagues or nine English mile ouer, and from this Port of Toro, to Sues, and the end of this Sea it is in length about 28. leagues, of which the first 26. haue 30 nine miles breadth as aforefaid, and afterward the lands both from Agypt and Arabia, thrust themselves into the Sea, and straighten it so fast, as for sixe miles together it is not about three mile over; from thence vpward the land on Egypt fide. falleth away and makes a kinde of Bay or Cone for some ten miles together, after which the land growes vpon the Sea againe, and so binds it into the very end thereof, at foure miles breadth or thereabout, in which tract it was that Moles past it ouer, though others would have it to be over against Elana or Toro; but without judgement: for from Ramafes to Pihacheroth and Balzephon, there is not aboue 30. miles interjacent, or 35. miles at most, which Moles past ouer in three daies: and betweene the land of Egypt opposite to Elana or Toro, the distance is about 80. 40 miles. For Ramases to which Citie Moses came (being the Metropolis of Gosen)

when he left Pharao at Zoan, and tooke his last leave, standeth in 30. degrees five minutes of Septentrionall Latitude: and Migdoll, or the Valley of Pihacheroth, at the foote of the mountaine Climan, or Baalfephon, in nine and twentie and a halfe. which made a difference of flue and thirtie English mile: the way lying in effect North and South.

That the passage through the red Sea was miraculous, and not at a low Ebbe.

He Ægyptians, and of them the Memphites, and other Heathen Writers, who in hatred of the Hebrewes have objected that Moles past ouer the red Sea at a low ebbe, vpon a great spring-tide, and that Pharao conducted more by furie then discretion, pursued him so far, as before he could recouer the coast of Egypt, he was ouertaken by the floud 10 and therein perished, did not well consider the nature of this place with other circumstances. For not to borrow strength from that part of the Scriptures, which makes it plaine, that the waters were divided, and that God wrought this miracle by an Easterly winde, and by the hand and rod of Moses (which authoritie to men that beleeue not therein perswadeth nothing) I say that by the same naturall reason vnto which they fasten themselues, it is made manifest, that had there beene no other working power from aboue or affiftance given from God himfelfe to Moles, and the children of Ifrael than ordinarie and casuall, then could not Pharao and all his armie haue perished in that pursuite.

For wheresoeuer there is any ebbing of the Sea in any gulfe, or indraught, there 20 doe, the waters fall away from the land : and runne downeward towards the Ocean : leaning all that part towards the land as farre as the Sea can ebbe, or fall off, to bee drie land. Now Moses entring the Sea at Migdoll vnder Balzephon (if hee had taken the advantage and opportunitie of the tyde) must have left all that end of the Red Seatowards Sues, on his left hand drie and vncouered. For if a passage were made by falling away of the water, teh or twelve mile farther into the Sea then Sues, much more was it made at Sues, and betweene it and where Moses past: who entred the same so farre below it, and towards the body of the same Sea. It followeth then, that if all that part of the Sleene or Strait, had beene by the ebbe of a spring-tide discouered, when Pharae found the floud increasing, he needed not to haue returned 30 by the same way toward Agypt side, but might have gone on in his returne before the tide, on his right hand: and so taken ground agains at the end of that sea, at Sues it selfe, or elsewhere. But the Scriptures doe truly witnesse the contrarie, that is, That the fea did not fall away from the land, as naturally it doth; but that Moles past on betweene two seas: and that the waters were divided. Otherwise, Pharao by any returne of waters could not have perished, as he did: and therefore the effects of that great Armies destruction, proue the cause to have beene a power about nature, and the miraculous worke of God himfelfe. Againe, those words of the Scriptures, that God caused the Sea to runne backe by a sirong east-winde, doerather prove the miracle, than that thereby was caused an ebbe more then ordinarie: for that sea 40 doth not lie East and West, but, in effect, North and South. And it must have been a West and North-west winde, that must have driven those waters away through their proper channels, and to the South-east into the Sea. But the East-winde blew athwart the sea, and cut it asunder: so as one part fell backe towards the South, and maine body thereof: the other part remained towards Sues, and the North. Which being vnknowne to Pharao; while he was checkt by that sea, which ysed in all times before to cbbe away: the floud prest him and ouerwhelmed him. Thirdly, seeing Infephus anoweth, that Moses was not only of excellent judgement generally, but alfo fo great a Captaine, as he ouerthrew the Athiopians in many battels, being imploied by Pharao, and wan divers Cities feeming impregnable: it were barbarous to 50 condemne him of this groffeneffe, and distraction: that rather then he would have endured the hardneffe of a mountainous paffage at hand, (had not God commanded him to take that way, and foretold him of the honour which hee would there winne vpon Pharao) he would have trusted to the advantage of an ebbing water.

For hee knew not the contrarie, but that Pharao might have found him, and prest him, as well when it flowed as when it ebbed, as it feemeth he did. For the people, beholding Pharaes approch, cried out against Moses, and despaired altogether of their fafetie : and when Moles praied vnto God for helpe, he was answered by God : Wherefore crieft thou unto me : speake unto the children of Ifrael that they goe forward, and lift thou up thy rod, and firetch out thy hand upon the Sea, and divide it : which proves that there was not at the time of Pharaos approch any ebbe at all; but that God did disperse and cut through the weight of waters, by a strong East-winde, whereby the fands discouered themselues betweene the sea on the left hand toward Sues, from whence the waters moued not, and the sea which was towards the South on the right hand, fo that the waters were a wall unto them on the right hand, and on the C.14. 0.22. left hand, that is, the waters fo defended them on both fides, as the Agyptians could only follow them in the same path; not that the waters stood vpright as walls doe. as some of the Schoolemen have fancied. For had Pharaoh and the Agyptians perceiued any fuch buildings in the fea, they would foone have quitted the chace and purfuit of Israel. Furthermore, there is no man of judgement, that can thinke, that Pharash and the Agyptians, who then excelled all Nations in the observations of heauenly motions, could be ignorant of the fluxes, and refluxes of the sea, in his owne Countrie, on his owne coast, and in his owne most traded and frequented 20 Ports and Hauens, and wherein, his people hauing had so many hundreds of yeares experience of the tides, he could not be caught, as he was, through ignorance, nor by any foreknowne or naturall accident, but by Gods powerfull hand only; which then falleth most heavily on all men, when looking through no other spectacle but their owne prosperitie, they least discerne it comming, and least feare it. Lastly, if the Armie of the Egyptians had beene ouertaken by the ordinarie returne of the floud, before they could recouer their owne coast; their bodies drowned would haue beene carried with the floud which runneth vp to Sues, and to the end of that fea, and not have beene cast alhore on that coast of Arabia where Moles landed, to wit, vpon the sea-banke ouer against Baalzephon, on Arabia side: where it was that 30 the Ifraelites faw their dead bodies; and not at the end of the Red Sea, to which place the ordinarie floud would have carried them : Which floud doth not any where crosse the Channell, and runne athwart it, as it must have done from Egypt side to Arabia, to have cast the Egyptians bodies there; but it keepes the natural course towards the end of that sea: and to which their carcases should have been carried. if the worke had not beene supernaturall and miraculous. Apollonius in the lives of the Fathers affirmeth, that those of the Egyptians which staied in the Countrie, and did not follow Pharaoh in the pursuit of Israel, did euer after honour those Beasts. Birds, Plants, or other Creatures, about which they were busied at the time of Pharaohs destruction: as he that was then labouring in his garden made a God of that Plant or Roote, about which he was occupied: and so of the rest. But how those multitudes of Gods were erected among them, a more probable reason shall be giuen elsewhere. Orosius in his first Booke and tenth Chapter against the Pagans tells vs, that in his time, who lived some 400. yeares after Christ, the prints of Pharaohs Chariot wheeles were to be seene at a low water on the Agyptian fands: and though they were sometime defaced by winde and weather, yet foone after they appeared againe. But hereof I leave every man to his owne

He fled into Midian when he had lived 40. yeeres, in the yeere of the world 2474. and two yeeres after was Caleb borne. He returned by the commandement and ordinance of God into Agypt, and wrought his miracles in the fields of Zoan, in the yeere 2514. in the last moneth of that yeere. On the 14. day of the first

Hebrew moneth Abib, or the 15. of that moneth, beginning the day (as they) at Sunne setting, in the yeere of the world 2514. was the celebration of the Palleouer: and in the dead of the night of the same day were all the sirst-borne slaine through 30 Ægypt, or in all those parts where the Hebrewes inhabited. The 15. day of the first moneth, of the Hebrewes called Abib, being about the beginning of the yeere of the world 2514. Moses with the children of Israel removed from the generallas-fembly at Ramafes, and marched to Succoth. And departing thence they made their third Station at Etham: and journying from

Etham they incamped in the valley of Pihacheroth, or Migdoll, under the mountaine Baalzephon; and in the same night after mid-night, they past the Red Sea : Pharaoh and his Armie perishing in their returne, about the first dawne of the day. Moses hauing recourred the banks of Arabia, gaue thanks vnto God, for the deliuerie of Ifrael; and making no stay on that coast, entred the Descrits of Arabia Petraa, called 40 Sur. But finding no water in that paffage, he incamped at Marah, in the Desert of Etham, which in Exod. 15.2.22. is also called Sur, 25. miles from the Sea: where the children of Ifrael prest with extreme thirst, murmured against Moses the second time; first at Pharaohs approach in Pihacheroth, and now in Arabia. But Mosestaking the branches of a tree, growing necre a lake of bitter water, and cashing the same thereinto, made the same sweet: a plaine Type and figure of our Sauiour; who vpon the tree of the Croffe changed the bitterneffe of euerlasting death into the sweetnesse of cternall life. Plinie remembers these bitter fountaines in his sixth Booke and 29. Chapter. From whence to Delta in Agypt, Sefostris first, Darius after him, and laftly Ptolomie the second, beganne to cut an artificiall River, thereby by Boats and 50 fmall shipping to trade and nauigate the Red Sea, from the great Cities vpon Wilus. From Marah he remoued to Elim, the fixth Mansion, a march of eight miles: where finding twelue fountaines of fweet water, and 70. Palme trees, hee rested divers

Whether

Whether this Helim were the name of a Towne or Citie in Moles time, I cannot affirme. And yet the scarcitie of waters in that Region was such, as Helim, which had twelue Fountaines, could hardly bee left unpeopled. William, Arch-Bishop of Tyre, in his Historie of the Holie Warre, found at Helim the ruines of a great and ancient Citie. And at fuch time as Baldwine the first past that way into Agypt, Ingressus (laith he) Helim, Ciuitatem antiquissimam populo Israelitico aliquando will tyr. Lite familiarem; ad quam cum peruenisset, loci illius incola, Regis aduentu precognito, naui- cap.19. culamingredientes in mare vicinum (c contulerunt; Entring Helim a very ancient Citie); well knowne sometime to the people of Israel; whither, when he came, the whabitants, fore-10 warned of the Kings approch, tooke Boate, and Shisted themselves into the Sea, lying neare them. From Elim hee returned againe towards the South, and fate downe by the banks of the Red Sea: the feuenth Mansion. For it seemeth that he had knowledge of Amalech, who prepared to restit his passage through that part of Arabia. And Moles who had not as yet trained those of the Hebrewes, appointed to beare armes: nor affured the minds of the rest, who encountring with the least miserie, were more apt to returne to their quiet flauerie, than either to endure the wants and perils which every where accompanied them in that paffage, or at this time to vidertake or fustaine so dangerous an enemie : hee therefore made stay at this Mansion, vntill the fifteenth of the second Moneth called Zim, or Iiar : and made the eight Exed. 16. 20 Mansion in the Desert of Zin; where the children of Israel mutinied against Mo-

fes the third time, having want of foode. In the fixteenth Chapter of Exedus, Moses omitteth this retrait from Elim to the red Sea, but in the collection of every feuerall incamping, in the 23. of Numbers, it is fet downe.

Here it pleased God to send so many flights of Quailes, as all the Countrie about their incamping was couered with them. The morning following it also rained Manna, being the fixteenth of their Moneth, which ferued them in stead of bread, Exed, 16: For now was the store consumed which the people carried with them out of Agypt. And though they had great numbers of Cattle, and Sheepe among them, yet it seemeth that they durst not feede themselves with many of those: but reser-

30 ued them both for the milke to relecue the children withall; and for breede to ftore themselues when they came to the land promised.

From hence towards Raphidim they made two remoues of twentie mile; the one to Daphea, the other to Alm, distant from Raphidim fixe miles. Here being againe prest with want of water they murmured the fourth time, and repented them of their departure from Agypt, where they rather contented themselves to bee fed and beaten after the manner of beafts, than to fuffer a cafuall and sometime neces-farie want, and to vidergoe the hazzards and trauailes which every manly minde feeketh after, for the loue of God and their owne freedomes. But Moles with the same rod which hee divided the Sea withall, in the fight of the Elders of Ifrael, brought waters out of the Rocke, wherewith the whole multitude were fatis-

Of the Amalekites, Madianites, and Kenites, upon accasion of the battell with the Amalekites, and I ET HROES comming : who being a Kenite, was Priest of Madian.

Nd while Moses incamped in this place, the Amalekites who had knowledge of his approch, and gheffed that he meant to leade the children of Israel through their Countrie (which being barren of it selfe, would bee veterly wasted by so great a multitude of People and Cattle) thought it most for their advantage to set vpon them at 10

Raphidim: where the want of water, and all other things needfull for the life of man infeebled them. On the other fide Moses perceiuing their resolutions, gaue charge to Iolua, to draw out a sufficient number of the abiest Hebrewes, to incounter Amalech. Betweene whom and Israel, the victorie remained doubtfull, for the most part of the day: the Hebrewes and Amalekites contending with equal hopes and repulses for many houres. And had not the strength of Moses praiers to God beene of farregreater force, and more prevalent, than all refiffance and attempt made by the bodies of men; that valiant and warlike Nation had greatly indangered the whole enterprise. For those bodies which are vnacquainted with scarcitie of foode, and those minds whom a seruile education hath dulled, being beaten, and despaired 20 in their first attempts, will hardly, or neuer be brought againe to hazard themselues.

After this victorie lethro repaired to Moses, bringing with him Moses his wife, and his two Sonnes, which either lethro forbare to conduct, or Moles to receive, till he had by this ouerthrow of Amalech the better affured himselfe of that part of Arabia. For it is written in the 18. of Exodus, v. 1. When I ET HAO the Priest of Midian. Moses Father in law, heardall that God had done for Moses, &c. of which, the last deede, to wit, the overthrow of Amalech, gave lethre courage and affurance. he then repaired to his sonne in law Mases , at Sinai; where amongst other things. he aduised Moses to appoint Indges, and other Officers, ouer Israel; being himselfe vnable to giue order in all causes and controuersies, among so many thousands of 30 people, full ofdiscontentment and private controversie.

This Iethro, although he dwelt amongst the Midianites, yet he was by Nation a Kenite, as in the fourth of Iudges v. 11. & 17. it is made manifest; where it is written. Now HEBER the Kenite, which was of the children of HOBAB, to wit, the sonne of IETHRO, the father in law of Moses, was departed from the Kenites, and pitched his Tents untill the Plaine of Zasnaim, which is by Kedesh. Likewise in the first of Samuel, Saul commanded the Kenites to depart from among the Amalekites, least hee should destroy them with the Amalekites. For the Kenites inhabited the mountaines of Sin Kadelh: and the Amalekites dwelt in the Plaines, according to the faving of Mum. 24. v. 21! Balaam, speaking of the Kenites. Strong is thy dwelling place, and thou hast put thy nest 40 in the Rocke. And that Saul spared this Nation, he giveth for cause, that they shewed mercie to all the children of Israel, when they came vp from Egypt. For these Kenites were a Nation of the Madianites, and the Madianites were of the issues of Madian, one of the fixe fonnes which Abraham begat on Kethura: and might also take that name of Kenites from Kethura, of whom they descended by the Mother, who as it seemeth kept the knowledge of the true God among them, which they receiued from their parent Abraham. For Moses, when he fled out of Agyptinto Midian, and married the daughter of Iethro, would not (had hee found them Idolaters) haue made Jethroes Daughter the Mother of his children. And although the Kenites are named amongst those Nations, which God promised, that the seede 50 of Abraham should roote out, and inherite their lands; yet it cannot bee meant by these; who are descended from Abraham himselse: but by some other Nation, bearing the same name; and in all likelihood of the race of Chus. For in the fifteenth of Genef. verf. nineteenth these Kenites or Chusites are listed with the Hittites and Perizites, with the Amorites, Canaanites, Gergelites, and iebulites, which were indeede afterwards rooted out. But these Kenites, descended from A- Gen. 15. braham, had separated themselves from among the rest, which were altogether idolatrous. For, as is before remembred, Heber the Kenite, which was of the children Judges. of Hobab, was departed from the Kenges, that is to fay, from those Kenites of Canaan, and inhabited in Zaanaim, which is by Keneth or Kazells. Againe, Moles nameth that Nation of the Kenites, before Midian, Orany of Abrahams other sonnes were borne: which he did (referring my selfe to better judgement) rather, because they were more ancient, than by anticipation. and yelv.....

And as of the Kenites, fo we may confiden of the Madianites, parted by Moles in- Gen. 25.45 to fine Tribes. For some of them were corrupted, and Heathers; as those of Madian by the River Zared, afterwards doftroied by Mofes. But the Madianites neare the bankes of the Redises, where Wofes married his wife Zipora, and with whom he left her and his children, till after the ouerthrow of Amalech, seeme likewise not to haue beene corrupted. For these Madianites with the Kenites affilted Ifrael, and guided them in the Deferts. But the Madianites in Moab, and to the North of the Metropolis of Arabia, called Petraa, were by I/rael rooted out, when those adiovning to the Rea Sea were not touched.

And though it may be doubted, whether those of Madian, of whom lethrowas 20 Priest, and the other Cities in Moab were the same, yet the contrarie is more probable. For Mofes would not have fent 12000. Ifraelites, as farre backe as the Red Sea, from the Plaines of Moab, to have destroied that Madian, where his wives kindred inhabited: feeing himfelfe comming with 600000. able men, was encountred by Amalech, in that paffage. Neither could Moses forget the length of the way through those discomfortable Deserts, wherein himselfe and israel had wandered

Of the time when the Law was given; with divers commendations of the inuention of Lawes.

He rest of the moneths of this yeare 2515, were spent in the Defert of Sina, neare the mountaine of Sinai or Horeb, the twelfth Mansion.

Eulebius thought that Sinai or Horeb were diffined mountaines: Here rome, to be but one, of a double name. And so it appeareth by many Scriptures. For in Exad.3.v.1. it is called Horeb: and in Exad.4.v.16 it is written Sinai. In the 100. Pfalme v. 19. Horeb : in Exod. 19.11. Sinai. And fo it is called Galatians 4. 24. and againe, Deut. 4. 10. 6 15. 6 Deut. 9.2. Horeb. And fois it in the first of Kings 8. 6. and the 2. of Chron. 5. 10. and in Malachie 4.4. Finally, in Ecclesiasticus the 48. 7. they are named as one. Which heardest (saith Ecclesiasticus) therebuke of the Lord in Sinai, and in Horeb the judgement of the vengeance: Somewhat they are dissoyned at the top by the report of Peter Belonius: who in the yeare 1588 30 past out of Agypt into Arabia, with Monsieur de Fumet of France, and travailed to the top both of Sinai and Horeb: Sinai being by farre the higher hill. From the side of Horeb (faith he) there falleth a very faire fpring of water into the Valley adioyning: where he found two Monasteries of Christian Marronites, containing some 100. Religious persons of divers Nations, who had pleasant gardens, delicate fruits, and excellent wine. These (faith the same Author) give entertainment to all strangers. which paffe that way.

Now, that there was some such Torrent of water neare Sinai in Moses time, it is very probable: First, because he incamped thereabout almost a yeare, and drew no water, as in other places, by miracle: fecondly, because it is written Exod. 32.20. that when Moses had broken the golden Calfe to powder, which Aaron set up in his absence, he cast the powder thereof into the water, and made the children of 1/2 rael to drinke thereof.

On this mountaine, the Law by the Angell of God was given to Moles, where he staied a whole yeare, wanting some tenor twelve daies: for he removed not till 10 the 20. day of the second moneth of the second yeare; and he arrived about the 45 day after the egression : the Law being given the 50. day.

At this Manfion all was done, which is written from the beginning of the 20. Chapter of Exodus, to the end of that booke; all in Legitions; and all in Numbers. to the 10. Chapter. Whereof (because there is no storie nor other passage) I will omittherepetition, and in place thereof speake somewhat of the Law, and the kinds and vie thereof: whereby, if the Reader finde the storie any way disjounced. he may turne ouer a few leaues, and, omitting this, finde the continuation thereof. We must first consider, that as there can be neither foundation, building, nor continuance of any Common-wealth, without the rule, leuell, and square of Lawes: so 20 it pleased God to give thereby vnto Moses the powerfullest meane (his miraculous grace excepted) to gouerne that multitude which he conducted; to make them victorious in their passage, and to establish them assuredly in their conquest. For as the North starre is the most fixed directour of the Sea-man to his defired Port : fo is the Law of God the guide and conducter of all in generall, to the hauen of eternall life: the Law of nature, from God his eternall law deduced, the rule of all his Creatures: the Law humane, depending on both these, the guard of Kings, Magistrates, and vertuous men; yea, the very spirit, and the very sinewes of every estate in the world, by which they live and move: the Law, to wit, a just law, being resembled to an Heart without affection, to an Eie without lust, and to a Minde without pas- 30 fion; a Treasurer, which keepeth for every man what he hath, and distributeth to euery man what he ought to haue.

This benefit the Ancient, though barbarous, efteemed so highly, that among them, those, which were taken for the first makers of Lawes, were honoured as Gods, or as the sonnes of Gods and the rest, that made either additions or corrections, were commended to all posteritic for men of no lesse vertue, and no lesseliberally beneficiall to their Countries, than the greatest and most prosperous Conquerours that euer gouerned them. The Ifraelites, the Lacedemonians, and the Athenians, received their Lawes from one : as the Ifraelites from Moles; the Lacedemonians from Lycurgus; the Athenians from Solon; the Romanes sometime from 40 their first Kings, from their Decemviri, from their Senatours, from their Lawyers, and from the people themselues: others from the Prince, Nobilitie, and People; as in England, France, and in other Christian Monarchies and Estates.

Of the name and meaning of the words, Law, and Right.

He word Lex, or Law, is not alwaies taken alike, but is diverfly, and 50 in an indifferent sense vsed. The word Law is also taken for the morall habit of our minde; which doth (asit 10 were) command our thoughts, words, and actions: framing and fashioning them according to it selfe, as to their patterne and platforme. And thus the law of the flesh which the Diuines call legem fomitis, is to be vnderstood. For every law is a kinde of patterne of that which is done according vnto it : in which sense as * elsewhere, * Gen.6.56 this morall habit or disposition of the heart is called the frame or figmentum of the Item 8.2. heart : fo in St. Paul to the Romanes it is called a Law. and what to shunne, or Lex est omnium divinarum & humanarum rerum Regina; Law is the Queenc or Princesse of things both humane and divine. But this description is grounded vpon the opinion of ineuitable fate. Law is the very wifedome of Nature : the reason and understanding of the prudent; and the rule of right and wrong. For as a right line is called Index (ui & curui, the demonstrance of it selfe, and of the crooked: fo is the law, the Judge and measure of right and wrong.

Mr. Hooker calls the Law a directive rule to goodnesse of operation; and though law as touching the substance and effence, consist in understanding: Concludit tamen actum voluntatis; Yet it comprehends the act of our will. The word Ins is also diversly taken, as sometime for the matter of the law and for common right: sometime for 10 the law it selfe: as Ius Ciuile, of Ius gentium. Isidore distinguisheth the two generall words Iss and Fas: whereof Iss, faith he, hath reference to men, Fas to God. Fas lex diuina, Ius lex humana. To goe ouer an other mans field, is permitted by Gods law, not by mans : and therefore in a thing out of controuerlie, Firgil vied both those words: as Fas & iura simunt: God and Men permit.

The word Iss or Right, is derived or taken from the old substantive Nowne influe, a bidding or commandement : or perhaps from the Greeke (we, which is the name of Iupiter: or of the Latine genitiue case Ionis: because as the Scripture speaks, the indgement is Gods. For as it is certaine that ins-inrandum came of louis-inrandum (for fo we finde it written in Nonius out of the ancient, in which sensethe Scripture 20 calls it iuramentum Iehoua) fo also we may say, that Ius came of Ionis, quia Ionis est: because as God is the Author, and Patterne, and Maintainer of right, so also in his Vicegerents the Magistrates, he is the pronouncer and exequutor of right. Of this Ius the iust are denominated, iustus à iure, and iustitia à iusto : The right gives name to the righteous : and instice takes her name from the inst.

Of the definition of Lawes, and of the law eternall.

Vt because lawes are manifold, and that enery kinde hath a proper 30 and peculiar definition, it agreeth with order, first to divide and distinguish them. I meane those forts of lawes, from whence all other particulars are drawne : leaving the individuals of humane lawes to their infinite and horrible confusion.

The law eternall is thus defined by T HO MAS. Lex aterna est aternus diuina sa- P.2.99.art.1. pientia conceptus, secundum quod ordinatur ad gubernationem rerum ab ipso pracognitarum : The eternall law is the eternall concept of Gods wifedome, as it is referred to the gouernement of things foreknowne by himfelfe. Or Lex aterna est summa atg. aterna va- 16,9.93. art. 13 tio diuina (apientia: quatenus res omnes ad destinatos fines ita dirigit, vit illis iuxta conditionemipfarum modum aliquem necessitatis adferat; It is the high and eternally eafon of diuine Copience : as it directeth all things in fuch fort to their proper ends, imposing a kinde of necessitie according to their feuerall natures, or conditions. Now the difference lieth in this: That as the same divine understanding directeth all these to their proper ends; to fo it is called providence: but as it imposeth a necessitie according to the natures of all things which it directeth, fo it is called a law.

Of this eternal law Cicero tooke knowledge, when in his booke of Lawes, hee wrote in this manner. Erat ratio perfecta, rerum natura, o ad recte faciendum impellens of a delicto auocans : que non tum incipitlex elle cum scripta est: sed tum cum orta est. Orta autem simul est cum mente dinina : quamobrem lex vera atque princeps, apta ad inbendum er ad vetandum ratio est recta summi Iouis: That perfect reason and nature of things incouraging or impelling to rightfull actions, and calling vs backe from eaill, did not ( faith he then beginne to be a law when it was written; but when it had. Being being and beginning it had together with divine understanding, and therefore a true law and a fit Princesse 20 to command and forbid is the right reason of the most high God. This eternall law, (if we confider it in God, or as God,) is alwaies one and the same; the nature of God being most simple: but as it is referred to divers objects, so the reason of man finds it divers and manifold. It also seemeth one law in respect of things necessarie, as the motions of the heavens, stabilitie of the earth, &c. but it appeareth otherwise to things contingent : another law to men : another to other creatures, having life, and to all those that be inanimate.

By this eternall law all things are directed, as by the counfaile and prouidence of God: from this law all lawes are deritted, as from the rule vinuerfall: and thereto referred, as the operation of the fecond to the first.

The eternall, and the divine Law, differ only in confideration; the eternall dire- Tho. & Aug. ching more largely, aswell enery creature, to their proper and naturall ends, as it doth man to his supernaturall : but the divine law to a supernatural end only : the Naturall law is thence derived, but an effect of the eternall: as it were a streame from this fountaine.

The Law humane or temporall is also thence drawne: in that it hath the forme of right reason : from which if it differ, it is then impositio iniqua, a wicked imposition: and only borrowerh the name of a law.

To this eternal law all things are subjected : aswell Angels and Men, as all other creatures, or things created; whether necessarie or contingent, naturall, or morall, 40 and humane. For the law eternall runneth through all the univerfall, and therefore it is the law also of things which are simple, naturall, and inanimate.

Hence it is, that all things created are commanded to praise God their Creatour and Directour : as Praise him all ree his Angels : praise yee him Sunne and Moone; all Platis; bright Starres : heavens of heavens; for he hath established them for ever and ever: Hee hath made an or dinance which shall not passe: Praise yet the Lord from the earth yee Dragons and all depths: Fire, and haile, frow, and vapours, flormie winds, which exequate his Word: mountaines, and hils : fruitfull trees and all Cedars : Beasts , and all Cattell, &c. Now as the reasonable Creatures are by this eternall law bound, by the glorie and felicitie proposed vinto them (beatitude being both the attractive, and the end) fo all other 50 naturall things and creatures, have in themselves, and in their owne natures, an obedience formall to it: without any proper intention, knowne cause, or end propofed. For beafts are led by fense, and naturall inftinct: things without life by their created forme, or formall appetites, as that which is heauie to fall downeward: things light to mount voward, &c. and fire to heate whatforner is apposed. This kinde of working the Aristotelians ascribe to common nature : others to fate; a difference vsed in termes only; it being no other then Gods generall providence: for as it is truly sa d of God, that he is omnia super omnia: so are all things which appeare in themselves, thence derived: there-vnder subjected: thence-from by his eternall law and prouidence directed, even from the greatest to the least of his creatures, in heauen and in earth.

The Schoolemen are very curious and ample in the confideration of these lawes: and in discourse of the profit, and of the matter, and object of the eternal law. But as the profit is manifest in the good of all creatures, who have thence from, either reason, sense, vegetation, or appetition, to conduct them: so is the object and mat-10 L.1. delib. arb. ter of the law, the whole creature. For according to St. A VGVSTINE. Lex aterna est, quainstumest out omnia sint ordinatissima; The law eternall is that, whereby it is just, that all things should be disposed in the best and goodliest order.

Lastly, it is disputed, whether the eternal law be immutable, yea or no? But the resolution is, that it changeth not; for which St. Augustine vseth a sufficient argument in his first Booke of Free-will the fixth Chapter. For the law of Moles which had a time prefixed, was eternally by God ordained to last vntill the time of the Padagogia of Gods people, or introduction to Christ should be expired: which time of expiration some thinke our Sauiour noted to be come, when on the Croffe hee faid, Consummatum est. But I rather thinke these words of our Sauiour to have no other 20 fignification, then that now the prophecie of their giuing him Vineger to drinke was fulfilled. For so S. John expounds it, when he saith v. 28. That Christ feeing all (other) things to be fulfilled, Vt consummaretur Scriptura, That the Scripture in this alfomight be fulfilled, faid I thirst: though I denie not, but at the same time also the date of the Law was expired, to wit, of the law cerimoniall, and of so much of the iudiciall, as appertained peculiarly to the Iewes, and agreeth not with the law of the new Testament and Gospell of Christ. For the immutable law of God, though prescribing things mutable, is not therefore changed in it selfe: but the things prescribed change according to this eternall ordinance; of which the Wifedome of SALO-MON. And being one sheecan doc all things, and remaining in her selfereneweth all.

Q. VI.

Of the Law of Nature.

Aug in Epift.ad nanz. Joh tract.

F the law of Nature as it is taken in generall, I finde no definition among the Schoolemen: only as it is confidered in man, it is called the impression of dusine light, and a participation of the eternall law in thereaso-nable creature. Lex naturalis est impressio dustri luminis in nobis, ep partici-patio legis aterna in rationali creatura. V LPIAN defines the naturallar 40

& Investment to be the same which nature hath taught all living creatures; Insnaturale est quod Natura omnia animalia docuit : and he afterward addeth, Ius istud non humani generis proprium, fed omnium animalium qua terramarig, nafcuntur, anium quoque commune est; The law of nature is not proper to man alone, but the same is common to all living creatures : as well to birds, as to those which the Land and Sea produceth. But this definition is not generall, but of the naturall law in things of life.

The law of nature in generall, I take to be that disposition, instinct, and formall qualitie, which God in his eternall providence hath given and imprinted in the nature of euery creature, animate, and inanimate. And as it is diamum lumen in men, inlightning our formall reason: so is it more then sense in beasts: and more then ve- 50 getation in plants. For it is not sense alone in beasts, which teacheth them at first fight, and without experience or instruction, to flie from the enemies of their lines: feeing that Bulls and Horses appeare unto the sense more fearefull and terrible, then the least kinde of Dogs: and yet the Harcand Decre feedeth by the one, and flieth from the other, yea though by them neuer seene before, and that as soone as they fall from their Dammes. Neither is it sense which hath taught other Beasts to prouide for Winter, Birds to build their nests, high or low, according to the tempefluous or quiet seasons: or the Birds of India to make their nests on the smallest twigs which hang ouer Riuers, and not on any other part of the tree, or ellewhere: to faue their egges and yong ones from the Monkies, and other beafts, whose weight fuch a twig will not beare : and which would feare to fall into the water. The instances in this kinde are exceeding many which may bee given. Neither is it out of the vegetable or growing nature of plants, that some trees, as the semale of the Pal-10 mitto, will not beare any fruit except the male grow in fight. But this they doe by that law which the infinite and vnfearchable wifedome of God, had in all eternitie provided for them, and for every nature created. In man this law is double: corrupt, and incorrupt; corrupt where the reason of man hath made it selfe subject, and a Vaffal to paffions, and affections brutall: and incorrupt where time and custom hath bred in mena new nature, which also, as is aforesaid, is a kind of Law. For it was not Supra $.4.00 by the law of Nature incorrupt, which St. Augustine calleth the law of reason, but by lace and Rom. 7. a nature blinded and corrupted, that the Germans did anciently allow of theft: and that other Nations were by law constrained to become Idolaters; that by the lawes of Lycurgus it was permitted to men to vie one an others wife, and to the wo- Theod Lo. de cua men to choose them others besides their hulbands, to beget them with child: which randis affet: law in those parts hath lasted long, and is not forgotten to this day.

The Scythians, and the people of both Indies, hold it lawfull to burie with them the best beloued wives : as also they have many other customes remembred by G. Valentia, against nature and right reason.

And I know not from what authoritie it is that these lawes some men auow to be naturall: except it be of this corrupt nature, as (among others) to pay guile with guile: to become faithlesse among the faithlesse to prouide for our selues by another mans destruction: that injuric is not done to him that is willing: to destroy Nemointenathose whom we feare : and the like. For taking the definition of natural lawes , ei- tura cum alteri-30 therout of St. Augustine or Aquinas, (the one calling it the impression of divine light; watermento lies the other, the dictate or sentence of practique reason) the same can teach vs, or incline debes. vs to no other thing, then to the exercise of Iustice and vprightnesse: and not to offer or performe any thing toward others, faue that which wee would bee content should be offered or performed toward our selues. For such is the law of nature to the minde, as the cie is to the bodie; and that which according to David sheweth Pfalm.T. vs good, that is, the observation of those things which leade vs thereby to our last end; which is eternall life: though of themselves not sufficient without faith and

Now, that which is truly and properly the law of Nature, where the corruption 40 is not taken for the law, is, as aforesaid, the impression of Gods divine light in men, and a participation of the law increated and eternall. For without any law written the right reason and understanding, which God hath given vs, are abilities within our felues, fufficient to give vs knowledge of the good and euill, which by our gratitude to God, and distribution of right to men, or by the contrarie, wee prepare and purchase for our selves. For when the Gentiles (faith S.P A V L) which have not the Law, Rom, z.ver, 14: doe by nature those things contained in the law: they having not the law, are a law unto themselues. Now, to loue God by whom wee are, and to doe the same right to all men, which we defire should be done vnto vs, is an effect of the purest reason: in whose highest Turrets, the quiet of conscience hath made her resting place, and habitation. To In arce altissimarationis quies habitat; Therefore, the Gentiles (faith S. PAVL) which Roma, ver. 15. show the effects of the law written in their hearts, have their consciences for witnesses of those

betraying of his owne foule, by craftie vnrighteoufneffe, purchaling eternall perdition. For it helpeth vs not to hide our corrupt hearts from the worlds eie, seeing from him, who is an infinite eie, we cannot hide them : fome Garlands wee may gather in this May-game of the world, Sed flosille, dum loquimur, arefeit; Those flowers wither while we discourse of their colours, or are in gathering them. That we should therefore inhabite and dwell within our selues, and become searefull witnesses of our secretest cuils, did that reverend Philosopher Pythagoras teach in this golden precept. Wil turpe committas, neque coram alijs, neque tecum, maxime omnium verere teipfum; Commit nothing foule or dishonest, saith he, neither to be knowne to others, nor to thin owne heart : but aboue all men reuerence thine owne conscience. And this may bee a pre- 10 cept of nature and right reason: by which law, men, and all creatures, and bodies, are inclined to those operations, which are answerable to their owne forme; as fire to give heate. Now, as the reasonable minde is the forme of man, so is he aptly moued to those things which his proper forme presenteth vnto him :to wit, to that which right reason offereth; and the acts of right reason, are the acts of vertue; and in the breach of the rules of this reason, is man least excusable : as being a reasonable creature. For all else, both sensitiue, growing, and inanimate, obay the law which God imposed on them at their first creation.

The Earth performeth her office, according to the Law of God in nature: for it bringeth forth the budde of the hearbe which feedeth feede, &c. and the Beaft, 20 which liueth thereon. He gaue a Law to the Seas, and commanded them to keepe their bounds: which they obay. He made a decree for the raine, and a way for the lightning of the thunders. He caused the Sunne to moue, and to give light, and to serue for lignes and sor seasons. Were these as rebellious as man, for whose sake they were created, or did they once breake the law of their natures and formes, the whole world would then perish, and all returne to the first Chaos, darkenesse, and con-

By this naturall Law, or Law of humane reason, did Caine perceiue his owne wickednesse, and offence, in the murther of Abel: for he not only feared the displeafure of God, but the reuenge of Men: it being written in his reason, that what socuer 30 he performed towards others, the same by others might bee done vnto him againe. And that this judgement of well and cuill doing, was put into our natures by God, and his eternall law, before the law written : Moses in the person of God witnesseth, Gen. the fourth. If thou doewell shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doe not well, sinne

The schoolemen are large also in this question of the natural Law: the same being opened amply by Remerius, Antoninus, and Valentia. But it is not my purpose to write a volume of this subject.

But this law which Thomas Aquinas calleth an act of reason taken properly, and not a habite, as it is an euident naturall iudgement of practique reason : they divide into 40 indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration (as that good is to be followed, and euill eschewed) and demonstrable, which is euidently proued, out of higher and more vniuerfall propolitions. Againe, as it answereth the naturall appetite, prescribing things to be defired as good, or to be avoided as cuill (as of the first to defire to line, and to satisfie hunger, &c. and of the second, to eschew paines, sorrow, and death) in this confideration they divide it, according to the divers kinds of appetites Too. 4.94 arts. that are in vs. For in enery man there are three forts of appetites, which answere the three degrees of naturall Law. The first is, to bee that which we are; in which is comprehended the defire, both to liue, and to preferue our being and life, also the desire of iffue, with care to prouide for them : for the Father after his death lines in 50 hischildren; and therefore the desire of life comprehends the desire of children. And to these appetites are referred the first indemonstrable lawes of nature, for the most part. For it needes no proofe, that all creatures should desire to be, to live, and to be defended, and to liue in their iffue, when they cannot in themselues. And as man is a being, Ens or Res: so hee doth desire good, and shunne euill. For it is common to all things, to defire things agreable to their owne natures, which is, to defire their owne good. And fois Good defined by Ariftotle, to be that which all defire. Lilie Li Li. Which definition Basil vponthe 44. Plalme approueth: Recte guiden Bonum definierunt, Quod omnia expetunt; Rightly have some men defined Good, or Goodnesse, to be that which all things defire.

The second kinde of appetite is of those things which appertaine to vs., as wee haue sense. Whence, by the law of Nature, wee desire the delights of every sense; but with such moderation, as may neither glut vs with satietie, nor hurt vs with 10 excesse. For as Sense it selfe is for the preservation of life and being: so is it meete, cuen by the law of nature, that the fensitive appetite should not carrie vs to the destruction, either of our life or being. And although (seeing both these kinds of appetites are in beafts) wee may well fay, that Nature hath given divers lawes vnto them: In which sense the Civilians define Naturall right, or Ius natural, to bee the fame which Nature hath taught all living creatures; Yet the Schoolemen admit not. that the inflincts of beafts can be properly called a Law, but only a Ius, or Right. which is the matter, and aime of every Law. For so they diffinguish it; where plpian affirmeth, that Ius naturale is that, which Nature hath taught all living creatures. In this place (faith Valentia) Ius is not to be taken for a Law, but for the matto ter of the Law. And yet where Vipian also distinguisheth the right belonging to liuing creatures in generall, from the right belonging to men; calling the one Ius nature, the other Ius gentium: the Divines understand the law of nature more largely. that is, for all euident dictates, precepts, or biddings of diuine reason: both in beasts and men; and restraine the law of Nations to a kinde of humane right.

The third appetite is of those things which appertaine properly to man, as he is a lining creature reasonable: as well with relation to God, and to our Neighbour, as for our felues; and the lawes of this appetite are the Commandements of our reli-

Now although there are many other branches and divisions of this law of nature 30 answering the division of matter, which it prescribeth, and as manifold, as the morall actions are which it commandeth or forbiddeth; yet is the law of nature but one law, according to Aquinas : first, because it hath one fountaine or roote in the naturall or motive facultie, which is but one, ftirring vp to good, and declining the contrarie: fecondly, because all is contained in that generall naturall precept, That good is to be followed, and ill anoided: and thirdly, because all the parts are reduced to one and the fame last end.

That this law of nature bindeth all creatures, it is manifest: and chiefly man; because he is indued with reason; in whom as reason groweth, so this band of obseruing the law of nature increaseth, Postquam ratio ad perfectum venit, tune fit quod seri- Basil. 40 ptum eft, Adueniente mandato peccatum reuixit; When reason grew to perfection, then it tame to passe, which was written by S.P AVL, When the Commandement came, sinne reuined. Neither is it a finall warrant for this law of nature, when those which breake the fame, are faid by S. PAVL, To be delivered over into a reprobate fense (or minde) Rom.1,28; to doe those things which are not convenient : and againe, that their consciences beare wit- Rom.2.15. neffe, and their thoughts accuse them. For, though this law of nature stretch not to euery particular: as to command fasting and the like: yet, it commandeth in generall all good, and what soeuer is agreeable to right reason. And therefore, said DAMA-SCENE; homines facti sunt mali, declinando in id quod contra naturam est; Men (faith L.2.Fid orthe, he) are made euill, by declining unto that which is contrarie to nature : and S. Avgystine, 6.30. 30 Omne vitium natura nocet, ac per hoc contra naturam est; Euery vice doth wrong to nature, and is therefore contrarie unto it.

Neither yet are the rules of this law of nature fo streight, but that they suffer exceptions in some particulars. For whereas by this law all men are borne Lords of the earth, yet it well alloweth inequalitie of portions, according to vnequall merit:

Iob.c.28,

by taking from the euill, and giving to the good: and by permitting and commanding that all men shall enjoy the fruits of their labours to themselves: according to the rules of justice and equitie.

And though the law of nature command, that all things beer effored which are left in trust, yet in some causes this her law shee suffereth to be broken: as to denie a madde man his weapons, and the like, which he left in keeping while hee was fober. But the vniuerfall principles can no more bee changed, than the decrees of God are alterable: who according to St. PAVL, abideth faithfull, and cannot denie himfelfe.

Of the written Law of God.

Fter the eternall, and naturall, the law Positive or imposed is the next in order, which law, being nothing but an addition, or rather explication of the former, hath two kinds: Diuine, and Humane. Againe, the divine positive law is double; the old and new: The old was giuen vnto Moses in Mount Smai or Horeb, at such time as the world had stood 2513, whole yeeres: and in the 67. day of this yeere when as Afeatades or Ascades gouerned the Assyrians, Marathus the Sycionians, Triopus the Argines, Ce- 20 crops Attica, and Acherres Agypt : to wit, after the promise to Abraham 430. yeeres. And this, it seemes, was the first written law which the world received. For the very word Nomes, fignifying a law, was not then, nor long after invented by the Grecians : no not in Homers time : who lived after the fall of Troy 80. yeeres at least : and Troy it felfe was cast downe 335. yeeres, after Moses led Israel out of Agypt. This law, it pleased God to ingraue in stone, that it might remaine a lasting booke of his express will in the Church; and that the Priests and people might haue, whereof to meditate, till the comming of Christ: and that so these children of Israel, though bred among an Idolatrous people in £gypt, might be without excuse: the slight defences of ignorance being taken from them.

The reason knowne to vs why this law was not written before, is, that when the people were few, and their liues long, the Elders of families might eafily without any written law instruct their owne children : and yet as they increased, so doubtlesse they had belides the law of Nature, many precepts from God, before the law written. But now at length, for a simuch as the law of nature did not define all kinds of good, and euill; nor condemne euery finne in particular: nor fufficiently terrifie the consciences of offenders: nor so expound divine worship, as for those after-ages was required, who gaue enery day leffe authoritie than other to the naturall law; In these respects it was necessarie, that the law should be written, and set before the eies of all men: which before, they might, but would not reade, in their owne consciences. The Schoolemen, and the Fathers before them, inlarge the causes and necesfitie, why the law was written, whereof these are the chiefest.

The first, for restraining of sinne, directly grounded upon this place of DAVID, The law of the Lord is undefiled, converting soules: The testimonies of the Lord are faithfull, gining wifedome to children. For the humane law, faith St. Jugufine, meeteth not with all offences, either by way of prohibition or punishment; seeing thereby it might take away formething feeming necessarie, and hinder common profit : but the diuine law written, forbiddeth enery euill, and therefore by Dauid it is called undefiled.

Secondly, it serueth for the direction of our minds. For the lawes of men, can 50 only take knowledge of outward actions, but not of internal motions, or of our disposition and will: and yet it is required, that we be no leffe cleane in the one, than in the other. And therefore were the words converting our foules, added by David: wherein are all our outward acts first generated, according to the Cabalists. Actiones hominum nulla essent, nist prius in mente dicerentur; The actions of men (lay they) would benone at all, were they not first conceined in the minde.

Thirdly, it leadeth vs to the knowledge of truth, which by reason of diversitie of opinion, and difference of peculiar lawes among fundrie Nations, wee cannot bee affured of; but the law of God bindeth all men, and is without errour; and therefore also said DAVID, That the testimonie of the law of God is faithfull giving wifedome to children.

Of the unwritten law of God, given to the Patriarks by Tradition.

Mother. That murther and crueltie was also forbidden, both before the law written, and to lawing, Gen. 40 before the floud it selfe, it is manifest. God himselfe making it appeare; that it was 4.1. Item 44.4. one of the greatest causes of the destruction of mankinde by the general should. For especially, see God faid vnto NoA, An end of all flesh is come before mee : for the earth is filled with ingthesewords crueltie through them : and behold I will destroy them * from the earth. Who so sheddeth mans bloud, by man shall his bloud be shed: for in the Image of God hath he Gen. v. 6.

Also the law of honouring and reverencing our parents, was observed among the 50 faithfull, and the contrarie punished by the fathers curse: as, Cursed be Canaan, a servant Gen 3 25. of servants shall be be unto his brethren. Againe, we finde that the vinatural sinne of the Sodomites was punished in the highest degree; as with fire from Heauen. The sinne of Adulteric and Rauishment, was before the law no lesse detested than the rest, as appeareth by that revenge, taken for Dina's forcing and by the Gm.34.35.

To these we may adde the ordinance of Sacrifice, of distinction of cleane and vncleane beafts, of Circumcifion, of the Brother to raife p feede to his Brother that left a Widdow childleffe, and divers other constitutions, partly Morall, and partly Ceremoniall, which being delinered before the written law, were after by it confirmed. So that this Divine Law imposed, of which the law of Moses containeth that which is called The old Testament, may be faid, not only to have beene written in the hearts of men, before it was ingrauen in stone, but also in substance to have beene to given in precept to the Patriarks. For as S. Paul witnesseth of himselfe, I knew not (inne, but by the law: so ever the Law naturally preceded, and went before offences, though written after offences committed.

It is true, that all the creatures of God were directed by some kinde of vnwritten law; the Angels intuitiuely; Men by Reason; Beasts by sense and instinct, without discourse; plants by their vegetative powers; and things inanimate by their necessary rie motions, without sense or perception, Ow as the word (Law) in generall, as is aforefaid, hath divers fignifications, and is taken for all doctrine which doth prescribe and reftraine : so this Law, called the Law of Moses in particular, is taken by S. Paul diversly; as sometime for all the old Testament, as, Now we know what sour the law saith, it saith to them which are under the law.

When it is opposed, or differenced from the Prophets, and Psalmes, it is there 30 taken for the five Bookes of Moles. For fo Saint Luke hath diftinguished them; as, All must bee fulfilled which are written of mee in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the P(almes.

When it is opposed to the Gospell, then it is taken for the Law Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall; as, Therefore we conclude, that a man is instifted by faith without

When it is opposed to Grace, it signifieth the declaration of Gods wrath, and our guilt of condemnation; or the extremitie of law, and summum ius: as, For yee are not under the law, but under grace.

When it is opposed to the Truth, namely, where the ceremonics or signes are ta- 40 ken for the things fignified; as the Sacrifice for Christ, and the like: then it fignifieth but shadowes and figures; as, The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by IESVS Christ.

Lastly, when it is opposed to the time of Christs comming, it signifies the whole policie of the Iewes Common-weale; as, Before faith came, wee were kept under the Law, &c. or the law of the order and institution of the Aaronicall Priesthood; as, All the Prophets, and the Law, or the Priests, prophecied unto IOHN. And if the Priefthood bee changed, the Law also, to wit, of the Priefthood, must needes bee changed.

The word (Law) is sometime also taken by the Figure Metonymia, for Interest, 50 Authoritie, and Empire, or for constraining force; as, The law of the Spirit of life, the law or the force of sinne and death, the enforcements of concupiscence, &c.

But the Written Law of Moses, or the Lawe of the Old Testament, of which wee now speake, is thus defined. The Law is a doctrine, which was first put into the mindes of men by God, and afterwards written by Meses, or by him repeated, commanding Holinesse and Justice, promising eternal life conditionally, that is, to the observers of the law, and threatning death to those which breake the law in the least. For according to Saint Iames, Who soeuer shall keepe the whole; and faileth in lames 2,16; one point, is guiltie of all. The definition vsed by the Shoolemen, in which both the Old and New law are comprehended, is thus given. Lex divinaest divinum detretum, hominibus prescribens modum necessarium vi apie peruenire possint ad supernaturalem heatitudinem, quaest vitimus humana vita finis; The diuine law (say they) is the decree of God, prescribing unto men a necessarie meane, whereby they may aptly attaine supernato turall beatitude, which is the last end of mans life.

CHAP.4.§.9.

The law of Moses hath three parts : Morall, Ceremoniall, and Indiciall. The Morall part commaundeth this or that good to be done, and this or that suill to be auoided, in particular; as also it declareth, for whose fake it is to be done; as Doetlis for I am the Lord, whereas the law of nature commands it but in generally Against the Morall law entreateth of vertue and goodnesse; the Ceremoniall of divine feruice, and of holinesse; (for externall worship, and the order of hallowing our selues vuto God is called Ceremonie) and the Judiciall teacheth the particular government, fit for the Common-wealth of the Iewes, and prescribeth orders for instice and equitie. And therefore was it faid of Saint Paule, The commandement is suft, ho- Rom, 113

20 ly and good: iust, or iustice being referred to the Iudiciall; holy, or holinesse to the Ceremoniall, good, or honest to the Morall. The Indiciall part is touching the gouernment of the common-wealth of the Iewes, in which manie things must needs be proper to that estate, as such as were instituted either in respect of place or persons.

The Ceremoniall is divided into foure parts, according to the foure kindes of things, of which it speaketh, to wit, Sacrifice, Holie things, Sacraments, and Obferuances. To Sacrifices belong beafts, and the fruits of the earth; to Holy things the Tabernacle, Temple, Veffels, Altars, and the like; to Sacraments Circumcifion, the Passeouer, and such like. For the Observances, they consisted either in prohibition of certaine meats, as not to eate the bloud and fat of beafts or in some other 30 outward things; as in washings, purifyings, annointings, and attire, as matto weare mixt garments of Linnen and Wollen; as also it prohibiteth other vnnaturall and vnproper commixtions, as thou shalt not yoke together in a plough an Oxe and an Alle, or call mingled seede in one field. It also exhorteth naturall compassion, and forbiddeth crueltie euen to beafts, birds, and plants, whereby the creatures of God might be destroied without any profit to man. For so some referre these precepts, Thou halt not kill the bird fitting on her nest, nor beate downe the first buddes of the tree, nor muzzle the labouring Oxe, and the like, to the Ceremonial Law.

Neither is there any of these three parts of the law of Moles , but it hath as yet in some respects, the same power which it had before the comming of Christ. For 40 the Morall liueth still, and is not abrogated or taken away : saving in the abilitie of iultifying or condemning; for therein are we commanded to loue and worship Godand to vie charitic one towards another : which for euer shall bee required at our hands. Therein also are wee in particular directed, how this ought to bee done: which power of directing by speciall rules and precepts of life; it retaineth still. For these things also are commanded in both Testaments to be observed though principally for the feare of God in the one, and for the loue of God in the other,

The Ceremoniall also liueth in the things which it foresignissed. For the shadow is not destroied, but perfected, when the body it selfe is represented to vs. Besides; it fill liueth, in that it giveth both instruction and testimonie of Christ, and in that it 30 giueth direction to the Church for some ceremonies and types of holy lignification, which are still expedient; though in a farre fewer number than before Christs comming, and in a farre leffe degree of necessitie.

Lastly, the Iudiciall liueth in substance, and concerning the end, and the natural and vniuerfall equitic thereof.

A proposall of nine other points to be considered, with a touch of the five first.

S for that which remayneth in the generall confideration of the divine written Law, it may in effect bee reduced into these nine

- 1. The dignitie and worth of the law.
- The Majestie of the law-giuer.
- 3. The propertie and peculiaritie of the people receiving it.
- The conveniencie of the time in which it was given.
- The efficacie and power thereof.
- 6. The difference and agreement of the old and new Testament.
- 7. The end and vie of the Law.
- 8. The sense and understanding of the Law.
- d. The durance and continuance thereof.
- 1. The dignitic of the Law is sufficiently proued by St. Paul in these wordes. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandement is holy, and inst, and good : which three attributes are referred, as aforefaid, to the Morall, Ceremoniall, and In-
- 2. The Majestie of the Law-giver is approved in all his creatures; who as hee hath given all things their lives, and beings, so he only gave the law, who could only give the end and reward promised, to wit, the saluation of mankinde: but he gave it not to Moses immediately, but by the ministerie of Angels: as it is said. And the law was ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediatour : and in the Acts, He gave the law by the ordinance of Angels.
- 3. The proprietie and peculiaritie of the people, receiving this law, is in three respects. First, in that they were prepared : Secondly, in that they were a Nation apart and diffeuered: Thirdly, in that they were the children of the promife made to Abraham. Prepared they were, because they had the knowledge of one God, when all other Nations were Idolaters. A Nation apart and scuered they were, because of Gods choise and election. Children of the promise they were, for the promife was made by God vnto Abraham, and his feede: not vnto his feedes, as to Efan and Iacob, but to his feede, as to Iacob, or Ifrael fingularly, of whom Christ. Now to ABRAHAM and his feede were the promifes made : he faith not to the feedes, as feaking of many, but to thy feede, as of one, which is Christ.
- 4. The convenience of the time, in which it was given, is noted by S. Augufine: that it was about the middle time, betweene the Law of Nature, and Grace: the law of Nature continued from Adam to Moses: the law written in the Commandements, received by Moses in the worlds yeare 2514. continued to the Baptisme of Iohn: from which time begunne the Law of Grace, which shall continue to the worlds end. Other reasons for the conveniencie are formerly given.
- 5. The fifth confideration is of the efficacie of this law, the same being a dispofition to, or figne of our iustification: but not by it selfe sufficient, but as a figure of Christ in ceremonies, and a preparation to righteousnesse in morall precepts. For through the passion of Christ were sinnes forgiven, who takethaway the sinnes of the world: and therefore S. Paul calleth the rudiments of the law beggerly and weake, Gal.4. beggetly as containing no grace, weake as not able to forgine and infline. The bloud Hob.2. of Goates and Bulls, and the albes of an Heifar could only cleanse the body; but they were figures of Christs bloud, which doth cleanse the inward soule. For if the Gal 2. law could instifie, then Christ died in vaine.

of the fixth point, to wit, of the difference and agreement of the old and new Testament.

CHAP.4.S.II.

He old and new Testament differ in name, and in the meane and way proposed for attaining to faluation; as the old by workes, the new by grace: but in the thing it selfe, or object and remote end, they agree:

which is, mans happinesse and faluation.

The old Testament, or Law, or Letter, or the Witnesse of Gods will, was called the old, because it preceded the new Testament; which is an explication of the old: from which the new taketh witnesse. Yet the new of more excellencie, in that it doth more lively expresse, and openly and directly delineate the 20 waies of our redemption. It is also called the old, to shew that in part it was to bee abrogated: In that he faith the new Testament, he hath abrogated the old. For the old Heb. c.8. v.15; law, though greatly extolled by the Prophets, and delivered with wonderfull miracles, yet was it constituted in a policie perishable: but the new was given in a promise of an euerlasting Kingdome, and therefore called in the Apocalips, a Testament and Gospell for ever during.

The old Testament is called the law, because the first and chiefe part is the law of Moses, of which the Prophets and Psalmes are Commentaries, explicating that

The new Testament is called the Gospell, because the first and chiefe part there-30 of is the glad tidings of our redemption: the other Bookes, as the Epistles or Letters of the Apostles, and the Acts or Storic of the Apostles, are plentifull interpreters thereof: The word Euangelian fignifying a joyfull, happie, and prosperous message, or (as Homer vsed it) the reward given to the Messenger, bringing joyfull newes. It is also sometime taken for a sacrifice, offered after victorie, or other pleasing successe, as by Xenophon. In the Scriptures it hath three fignifications · First, for glad tidings in generall, as in Esay the 52. v. 7. concerning peace: Secondly, by an excellencie it is restrained to signifie that most joyfull message of saluation, as in Luc. 2.10. whence also by figure it is taken for the Historie of Christ: and so wee understand the foure Att. Gospels.

40 Lastly, for the Preaching and divulging the doctrine of Christ, as Cor. 1. 9. 2. 14. and Cor. 2. 8. v. 18.

The agreement of both Testaments (taken, I thinke, as they are divided in volumes) is by Danaus comprised in these foure.

In their Author.

In the fubstance of the Couenant, or things promised.

In the effects, that is, in righteousnesse and instification.

In the Author they agree, because both are of God; and therefore both one Testament and will of God in Substance of doctrine. For as there was ever one Church: 50 fo was there one couenant, one adoption, and one doctrine. As the old law doth point at Christ, so doth the new law teach Christ: the old proposing him as to come, the new as already come; one and the same thing being promised in both; both tending to one, and the same end : even the saluation of our soules : which according to S. Peter is the end of our faith. For although it bee faid, that Moses did promise by observing the law an earthly Kingdome, a land flowing with milke and honie, the propagation of children, and other worldly bleffings: yet all these were but figures to teach, and pledges to affure the Fathers of those spiritual bleffings by Christ, for by the earthly hee raised their minds to the hope of heauenly. And the Fathers notwithstanding these worldly goods, did yet acknowledge themselues strangers, and pilgrimes, expecting the heavenly Hierusalem: according to this place of the Hebrewes: All these died in faith, and received not the promises, but law them a farre off and believed them : confessing that they were strangers and pilgrimes on the earth. To Lib. de Civit. Dei which purpose also S. AVGVSTINE: Omnino pauci veterem legem intelligunt, non attendentes per promissaterrena aterna promitti. Few (faith hee) doe understand the old 10 law: not attending that by things earthly eternall are promised. And S.HIEROME: Woluit Deus pascere Iudaos more pecorum corporalibus donis opibusque, vet Iudai somniant: God would not feede the Iewes as beafts with corporall gifts and riches as themselves dreame. And this may be gathered out of Gods owne words, Ego fum Deus tuus, & ero vobis in Deum; Iam thy God and I will bee your God. For the wordes . I will be your God.

> God created both bodie and soule, so hath he of his goodnesse, not left the better part vncared for, which liueth cuer. The agreement betweene the Old and New testament in substance, inferres also 20 the agreement in foundation. For Christ is called the foundation of the law, laid both by the Apofiles and Prophets: in whom all the promifes of God in the Old and New, are affured : the fathers having eaten the same spirituall foode, which we proue that it was not for the present, or for perishable things, that God gaue them this promise; but in respect of the future : to wit the safetie of their soules. For as eate in our Sacraments.

The agreement in effects is, in that the knowledge of our finne and miferie, which is taught vs by the law, maketh way, and as it were, ferueth in subordination to the Gospell, the proper effects whereof are mercie and saluation: to which the law seruing as an introduction (for to those which acknowledge their finne and miseric, God sheweth his mercie and saluation) may be said to agree with the Gospell in the effect. For otherwise if we seuer the law from subordination to the Gospell, the cf- 10 fects are very different: the one sheweth the way of righteousnesseby workes, the other by faith; the Law woundeth, the Gospell healeth : the Law terrifieth, the Gospell allureth; Moses accuseth, Christ desendeth : Moses condemneth; Christ pardoneth. The old restraineth the hand, the new the minde. Data est lex qua non fanaret (faith St. Avgvstine) sed qua agrotantes probaret; The law was given not to Homil ad Rom. helpe but to discouer sicknesse : and S. CHRYSOSTOME, Data eft lex, vt fe homo inveniret, non vt morbus sanaretur, sed vt medicus quareretur; The law was giuen that man might finde and know his owne imperfection : not that his difease was thereby holpen : but that he might then seeke out the Phisitian. For Christ came to saue the world, which the law had condemned. And as Moses was but a scruant, and Christ a sonne, so the 40 greatest benefit was referued to be brought, as by the worthiest person, faith Cyril: for this law made nothing perfect, but was an introduction of a better hope.

Heb. 7.

ð. XII. Of the rest of the points proposed.

He seuenth consideration is of the end, and vse of the law: which is to bring vs to Christ: for finding no righteousnesse in our owne works, we must seeke it in some other. But this is the last, and remote, and so rtmost end: the next and proper end of the law, is to prescribe righteous field, and to exact absolute and perfect obedience to God. Curfed is he which continueth not in all the things of this law.

Leuit, 18:5.

The second end of the law, is to render vs in excusable before God: who knowing so perfect a law, doe not keepe it: the law requiring a perfect and intire, not a broken or halfe obedience: but both inward and outward righteousnesse, and performance of dutie to God and Men.

The third and chiefe end of the law is, as hath beene faid, to fend vs to Chrift, and his grace, being in our selves condemned and lost. For the law was delivered with thunder, and with a most violent and fearefull tempest, threatning eternal death.

The fourth end of the law was to deligne, and preserue, the place of the Church and true people of God: and to hold them in one Discipline, and awe, till the comming of Christ: after whom the Church was to be dispersed ouer the whole world. These be the ends of the Morall law. The end and vse of the Ceremonial law, is to confirme the truth of Christ, and the new Testament. The vie of the Iudiciall, to teach vs naturall equitie, and right, whereto we must conforme our selucs.

The fense and understanding of the law is double, literall and spirituall: by the literall we are taught the worlhip and seruice of God: by the spirituall the figures and mysticall fore-speakings of Christ.

CHAP.4. $.12.

Laftly, for the durance or continuance of the law, the same had being vntill the paffion of Christ: before which time, and while Christ taught in the world, both the Gener 49: 10. old and the new were in force. But after that the true facrifice was offered upon the Altar of the Crosse, then the Lewish facrifices and ceremonies, which were Types and final lada, nor 20 figures of Christ (Christ being the body of those shadowes) ceased to binde the con- a Lawe-giver figures of Christ (Christ Christ Body of those made in Specification being now by Christ and in him from between ficiences any longer: the mysteric of our redemption being now by Christ and in him his feete, varill finished. In token whereof the vaile of the Templerent asunder; noting that the shile come. ceremoniall vailes and shadowes were now to be remoued, not that the morall law of the Commandements was hereby abolished, or weakened at all: otherwise then that it had not power to condemne according to the Iewish doctrine, as aforesaid. For the observing of the law was by Christ himselfe severely commanded : our love towards God being thereby to be witneffed. And herein Danid so much rejoyced, as he preferred the observation of the law, before all that the world could yeeld. In via testimoniorum tuorum delectatus (um, sicut in omnibus dinitijs; Ihane becne delighted 30 in thy law as in all manner of riches: And againe. The law of thy mouth is good for me aboue thousands of gold and silver. This is the love of God (faith S. IOHN) that wee keepe his John 1:5. Commandement. And that there is no excuse for the neglect of the things commanded in the law, God himselfe in Deuteronomie witnesseth. This Commandement Deut.30.11,12. (faith he) which I command thee this day is not hidde from thee, neither is it farre off. It is 13.0-14. not in heaven that thou shouldest say who shall goe up for us to heaven, and bring it us, and 7.8. cause us to heare it that we may doe it? neither is it beyond the Sea, that thou shouldest say, who shall goe over the Sea for us, and bring it us? Goe. but the word is very neare unto thee.

even in thy mouth and in thy heart for to doe it. Behold (faith Moses) I have fet before thee this day life and death; good and enill, in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walke in his waies, and to keepe his Commandements, and his Ordinances, and his Lawes, that thou maiest line, &c. Neither is it faid in vaine in S. MATTHEW. Si Cafes. v.17. vis ad vitam ingredi serua mandata; If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements: and in S. Io HN: Scio quiamandatum eius vita aterna eft; I know that his Commande- c.12.v.so. ment is life everlasting. And if this be the charitie of God, or of Men towards God, as S. John hath taught, to wit, that we keepe his Commandements: certainely he is but a lyar, that professeth to loue God, and neglecteth to observe the word of his will, with all his power. And though I confesse it is not in mans abilitie, without the speciall grace of God, to fulfill the law (Christ only as man excepted) yet if wee rightly confider the mercifull care which God had of his people in those his Com-30 mandements, we shall finde in our selues, how wee borrow libertie, and rather let flip our affections, and voluntarily loofen them, from the chaines of obedience, to which the word of God and divine reason hath sastened them, than that we are excusable by those difficulties and impossibilities, which our minde (greedie of libertie) proposeth to it selfe. For this is the love of God , that wee keepe his Commande-

ments, and his Commandements are not grieuous. 1. IOHN 3. verf. 12. and if wee examine every precept apart, and then weigh them each after other, in the ballance of our consciences; it is not hard for any man to judge, by what easie perswafions, we steale away from our owne power, as vnwilling to vie it against our plcafing defires.

A. XIII.

Of the seuerall Commandements of the Decalogue and that the difficultie is not in respect of the Commandements, but by our

Or by the first we are commanded to acknowledge, serue, and loue feeing enery reasonable man may conceine and know, that infinite power cannot be divided into many infinites: and that it is of necessitive that by this almightie V nitie, all things have beene caused, and are

continued. And if brute beafts had this knowledge of their Creatour, and how in his prouidence he hath also prouided for every of them, which giveth to beasts their foode, &c. there is no doubt but that they would also serve and love him only.

The second precept is the forbidding of Idolatrie, and worship of Images: the making whereof, out of doubt, was not the invention of an ill intent in the begin-Glossa in verb, ning, seeing this is generally true. Omnia mala exempla bonis initis orta sunt; All ill examples did spring and arise from good beginnings. For their first erection was to keep the memorie of men samous for their vertue : vntill (saith Lactantius ) the Deuill crept into them, and (having blotted out the first intent) working in weake and ignorant foules, changed the nature of the one, and the reason of the other, to serve himselfe thereby. For what reasonable man, if he be not forsaken of God, will call on those blinde, deafe, dumbe, and dead stocks, more worthlesse then the most worthlesse of those, that having life and reason, implore their helpe, which have 30 neither: yea, of more vilde prize and baser, then the basest of beasts, who have sense and estimation? for what doe wee thereby (saith the Wisedome of SALOMON)

but call to the weake for helpe, pray to the dead for life, require aide of him that hath no experience, assistance in our iourness of him that cannot goe, and successe in our affaires of him that hathno power? And whether the Idolater, or the blocke, to which hee praieth, be more senselesse: David maketh a doubt. For (faithhe) they that make them are like unto them, and so are all the rest that trust in them.

The breach of the third Commandement is neither perswaded by worldly pleafure, nor worldly profit: the two greatest inchanters of mortall men. No, wee are no way allured to this horrible disdaine of God, vnlcsse the hate of good men, and 40 Gods curfe, be accounted an advantage. For as our corruptest nature gives vs nothing towards it, so can it satisfie no one appetite, except everlasting forrow, and Hell dwell in our desire. And therefore this strange custome hath the Deuill brought vp among men, without all subtletie of argument, or cunning persuasion, taking thereby the greatest and most scornefull advantage over vs. For slaughter satisfieth hatred, Theft gives satisfaction to neede, Adulterie to lust, Oppression to couctousnesse: but this contemptuous offence of blasphemie, and the irreverent abuse of Gods name, as it given no helpe to any of our worldly affections, so the most saluage Nations of the world doe not vse it.

The fourth Commandement, to keepe the Sabath day holy, hath neither paine, burthen, nor inconvenience. For it giveth rest to the labourer, and consolation to their Masters. And that this law was imposed on man for his benefit, Moles teacheth in the reason of the law : as in Exod. 23. 12. And in the seuenth day thou shalt rest, that thine Oxe and thine Affermay rest, and the sonne of thy maide, and the stranger may be refreshed.

The first of the second Table to honour our Parents, with whom we are one and the same, is a gratitude which nature it selfe hath taught vs towards them, who after Godgaue vs life and being, have begotten vs, and borne vs, cherilhed vs in our weake and helpleffe infancie, and bestowed on vs the haruest and profit of their labours and cares. Therefore, in the Temporall and Iudiciall ordinances, curling of parents, or the offering them violence, was made death.

The next is, that thou shalt not Murther, that is, thou shalt not doe the acts following the affections of hatred. For the law of God, and after it our owne lawes, and in effect the law of all Nations, have made difference between flaughter cafuall, 10 and furious. Affectio enim tua (faith BRACTON) imponit nomen operi tuo; It is the affection and will that makes the worke such as it is. And certainely who soeuer cannot forbeare to commit murther, hath neither the grace of God, nor any vse of his owne

The third of the second Table, commands vs from adulterie. Now, if the preservation of Virginitie have beene possible, for thousands of Men and Women, who Nuotie repleme in all ages have mastered their fleshly desires, and have returned chast to the grave: terram, Virginia It cannot be accounted a burthen, to forbeare the dishonour and injurie, which we offer to others by fuch a violation, seeing marriage is permitted by the lawes of God. and Men, to all that affect it. And there is no man living whom the defire of beauag tie and forme hath so constrained, but he might with case for beare the prosequution of this ill: did not himselfe give sucke to this Infant, and nourish warmth till it grow to strong heate, heate till it turne to fire, and fire to flame.

The fourth of the second Table, is, that we shall not steale. And if that kind of violent robberie had beene vsed in Moses time, which many Ruffians practise nowa-daies in England, and to the dishonour of our Nation more in England, than in any Region of the world among Christians, out of doubt, he would have censured them by death, and not by restitution, though quadruple. For I speake not of the poore and miserable soules, whom hunger and extreme necessitie inforceth, but of those detefted Thecues, who to maintaine themselues Lord-like, assault, robbe, and 30 wound the Merchant, Artificer, and Labouring man, or breake by violence into other mens houses, and spend in Braucric, Drunkennesse, and vpon Harlots, in one day, what other men fometime have laboured for all their lives: impouerishing whole families : and taking the bread and foode from the mouthes of their children. And that this Commandement might eafily be observed, it would soone appeare, if Princes would refolue, but for a few yeares to pardon none. For it is the hope of life, and the argument of sparing the first offence, that incourageth these Hellhounds. And if every man may presume to be pardoned once, there is no state or common-wealth, but these men would in a short time impouerish or destroy it.

The fifth Commandement of this second Table, is, the prohibition of false wit-40 nesse: from which if men could not forbeare, all suretie of estate, and life, were taken away. And so much did God detest a false witnesse, and a false accuser, especially in matters criminall, that the law ordained him to suffer the same death or punishment.

The last of the ten Commandements forbiddeth vs to couet any thing, which belongeth to another man, either the bodies of their wives for concupifcence, or their goods for defire of gaine. And this precept seemeth the hardest for men to obserue; so esteemed by reason of our fraile affections : and yet if wee judge hereof rightly, it may bee doubted whether it extend to all our inconfiderate fancies and vaine thoughts. For although it be not easie to master all our suddaine passions, yet 30 we may restraine and hinder their growing, and farther increase, if we please to intend our strength, and seeke for grace. How the word Coneting reacheth to all those it is to be considered. For Concupiscentia, according to some, Est effrenatus habendi appetitus; An unbridled, or unrestrained appetite of having : And as touching such an appetite, we cannot excuse our selves by any our naturall frailtie, or vnaduised error;

But, as I suppose, the word Concupiscence is more largely taken, either for a determinate and unbridled cuill intent, or for some vrging inclination thereunto. All the question is of the later fort : which is, Attus imperfeitus, id est, non deliberatus ratione quaest principium proprium actus boni aut vitiosi; Such passions, or inclinations are unperfect acts, that is, not deliberated upon by reason, which is the proper principle of a good or vitious action. And fure, it may feeme, that so long as wee relist such motions they harme vs not: as they say, Quamdin refragamur ninil nocent: nocent autem cum eas dominari permittimus; As long as wee give no affent unto them, it is thought by somethat they hurt us not : and that then only they hurt when we suffer them to beare sway. But these men, as it seemes, make nothing forbidden in this tenth precept, but what hath been 10 forbidden in the other: for in every Commandement, not only the outward act, but also the inward affent vnto euill, though it breake not out into act, is forbidden: therefore, that wee may know the difference betweene this Commandement and the rest, the distinction of desires is to be held: that some are with affent, and vnbridled; others bridled, and without affent. For so even the Morall Philosopher can tell vs, that the Continent man hath cuill defires, but without affent (for they are bridled by the strength of right reason) as on the other side the Incontinent hath good defires, but restrained and suppressed by contrarie passions. The euill defires when they are accompanied with affent, are in enery Commandement forbidden, together with the outward act : and therefore, if wee will have any thing proper to this 20 Commandement, we must needes say, that the cuill desires of the Continent man (that is, even those which we resist and bridle) are here forbidden. For though hee that bridleth his cuill desires, be much better than he that yeeldeth vnto them : yet fuch a man, euen according to the Heathen Philosopher, is not worthy the name of a vertuous man. For Ariflotle himselfe makes Continentia, not to be vertue, but only a degree vnto it: confessing, that though the Continent man doe well in bridling his cuill affections, yet he doth not all, seeing hee ought not so much as to have them at all. Neither is it much more, that true divinitie delivereth touching this matter. For, as he faith, that in the Continent man the having of these euill desires, though he result them, is the cause that he cannot be called a vertuous man: so we, that the 30 having of them is a sinne. Only in this we excell him here: that we are able out of Divinitie to give the true reason of this doctrine : which is, that every one sinneth, that doth not loue God with his whole heart and affection: whence it followeth that the enill desires of the Continent man, that is, of him which bridleth them, must needs be finne: feeing fuch defires, though bridled, are a-pulling away of a part of our heart and affection from God.

Seeing therefore it hath pleased God, to make vsknow, that by our faithfull indenours to keepe his commandements, we witnesse our loue toward himselse: wee may not fafely giue libertie to our vanities, by cafting backe vpon God (who is iustice it selfe) that he hath given vs precepts altogether beyond our power, and com- 40 mandements impossible for vs to keepe. For as he is accursed (saith St. Hierome) that anowes that the law is in all things possible to bee obscrued: so hee bath made this addition. Maledictus qui dicit impossibilia Deum pracepisse; Accursed is hee that (aith that Godhath commanded things (in themselves, and not through our fault) impossible. Now, as the places are many which command vs to keepe the law: so is our weakenesse also in the Scriptures laid before vs, and therefore it is thus safely to bee vnderstood, that we should without cuasion, or without betraying of our selves, doe our faithfull indeuours to obserue them: which if we doe vnfainedly, no doubt, but God will accept our desires therein. For that there is no man iust, Dauid witnesseth. Enter not into indgement with thy servant, for in thy sight no slesh that liveth shall bee 50 suflified. And in the first of Kings, There is no man that sinnethnot: And againe, Who can say I have made my heart cleane? But seeing there is no sinne grieuous without deliberation; let euery mans conscience judge him, whether he give way willingly, or restraine himselse in all that he can; yea, or no? For when a King gives to his subject a commandement upon paine of loffe of his love, to performe some service : if the lablect neglecting the fame, feeke to fatisfie his Sourraigne with shifting excuses, out of doubt fuch a Prince will take himfelfe to be derided therein.

8. XIIII.

If there were not any Religion nor Judgement to come, yet the Decalogue were most necessarie to be observed.

Nd if we confider aduitedly and foberly, of the Morall law, or ten Commandements, which God by the hand of Moses gaue vnto his Commandements, which you by the mercifull proudence in the people, it will appeare that fuch was his mercifull proudence in the choise of them, as were there neither pains income profit adjoyned to the observing, or not observing of them, were there no divine power at all, nor any Religion among men, yet if we did not for our owne fakes striue to obferue these lawes; all societie of men, and all indeuours, all happinesse and contentment in this life would bee taken away: and enery state and common-weale in the world fall to the ground and diffolue. Therefore, these lawes were not imposed as a burthen, but as a bleffing : to the end that the innocent might bee defended, that 20 cuery man might enjoy the fruits of his owne trauaile, that right might be done to all men from all men; that by inflice, order, and peace, wee might live the lives of reasonable men, and not of beasts; of free-men, and not of slaues; of civill men, and not of faluages. And hereof making our humane reason only Judge, Let vs see the inconveniences in this life which would follow by the breach and neglect of these

As first, what would the iffue be if wee acknowledged many Gods? would not a farre greater harred, warre, and bloud-field follow, than that which the difference of ceremonie, and diversitie of interpretation, harh already brought into the world, euen among those Nations which acknowledge one God, and one Christ?

And what could it profit mankinde to pray to Idols, and Images of gold, mettall, dead fromes, and rotten wood, whence nothing can be hoped, but the loffe of time, and an impossibilitie to receive thence-from, either helpe or comfort.

The breach of the third Commandement bringeth there-with this disaduantage, and ill to man, that who foeuer taketh the name of God in vaine, shall not at any time benefit himselfe by calling God to witnesse for him, when hee may justly

The obleruing the Sabaoth holy, giveth reft to men and beafts, and nature her felfe requireth intermission of labour.

If we despise our Parents, who have given vs being, we thereby teach our owne children to scorne and neglect vs, when our aged yeares require comfort and helpe

If murther were not forbidden, and feuerely punished, the races of mankinde would be extinguished: and who soeuer would take the libertie to destroy others, grueth libertie to others to deftroy himselfe.

If adulterie were lawfull and permitted, no man could fay vnto himselfe, this is my fonne: there could be no inheritance proper, no honour descend to posteritie, no indeuour by vertue and vindertaking to raife families: murthers and poisonings betweene man and wife would be daily committed : and every man subject to most filthic and vircleane difeafes.

If stealth and violent rapine were suffered, all mankinde would shortly after perilh, or line as the faluages, by rootes and acornes. For no man laboureth but to enioy the fruits thereof. And flich is the mischiefe of robberie, as where Moses for leffer crimes appointed reflicution foure fold, policie of State and necessitie hath made it death.

Pfal.143. C.8.v.46. Pre.20.4.9.

To permit false witnesses, is to take all mens lives and estates from them by corruption: the wicked would sweare against the vertuous: the waster against the wealthie: the idle begger and loiterer, against the carefull and painefull labourer; all triall of right were taken away, and inflice thereby banished out of the world.

The coueting of that which belongs to other men, bringeth no other profit than a distraction of minde, with an inward vexation: for while wee couet what appertaines to others, we neglect our owne: our appetites are therein fed with vaine and fruitlesse hopes, so long as we doe but couet; and if we doe attaine to the desire of the one, or the other, to wit, the wines or goods of our neighbours, wee can looke for no other, but that our sclues shall also, either by theft or by strong hand, be de- 10 prined of our owne.

Wherein then appeareth the burthen of Gods Commandements, if there be nothing in them, but rules and directions for the generall and particular good of all liuing? Surely, for our owne good, and not in respect of himselfe, did the most mercifull and prouident God ordaine them; without the observation of which, the vertues of heavenly bodies, the fertilizie of the earth, with all the bleffings given vs in this life, would be vnto vs altogether vnprofitable, and of no vse. For wee should remaine but in the state of brute beasts, if not in a farre more vnhappie condition

δ. X V.

Of humane Law, written and unwritten.

Vmane Law, of which now it followeth to speake, is first divided into two, viz. Written, and Vnwritten. The vnwritten confifts of vlage, approued by time : which Isidore calls Mores : and hee defines Mores to be Consuctudines vietus are probate, to be customes approved by antiquitie or unwritten lawes. Now cultome differeth from vie, as the cause from the effect: in that custome is by vse and continuance established into a law: but yet 30 there where the law is defective, faith Isidore.

And of customes there are two generall natures, containing innumerable particulars, the first are written customes, received and exercised by Nations, as the cufromes of Burgundie, and Normandie: the ancient generall custome of England, and the customes of Castill, and other Provinces.

The second are these pettie customes, vsed in particular Places, Cities, Hundreds, and Mannors. The generall or Nationall customes are some written, others

The particular or pettie customes are seldome written, but witnessed by testimonie of the inhabitants. The customes of the Duchie of Cornewale comprehending 40 also the Stannerie of Deuon, as touching Tin, and Tin causes, are written in Deuon, but not in Cornewale. But how soeuer vse and time hath made these customes as lawes, In Reg. Imin.v.a yet ought euery custome to be rationabilis, as well as prascripta. Non firmatur tractu temporis quod de iure ab initio non subsistit; That which at first was not grounded upon good right, is not made good by continuance of time. And (faith V LPIAN) quod ab initio vitio sum est, non potest tractu temporis conualescere; Course of time amends not that which was naught from the first beginning. For these two defences are necessarie in all lawes of custome; the one, that it be not repugnant to the law divine, and naturall: the other, that the cause and reason be strong, prouing a right birth, and necessarie continuance: it being manifest that every custome, which is against the law, had his 50 beginning from euill deedes, and therefore not without the former confiderations to be allowed. And it is true, that all customes of this nature were but tollcrated for a time, by the law-makers, though they have beene since continued, because posteritie is not bound to examine by what cause their Ancestors were thereto mo-

ued. For non [u+ficit jimplex toleratio. And it is in this fort ouer-ruled in the law; Per populum consuctudo contra legem induci non potest, nist de voluntate illius qui nouam legem, & nouam constitutionem statuere potest, qui solus princeps est; The people cannot bring in a new custome, against law : saue by his will, who hath power to make a new law and ordinance, which is only the Prince.

Humane Law generally taken, to wit, humane Law written, is by some defined to be the decree or doome of practique reason: by which humane actions are ruled and directed. Papinian calls the Law a common precept; the adulement of Wifemen, and the restraint of offences committed, either willingly or ignorantly. Isidore to calls the Law a Constitution written, agreeing with Religion, fittest for Gouernement and common profit: And more largely, Omneid quod ratione confifit; All that stands with reason.

Lastly, and more precisely it is thus defined. Humane Law is a righteous decree, Greg. de Vales agreeing with the Law naturall, and eternall: made by the rationall discourse of Thodaga art.34 those, that exercise publique authoritie: prescribing necessarie observances to the subject. That every law ought to bee a righteous decree, S. Augustine teacheth, faying : Mihilex effe non videtur, que instanon fucrit ; It seemes to be no law at all to me, which is not iust : and iust it cannot be, except it agree with the law naturall and eternall. For there is no law instand legitimate (faith S. Augustine) which the Law-20 makers have not derived from the eternall. Nihil instrum atque legitimum eft, quod L.t. delib. Ath non ab aterna lege sibi homines derinauerint.

Secondly, it ought to be constituted by discourse of reason, whereby it is distinguilhed from the law naturall, to wit, the naturall, indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration from whence the law humane is taken and deduced.

Thirdly, that it ought to bee made by an authorised Magistracie, it cannot bee doubted, be the Gouernement of what kinde socuer. For it falleth otherwise vnder the Title of those decrees called Violentia, or iniqua constitutiones : Violences, or wicked constitutions.

Of humane Law there are foure properties, especially answering these foure A. Parts. 30 conditions in the former definition. First, as it is drawne out of the law of nature: fo every particular of the humane law may be refolued into some principle or rule Tho. 4.9.5. art. 4. of the naturall.

Secondly, it is to be considered as it is referred vnto, and doth respect the common good.

Thirdly, it is to be made by publique authoritie.

Fourthly, concerning the matter of the law it prescribeth, and directeth, all humane actions. And so is the Law as large and divers, as all humane actions are diuers, which may fall under it. For according to THOMAS, Alia lex IVLIA de Adulteris, alia CORNELIA de Sicarijs; Thelaw of IVLIAN against Adulterie is one, 40 the CORNELIAN against Ruffians, is another. Now the humane law, generally taken, is in respect of the first of these considerations, divided into the law of Nations, and the Civill. The Law of Nations is taken leffe or more properly; leffe properly for eucry law which is not of it felfe, but from other higher principles deduced : and so it seemeth that V. pian vnderstands it : for he defineth Ius gentium, or the Law of Nations, to be that which is only common amongst Men, as Religion, and the worship of God which is not in the very nature of this law of Nations : but from the principles of the Scriptures, and other divine Revelations. But the law of Nations properly taken, is that dictate, or sentence, which is drawne from a very probable, 50 though not from an euident principle, yet so probable that all Nations docaffent vn-

to the conclusion, as that the free passage of Ambassadours be granted betweene enemies,&c. which Nationall law according to divers acceptions, and divers confiderations had of the Humane law, may be sometime taken for a Species of the Naturall, fometime of the Humane.

Ius Civile, or the Civill Law, is not the same in all Common-wealths, but in diuers estates it is also divers and peculiar, and this law is not so immediately derived from the law of Nature, as the law of Nations is : For it is partly deduced out of fuch principles as all Nations doe not agree in, or casily affent vnto; because they depend on particular circumstances, which are divers, and doe not fit all estates. In Leg. 6. ta.ff. Hereof V L P I A N., Ius civile, neque intotum à natural & gentium recedit, neque per omde Iufinia Iure. nia ei seruit : itag, cum aliquid addimus vel detrahimus Iuri communi, Ius proprium, id est, Civile efficiences; The Civil law (faith he) doth neither wholly differ from the law of nature. and nations, nor yet in all points obay it : therefore, when we adde ought to , or take from the Law that is common, we make a Law proper, that is, the Civill Law.

The law now commonly called the Ciuill Law, had its birth in Rome: and was first written by the Decem-viri, 303. yeares after the foundation of the Citie. It was compounded as well out of the Atherian, and other Grecian lawes, as out of the ancient Romane customes and lawes Regall, The Regall lawes were denised by the first Kings, and called Leges Regia, or Papyriana, because they were gathered by Papyrius, Tarquin then raigning. For though so many of the former lawes as maintained Kingly authoritie were abolished, with the name : yet those of Servius Tullius, for Commerce and Contracts, and all that appertained to Religion, and common vtili-C. sigen. Lt. out tie, were continued, and were a part of the lawes of the twelve Tables. To these of Pomponius. lawes of the twelve Tables were added (as the times gaue occasion) those made by 20 the Senate, called Senatuf-confulta: those of the common people, called Plebifcita; those of the Lawyers, called restons a prudentum and the Edicts of the Annual Magistrate; which Edicts being first gathered and interpreted by Iulian, and presented to Adrian the Emperour, they were by him confirmed and made perpetuall lawes: and the Volume stilled Edictum perpetuum : as those and the like Collections of Justi-

The difference anciently between Lawes and Edicts, which the French call Regiements, confifted in this, that lawes are the Constitutions made or confirmed by soueraigne authoritie (be the soueraigntie in the people, in a few, or in one ) and are withall generall and permanent: but an Edict (which is but Inssum Magistratus, vn- 30 leffe by authoritic it be made a law) hath end with the officer, who made the fame, faith VARRO. Qui plurimum Edicto tribuunt, legem annuam esse dicunt; They who ascribe the most unto an Edict, say that it is a law for one yeare: Though Isidore doth also expresse by the word Constitutions or Edicts, those Ordinances called Acts of Prerogatiues: as Constitutio vel Edictumest quod Rex, vel Imperator constituit, vel edicit; An Ordinance or Edict is that which a King or Emperour doth ordaine or proclaime.

Lastly, the Humane law is divided into the Secular, and into the Ecclesiasticall, or Canon. The Secular commanding temporall good, to wit, the peace and tranquilitie of the Common-wealth: the Ecclefiasticall the spirituall good, and right Gouernement of the Ecclefiasticall Common-wealth, or Church, illud naturalegem, hoc divinam 40 spectat; That respecteth the Law of nature, this the law of God. And so may Ius Civile be taken two waies: first, as distinguished from the law of Nations, as in the first division: Secondly, as it is the same with the Secular, and divers from the Ecclesiasticall. But this division of the Schoolemen is obscure. For although the Civill be the same with the Secular, as the Civillis a law, yet the Secular is more generall, and comprehendeth both the Civill, and all other lawes not Ecclesiasticall. For of Secular lawes, in vse among Christian Princes, and in Christian Commonweales, there are three kinds; the Civill which hath everywhere a voice: and is in all Christian estates (Englandexcepted) most powerfull; the Lawes of England called Common, and the Lawes of custome or Provinciall. In Spaine besides the Law Civill, they have the customes of 50 Castill, and other Provinces. In France besides the Civill, the customes of Burgundie, Bloys, Berri, Niuernois, and Lodunois, Ge. Tous lieux fitues & asiis en Lodunois, seront gouernez selon les costumes du dit Pays; All places lying within the precincts of Lodunois, shall bee governed according to the customes of that place.

There are also in France the cultomes of Normandie, and these of two kindes: Generall, and Locall; and all purged and reformed by divers Acts of the three estates. The Charters of confirmation of these ancient cuitomes, before and since their reformation have these wordes. Nos autem, registrum pradictum, vsus laudabiles, & consuetudines artiquas, &c. Laudamus approbamus & authoritate Regia censirmamus: The Register as ore aid, laudable vsc, and ancient customes, we praise, approve, and by our Kingly authoritie confirme. The common law of England is also compounded of the ancient customes of the same, and of certaine Maximes by those customes of the Realme approued. Vpon which customes also are grounded those Courts of Record, of the Chancerie, Kings Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, with other small

These ancient customes of England have been approved by the Kings thereof, from age to age : as that custome by which no man shall be taken, imprisoned, disfeifed, nor otherwise destroied, but he must first be put to answere by the law of the land, was confirmed by the Statute of Magna Charta. It is by the ancient custome of England that the eldest Sonne should inherite without partition : In Germanie, France, and elsewhere otherwise; and by partition. In Ireland it is the custome for all lands (that have not beene refigned into the Kings hands) that the eldest of the house shall enjoy the inheritance during his owne life: and so the second and third 20 eldest (if there be so many brothers) before the Heire in lineall descent: this is called the custome of Tanistrie. For example, if a Lord of land have foure Sonnes, and the eldest of those four chaucalso a sonne, the three brothers of the eldest sonne, ihall after the death of their brother, enjoy their Fathers lands before the Grandchild: the custome being grounded vpon the reason of necessitie. For the Irish in former times having alwaies lived in a fubdivided Civill warre, not only the greatest against the greatest, but every Baron and Gentleman one against another, were inforst to leave fuccessors of age and abilitie to defend their owne Territories. Now as in Normandie, Burgundie, and other Provinces of France, there are certaine peculiar, and pettic customes, besides the great and generall custome of the land, so are there

30 in England, and in every part thereof. But the greatest bulke of our lawes, as I take it, are the Acts of Parliament: lawes propounded and approved by the three estates of the Realme, and confirmed by the King, to the obedience of which all men are therefore bound, because they are Acts of choise, and selfe desire. Leges nulla alia VIp. ff. de Leg. causanos tenent quam quod iudicio populi recepta sunt 3 The lawes doe therefore binde the Lis.32. Subject, because they are received by the indgement of the subject. Tum demum humana le- Aug deverareges habent vim suam; eum fuerint non modoinstitute, sed etiam firmate approbatione communitatis; It is then that humane lawes have their strength, when they shall not only bee de-dist. 4 cum in us (ed, but by the approbation of the people confirmed.

Isidore fasteneth these properties to every Christian law, that the same be honest, 40 that it be possible, that it be according to Nature, and according to the custome of the Countrie; also for the time and place convenient, profitable, and manifest, and without respect of private profit, that it be written for the generall good. Hee also giues foure effects of the law, which Modestinus comprehends in two: to wit, obligation, and instigation: the former binds vs by feare, to avoide vice: the later incourageth with hope, to follow vertue. For according to CICERO. Legem oportet effe vitiorum emendatricem, commendatricemá, virtutum; It behoueth the law to bee a mender of vices, and a commender of vertues. The part obligatorie or binding vs to the obseruation of things commanded or forbidden, is an effect common to all lawes; and it is two-fold, the one constraineth vs by feare of our consciences, the other by feare 50 of externall punishment. These two effects the law performeth, by the exercise of those two powers, to wit, Coactine, and Directine. The second of these two effects remembred by Modestinus, is Instigation, or incouragement to vertue, as Aristotle makes it the end of the law, to make men vertuous. For lawes being fuch as they ought to be, doe both by prescribing and forbidding, vrge vs to well-doing: laying before vs the good and the euill, by the one and the other purchased. And this power affirmative commanding good, and power negative forbidding euill, are those into which the law is divided, as touching the matter : and in which Dauid comprehendeth the whole body and fubstance thereof: saying, Declina a malo, & fac bonum; Decline from enill, and dee

That only the Prince is exempt from humane lawes, and in

Ow whether the power of the humane Law be without exception of any person, it is doubtfully disputed among those that have written of this subject, as well Diuines as Lawyers: and namely, whether Soucpowers of the law, as aforefaid, the one Directive, the other Coattive: to the power Directine, they ought to be subject, but not to that which constraineth.

For as touching violence or punishments, no man is bound to give a prejudiciall 10 iudgement against himselfe; and if equals have not any power over each other, much lesse have inferiours over their superiours, from whom they receive their authoritie and strength.

And speaking of the supreme power of lawes, simply then is the Prince so much aboue the lawes, as the foule and body vnited, is aboue a dead and fenfeleffe carcaffe. For the King is truly called, Ius viuum & lex animata; An animate and living law. But this is true, that by giving authoritie to lawes, Princes both adde greatnesse to themfelues, and conserue it, and therefore was it said of Bracton out of Ivstinian. Merito debet Rex tribuere legi, quod lex attribuit ei : nam lex facit vt ipfe fit Rex; Rightfully ought the King to attribute that to the law, which the law first attributeth to the King, for it is the 20 law that doth make Kings.

But whereas Bracton ascribeth this power to the humane law, he is therein mistaken. For Kings are made by God, and lawes divine : and by humane lawes only declared to be Kings. As for the places remembred by the Diuines and Lawiers, which inferre a kinde of obligation of Princes, they teach no other thing therein, than the bond of conscience, and profit arising from the examples of vertuous Princes, who are to give an accompt of their actions to God only.

Tibi soli peccaui, faith DAVID; Against thee only have I sinned: therefore, the Prince cannot be faid to be fubicet to the law. Princeps non Subjectur legi; For feeing according to the Schoolemen, the law humane is but quoddam organum & instrumen- 40 tum potestatis gubernatiua: non videtur posse eius obligatio ad eum se extendere, ad quem ipsavis potestatis humana non pertinet : sed vis potestatis humananon se extendit ad gubernatorem, in quo illa refidet. Ergo neg, lex condita per talem potestatem obligare potest ipsum conditorem. Omnis enim potentia actiua, est principium transmutandi aliud; Seeing humane law (say they) is but a kinde of organ, or instrument, of the power that governeth, it seemes that it cannot extend it selfe to binde any one whom no humane power can controll, or lay hold off: but the governour himselfe, in whom the governing power dothreside, is a person that cannot by himselfe, or by his owne power becontrolled. And therefore the law which is made by such a power, cannot binde the law-maker himselfe : for every active abilitie is a cause or principle of alteration in another body, not in the body in which it selfere- 50 fides. And feeing Princes have power to deliver others from the obligation of the Brez de Valen- law : Ergo etiam potest insemet Princeps sine legislator sua se voluntate pro libito ab obligatione legis liberare; Therefore also may a Prince or law-maker at his owne will and pleasure deliner himselfe from the bond of the law. Therefore in the rules of the law it is thus concluded. Subditi tenentur leges observare necessitate coactionis, Princeps verò sola voluntate sua. & intuitu boni communis; The subjects are bound to fulfill the law by necessitie of compulsion, but the Prince only by his owne will, and regard of the common good.

Now concerning the politique lawes, given by Moles to the Nation of the Ifraclites, whether they ought to be a President, from which no civill institutions of other people should prefume to digresse, I will not presume to determine, but leave it as a queition for such men to decide, whose professions give them greater abilitie. Thus much I may be bold to affirme, that we ought not to feeme wifer than God himfelte,

10 who hath told vs that there are no lawes so righteous, as those which it pleased him to give to his Elect people to be governed by. True it is, that all Nations have their seuerall qualities, wherein they differ, euen from their next borderers, no lesse than in their peculiar languages: which disagreeable conditions to gouerne aprly; one and the same law very hardly were able. The Roman civill lawes did indeede containe in order, a great part of the then knowne world, without any notable inconvenience, after fuch time as once it was received and become familiar: yet was not the administration of it alike in all parts, but yeelded much vnto the naturall customes of the fundrie people, which it gouerned. For whether it be through a long continued perswasion; or (as Aftrologers more willingly grant) some in-

20 fluence of the Heauens; or peraduenture some temper of the soile and climate, affoording matter of prouocation to vice (as plentie made the Sybarites luxurious: want and opportunitie to steale, makes the Arabians to bee Theenes) very hard it were to forbid by law, an offence so common, with any people, as it wanted a name, whereby to be distinguished from iust and honest. By such rigour was the Kingdome of Congo vnhappily discreted from the Christian Religion, which it willingly at the first embraced, but after with great furie rejected, because pluralitie of Wiues was denied vnto them, I know not how necessarily, but more contentiously than seasonably. In such cases, mee thinks, it were not amisse to consider, that the high God himselfe permitted somethings to the Israelites, rather in re-

20 gard of their naturall disposition (for they were hard-hearted) than because they were consonant vnto the ancient rules of the first persection. So, where even the generall nature of man doth condemne (as many things it doth) for wicked and vniust; there may the law, given by Moses, worthily be deemed the most exact reformer of the euill, which forceth man, as neare as may bee, to the will and pleasure of his Maker. But where nature or custome hath entertained, a vicious, yet not intollerable habite, with folong and fo publique approbation, that the vertue oppoling it, would feeme as vincouth, as it were to walke naked in England, or to weare the English fashion of apparell in Turkie: there may a wife and vpright Law-giner, without prefumption, omit somewhat that the rigour of Moses his law required;

rie: which praier the Lord heard and granted.

To this effect it is well observed by Master Doctor Willet, that the morall Judicialls of Moles doe partly binde, and partly are let free. They doe not hold affirmatiuely that we are tied to the same severitie of punishment now, which was inflicted then; but negatively they doe hold, that now the punishment of death should not be adjudged, where sentence of death is not given by Moses: Christian 50 Magistrates ruling under Christ the Prince of peace, that is, of Clemencie and Mer- 1316. cie, may abate of the scueritic of Moses law, and mitigate the punishment of death.

but they cannot adde vnto it to make the burden more heauie; for to shew more rigour than Mofes, becommeth not the Goffell.

CHAP. V.

The Storie of the Ifraelites from the receiving of the Law, to the death of Moses.

Of the numbring and disposing of the Host of Israel, for their marches through the Wildernesse; with a note of the reuerence giuen to the worship of God, in this ordering of their troupes.

HEN Moses had received the law from God, and published it among the people, and finished the tabernacle of the Arke and Sankinare; hee mustered all the Tribes and Families of Israel: and having seen what numbers of men, fit to beare armes, were sound in every Tribe, from 20. yeares of age vpwards; hee appointed vnto them, by direction from the Lord, such Princes and Leaders, as in worth and reputation were in every Tribe most eminent. The number of the whole armie was 603550 able men for the warres, besides women and children; also, besides the strangers which followed them out of Egypt. This great Armie was divided by Moses into foure 30 groffe and mightie Battalions, each of which contained the strength of three whole Tribes.

The first of these containing 186400. able men, consisted of three Regiments, which may well, in respect of their numbers, bee called Armies; as containing the three whole Tribes of sudah, ssachat, made Zabulon. In the Tribe of sudah were 74600 fighting men, led by Nasson: in Sabulon 57400 led by Eliab. All these marched vinder the Standard of the Tribe of sudah, who held the Vantguard, and was the first that moued and marched, being lodged and quartered at their generall incamping on the East side of the Armie; which was held the first place, and of greatest dignitie.

40 The second Battalion or Armie, called in the Scriptures the Host of Reuben, had ioyned vnto it Simeon and Gad, in number 151450. All which marched vnder the Standard of Reuben. In the Tribe of Reuben were 46500. vnder Είπεων: in Simeon 59300. vnder Shelumiel: in Gad 45650. vnder Eliasuph. These had the second place, and incamped on the South side of the Tabernacle.

The third Armie marched under the Standard of Ephraim, to whom were joyned the Regiments of Manasse and Beniamin; who, joyned together, made in number 108100. able men. These marched in the third place, incamping on the West quarter of the Tabernacle. Ephraim had 40500 under Elishama: Manasse 32000 under Gamliel: Beniamin 35400 under Abidam.

The fourth and last Armie, or Squadron, of the generall Armie, containing 157600 able men marched vnder the Standard of Dan; to whom were joyned the two Tribes of Nephtali and Alber. And these had the Rereward, and moued last, incamping on the North side. Dan had 62700 vnder Ahiezer: Asper 41500 vnder Pagiel: Nephtali 53400 vnder Ahira.

Belide

Belides these Princes of the seuerall Tribes, there were ordained Captaines ouer Thousands, ouer Hundreds, ouer Fifties, and ouer Tens; as it may appeare by that mutinie and insurrection against Moses, Numb. 16. v. 1. & 2. For there arose vp against Moses 250. Captaines of the Assembly, famous in the Congregation, and men of renowne: of which number were Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Which three principall Mutiners, with those 250. Captaines that followed them, were not any of the twelue Princes of the Tribes, or Generall Colonells before spoken of, as by their names Num. 1. is made manifest.

The bleffing which Israel gaue to his children, tooke place not only in the divifion of the Land of promile, and other things of more consequence, long after fol- 10 lowing; but even in forting them under their feuerall Standards in the wildernesse it was observed. For Iudah had the precedencie and the greatest Armie, which also was wholly compounded of the fonnes of Lea, Iacobs wife. Reuben having loft his birth-right, followed in the second place, accompanied with his brother Simeon, who had vidergone his Fathers curse; and with Gad, the sonne of his Mothers Hand-maide. Iofeph, who in temporall bleffings had the prerogative of the first borne a double portion, was accounted as two Tribes, and divided into two Regiments: the yonger (according to Iasobs prophecie) taking place before the Elder. He was affifted by Beniamin, his best beloued brother, the other sonne of Rachel. To Dan, the eldest sonne of Jacobs Concubines, was given the leading of the fourth Ar- 20 mie, according to Iacobs prophecie. Hee had with him under his Standard none of the children of Lea, or Rachel, but only the sonnes of the Hand-maides.

In the middle of these foure Armies, was the Tabernacle, or portable Temple of the Congregation carried, fur-rounded by the Leuites. Neare vnto which, as the Heathens and Pagans could not approch, by reason of these source powerfull Armies, which guarded the same: so was it death for any of the children of Israel to come nearest, who were not of the Leuites, to whom the charge was committed. So facred was the moueable Temple of God, and with fuch reverence guarded and transported, as 22000. persons were dedicated to the seruice and attendance thereof: of which 8,80. had the peculiar charge, according to their seuerall offices and 30 functions; the particulars whereof are written in the third and fourth of Numbers. And as the Armies of the people observed the former order in their incampings: so did the Leuites quarter themselves, as in an inner square, on every side of the Tabernacle; The Geshurites on the West, within the Armie, and Standard of Ephraim, ouer whom Eliasaph commanded, in number 7500. The familie of Cohath on the South fide, guided by Elizaphan, within the Armie of Reuben, and betweene him and the Tabernacle, in number 8600. The third companie were of the familie of Merari, ouer whom Zuriel commanded, in number 6200 and these were lodged on the North side within the Armie of Dan; On the East side, and next within those Tribes and Forces which Iudah led, did Moses and Aaron lodge, and their chil-40 dren, who were the first and immediate Commanders, both of the Ceremonies and of the People; vnder whom, as the chiefe of all the other Leuticall families, was Eleazar the sonne of Aaron, his successour in the high Priest-hood.

This was the order of the Armie of Ifrael, and of their incamping and marching: the Tabernacle of God being alway set in the middle and center thereof. Thereuerend care, which Moses the Prophet and chosen servant of God, had in all that belonged euen to the outward and least parts of the Tabernacle, Arke and Sanctuarie, witneffed well the inward and most humble zeale borne towards God himselfe. The industrie vsed in the framing thereof, and eueric, and the least part thereof; the curious workmanship thereon bestowed; the exceeding charge and expence in 50 the provisions; the dutifull observance in the laying vp and preserving the holic Veffels; the folemne remouing thereof; the vigilant attendance thereon, and the provident defence of the same, which all Ages have in some degree imitated, is now so forgotten and cast away in this super-sine Age, by those of the Familie, by the Anabaptist, Brownist, and other Sectaries, as all cost and care bestowed and had of the Church, wherein God is to be serued and worshipped, is accounted a kinde of Poperie, and as proceeding from an idolatrous disposition: insomuch as Time would soone bring to passe (if it were not resisted) that God would be turned out of Churthes into Barnes, and from thence againe into the Fields and Mountaines, and vnder the Hedges; and the Offices of the Ministerie (robbed of all dignitie and respect) be as contemptible as these places; all Order, Discipline, and Church-Gouernement, left to newnesse of opinion and mens fancies: yea, and soone after, as many kindes of Religions would spring vp, as there are Parish-Churches within England: 10 enery contentious and ignorant person clothing his fancie with the Spirit of God, and his imagination with the gift of Revelation; infomuch as when the Truth, which is but one, shall appeare to the simple multitude, no lesse variable than contrarie to it selfe, the Faith of men will soone after die away by degrees, and all Religion bee held in scorne and contempt. The offerings of the twelve Princes: The Passeover of the second yeare: The departing of IETHRO.

🛪 Ow when Moses had taken order for all things necessarie, provided for the feruice of God, written the Lawes, numbred his Armie, and diuided them into the battailes and troupes before remembred, and appointed them Leaders of all forts: The twelue Princes or Commanders of the Tribes, brought their offerings before the Lord, to wit, Num. 6. fixe couered Chariots, and twelve Oxen to draw them, therein to transport, as they marched, the parts of the Tabornacle, with all that belonged thereunto: the San- The Hebrewé ctuarie excepted; which for reverence was carried upon the shoulders of the sonnes Gerah waighof Korah, to whom the charge was committed; and the Chariots in which was conucied the other parts of the Tabernacles and Veffels thereto belonging, were deli- Gerals of filuer

the Armie, or great squadron of Iuda, led by Nashon, taking the Vantguard, followed by Nethaneel, and Eliab, Leaders of the Tribes of Islachar and Zabulon: after whom the rest marched as in the figure exprest. And because the passage through fo many Defarts and Mountaines, was exceeding difficult: Moses leaving nothing vnforethought which might serve for the advancement of his enterprize, he instantly intreated his Father-in-law, whom in the tenth of Numbers he calleth Hobab, to accompanie them in their journey towards Canaan: promising him such part and profit of the enterprize, as God should bestow on them: for this man as hee was of great vnderstanding and judgement (as appeared by the counsaile he gaue to Moles for the appointing of Judges ouer the people) so was he a perfect guide in all those 10 parts, himselfe inhabiting on the frontier thereof, at Midian or Madian: and (as it scemeth) a man of great yeares and experience, for he was then the Priest or Prince of Madian, when Moses fled first out of Agypt, and married his Daughter: which was 42. yeares before this request made. And though Moles himselfe had lived 40. yeares in these parts of Arabia, through which he was now to trauaile : yet the better to affure his paffage, and so great a multitude of soules, which could not bee so few as a Million: it was necessarie to vse many guides and many conducters. To this request of Moses it may seeme by the places, Exod. 18.27. and Num. 10.30. that lethro, otherwise called Hobab, yeelded not : for it is evident that he went backe from Indic. 1.16. 64 Moses into his owne Countrie. The voiage from Horeb to Kades: the mutinies by the way: and the cause of their turning backe to the red Sea.

Fter this dismission of Hobab, Ifrael beganne to march towards the Defarts of Paran: and after three daies wandring, they sate downeat the Sepulchers of lust, afterward called Tabeera, or Incensio: by reason that God confumed with fire those Mutiners and Murmurers, which rose vp in this remoue, which happened about the 23.day of the same Mo-neth. And from this 23. day of the second moneth, of the second yeare, they rested and fed themselues with Quailes (which it pleased God by a Sea-wind to cast vpon them) to the 24. day of the third moneth, to wit, all the moneth of Sman or Iune: whereof furfaiting there died great numbers: from whence in the following moneth, called Thamus, answering to our July, they went on to Hazeroth: where Miriam 40 the lifter of Moses was stricken with the leaprosie, which continued upon her seuen daies, after whose recouerie I/rael removed toward the border of Idumaa: and incamped at Rithma, neare Kades Barnea, from whence Moses sent the twelve discoverers into the Territorie of Canaan: both to informe themselues of the fertilitie and strength of the Countrie: as also to take knowledge of the Waies, Passages, Rivers, Fords, and Mountaines. For Arad King of the Canaanites surprised divers companics of the Israelites, by lying in ambush neare those waies: through which the difcouerers and searchers of the Land had formerly past. Now, after the returne of the discouerers of Cades, the wrath of God was turned against Israel; whose ingratitude and rebellion after his fo many benefits, fo many remiffions, fo many mira-50 cles wrought, was such, as they esteemed their deliuerance from the Agyptian slaucrie, his feeding them, and conducting them through that great and terrible Wildernesse ( for so Moses callethit ) with the victorie which hee gaue them against the powerfull Amalekites, to be no other than the effects of his hatred, thinking that hee led them on and preserved them, but to bring them, their wives, and children to be flaughtered, and given for a prey and spoile to the Amorites or Canaanites. For it was reported vnto them, by the fearthers of the Land, That the Cities of their enemies were walled and defended with many strong Towers, and Castles: that many of the people were Giantlike (for they confest that they saw the sonnes of Anac there) who were men of fearefull stature, and so farre over-topped the Ifraelites, as they appeared to them, and to themselves, but as Grashoppers in their respect. Now as this mutinie exceeded all the rest, wherein they both accused God, and consulted to choose them a Captaine (or as they call it now-a-daies, an Electo) to carrie them backe againe into Agypt: so did God punish the same in a greater measure, than any of the former. For he extinguished every soule of the whole multitude (10/11a and Caleb excepted) who being confident in Gods promifes, perswaded the people to enter Canaan, being then neare it, and at the mountaine foote of Idumea: which is but narrow, laying before them the fertilitie thereof: and affuring them of victorie. But as men, whom the passion of feare had bereaued both of reason and common sense: they threatned to stone these encouragers to death: accounting them as Num.14.10; men either desperate in themselues, or betraiers of the liues, goods, and children of all their bretheren, to their enemies, but God relifted these wicked purposes, and interpoling the feare of his bright glorie betweene the vnaduiled furie of the multi-20 tude, and the innocencie and constancie of his servants, preserved them thereby from their violence: threatning an intire destruction of the whole Nation, by sending among them a confuming and mercilesse pestilence. For this was the tenth in- wante, with furrection and rebellion, which they had made, fince God deliucred them from the flauerie of the Agyptians. But Moses (the mildest or meekest of all men) praied vnto Num.12. 0.3. God to remember his infinite mercies: alleadging that this fo seuere a judgement, how deservedly soeuer inflicted, would increase the pride of the Heathen Nations: and give them occasion to vaunt that the God of Ifrael failing in power to performe his promises, suffered them to perish in these barren and fruitlesse Desarts. Yet as God is no leffe just than mercifull, as God is flow to anger, so is his wrath a consuming 30 fire: the same being once kindled by the violent breath of mans ingratitude : and therefore, as with a hand leffe heavie than hoped for, he fourged this iniquitie, fo by the measure of his glorie (euermore jealous of neglect and derision) hee suffered not the wicked to passe vnpunished; referuing his compassion for the innocent: whom, because they participated not with the offences of their Fathers, hee was pleased to preserue, and in them to performe his promises, which have never beene frustrate.

IIII.

Of their unwilling neffe to returne : with the punishment thereof, and of divers accidents in the returne.

Ow when Moses had reueiled the purposes of God to the people: and made them know his heavie displeasure towards them : they beganne to bewaile themselves, though over-late; the times of grace and mens repentance, having also their appointment. And then when God had left them to themselues, and was no more among them, after they had so often plaid and dallied with his mercifull sufferings, They would needes amend their former disobedience by a second contempt: and make offer to enter the Land contrarie agains to the aduise of Moles : who affured them, 50 that God was not now among them: and that the Arke of his couenant should not moue, but by his direction, who could not erre: and that the enemies fword which God had hitherto bended and rebated, was now left no leffe sharpe than death: and in the handes of the Amalekites, and Canaanites no leffe cruell. But as men from whom God hath with-drawne his grace, doe alwaies follow those counsells which carrie them to their owne destructions: so the Hebrewes after they had for saken the opportunitie by God and their Conductors offered : and might then have entred Indea before their enemies were prepared and joyned : did afterward, contrarie to Gods commaundement, vndertake the enterprise of themselues; and ranne headlone and without adulfe into the mountaines of Idumaa. There the Canaanites and the Amalekites being joyned and attending their advantage, fet on them, brake them. and of their numbers flaughtered the greatest part : and following their victoric and pursuite, consumed them all the way of their flight euen vnto Hormah : the Amalekites in reuenge of their former loffe, and ouerthrowe at Raphidim: the Canaanites to preuent their displantation and destruction threatned. Of which power- 10 full affemblie of those two Nations (affisted in all likelihood with the neighbour Kings ioyned together for their common safetie) it pleased God to forewarne Mofes, and to direct him another way, than that formerly intended. For hec commaunded him to returne by those painefull passages of the deserts, through which they had formerly trauelled, till they found the bankes of the red Sea againe : in which retraite before they came backe to passe ouer Iordan there were consumed 38. yeares: and the whole number of the fixe hundreth and odde thousand, which came out of Agypt (Moses Ioshua and Caleb excepted) were dead in the Wildernesse, the stubborne and carelesse generations were wholy worne out, and the promised Land bestowed on their children : which were increased to 600000. and 20 more. For belides the double fault both of refuling to enter the Land upon the returne of the discouerers, and the presumption then to attempt it, when they were countermaunded: it feemeth that they had committed that horrible Idolatry of worshipping Moloch, and the Host of heaven. For although Moles doth not mention it, yet Amos doth, and so doth the Martyr Stephen; as also that the Israelites worshipped the Sunne and Moone in after-times it is proued out of fundrie

Now after the broken companies were returned to the Campe at Cades, Moles, according to the commaundement received from God, departed towards the South from whence he came, to recouer the shoares of the Red Sea. And so from 30 Cades or Rithma he removed to Remmonparez, fo called of abundance of Pomegranates there found and divided among them. From thence hee went on to Librah. taking that name of the frankincense there found. From Librah hee crost the valley, and fate downe at Ressa neare the foot of the mountaine. And after he had rested there, he bended towards the West, and incamped at Ceelata: where one of the Hebrewes, for gathering broken wood on the Sabaoth, was stoned to death. After which, Moses alwaies keeping thevalley, between two great ledges of mountaines (those which bound the Desert of Sin, and those of Pharan) crost the same from Ceelata; and marched Eastward to the mountaine of Sapher, or Sepher: this making the Twentieth mansion. From thence hee passed on to Harada; then to Maceloth; 40 and then to Thahah; and so to Thara or Thare: the foure & twentieth mansion. Where while Moses rested, the people began that insolent and dangerous mutinic, of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram: who for their contempt of God and his Ministers were some of them swallowed vp aliue, and by the earth opening her mouth deuoured, others euen two hundred and fiftie which offered incense with Korah were consumed with fire from heaven; & 14700. of their partie, which murmured against Moses, stricken dead with a sudden pestilence : one of the greatest meruailes and judgements of God, that hath beene shewed in all the time of Moses his gouernment, or before. For among so great a multitude, those lay-men who would have vsurped Ecclesiasticall authoritie, were suddenly swallowed vp aliue into the earth with their fami- 50 lies and goods; even while they fought to overthrowe the Order, Discipline, and power of the Church, and to make all men alike therein, rebelliously contending against the High Priest and Magistrate, to whom God had committed the gonernment both of his Church and Common-weale of his people. And the bet-terto assure the people, and out of his great mercie to confirme them, it pleased him in this place also to approue by miracle the former election of his servant Auron, by the twelue roddes given in by the Heads of the twelue Tribes; of which Moses received one of enery Head and Prince of his Tribe: which being all withered and drie Wands, and on enery rod the name of the Prince of the Tribe written, and Aarons on that of Leui; it pleased God, that the rod of Jaron received by his power a vegetable Spirit, and having laine in the Tabernacle of the Congregation before the Arke one night, had on it both Buds, Bloffomes, and ripe Al-

10 From Tharab the whole Armic removed to Methra; and thence to Elmona; and thence to Moseroth, (or Masurit after S. Hierome) and from Moseroth to Beneiacan; and so to Gadgad, which therome calleth Gadgada; thence to tetabata, the thirtieth Mansion; where from certain fountaines of water gathered in one, Adrichomius maketh a River, which falleth into the Red Sea, betweene Madian and Asiongaber.

Now although it be very probable, that at Asiongaber, where Salomon furnished his Fleets for the East India, there was store of fresh water; and though Herodotus Halls. maketh mention of a great River, in Arabiathe Stonie, which he calleth Corrs, from whence (faith he) the Inhabitants conneigh water in pipes of leather to other places, by which deuice the King of Arabia relieued the Armie of Cambyles: yet is A-20 drichomius greatly deceived as many times lie is, in finding these springs at Gadgad, or Ietabata, being the nine and twentieth or thirtieth Maniion. For it was at Punon, that those springs are spoken off, which in Dent. the 10.2.7. is also called letabata, or Iotbath, a Land of running waters, and which by all probabilitie fall into the Riuer Zared, the next adioyning. And that these springs should fall into the Red Sea at Asiongaber, or Eloth, I cannot beleeue, for the way is very long. And this I finde in Belonius, that there are divers Torrents of fresh water in those sandie parts of Arabia: which though they continue their course for a few miles, yet they are drunke up by the hot and thirstie fand, before they can recouer the bankes of the Red Sea.

From Ietabata, Moses directed his journey towards the Red Sea, and incamped at Hebrona; and from thence to Estongaber: which Citie in Iosephias time had the name of Berenice; and in Hieromes Essa. From thence keeping the Sea, and Eloth on his right hand, he turned towards the North; as he was by God commanded: Estorigaber Down. being the farthest place towards the South-east; that Moses transiled in that passage.

It feemeth that Estongaber or Astongaber, Estothand Madian were not at this time in the possession of the Kings of Edom. For it is Raid, That the Lord Spake wate Moses Numero, wis and AARON in the Mount Hor, neare the coast of the Land of Edom; so as the Mount Hor was at this time in the South border of Idumea. And if Effongaber, and the other places neare the Red Sea, had at this present beene subject to the Idumaans, Mo-40 ses would also have demanded a free passage through them. It is true, that in the fuiture the Idumans obtained those places : for it is said. And they grose out of Midian, 1. King 11.16. and came to Paran, and tooke men with them; which were those companies that followed yong Adad of Idumas into Ægipt, when he fled from Isab. Likewife it is faid of Salomon, that he made a nauie of ships in Esiongaber besides Eloth, in the Land of Edom.

And at this Citie of Cades (for so it was thought to be) or neare it, died Miriam or Marie, Moles fifter, whose Sepulcher was to bee scene in Saint Hieromes time, as himselfe auoweth. From hence ere they departed to the Mountaine Hor, all the people murmured most violently against Moles, by reason of the scarcitic of water. For neither the punishments by fire from Heauen: by being deuoured and swallowed vp by the earth, by the suddaine pestilence which often feifed them; nor any miracle formerly shewing, either the loue or wrath of God, could preuaile with this Nation any longer, than while they were full fed and fatisfied in every of their appetites: but in stead of seeking for helpe and reliefe at Gods hands, when they fuffered hunger, thirst, or any other want, they mur- 10 mured, repined, and rebelled, repenting them of their changed estates, and casting vngratefully on Moles all their miladuentures; yea though they well knew that their owne Fathers had left their bodies in the Deferts, and that they were now entred into the fortieth yeare, wherein all their miseries were to take end. And being, as it were, in fight of the Land promised, they againe as obstinately tempted God as in former times, and neither trusted his promises, nor feared his indignation. But as the will and purposes of God are without beginning; so his mercies being without end; he commanded Moses to strike a Rocke adjoyning with his rod; and the waters iffued out in a great abundance, with which both themselues and their cattaile were fatisfied. Neuerthelesse, because God perceived a kinde of diffidence both in 20 Moles and Aaron, at this place": therefore he permitted neither of them to enter the Land promifed, whereto perchance their worldly defires might inuite them. But it pleased him to end the trausiles of Aaron at the Mountaine Hor, being the next, and foure and thirtieth Station. At which Mountaine of Hor, Jaron was despoiled of the Garments of his Priest-hood, and the same put on Eleazar his

Some there are 30 which make Mofera, which was the seuen and twentieth Mansion; and Mofera which they write Moferoth for difference, which was the foure and thirtieth Manfion, and is also called Hor, to be two distinct places : because Moses in passing from Cadesbarne towards Eliongaher, incamped at Molera, after he departed from Helmona, and before he came to Beniagean. And this Mosera, which is also called Hor, he came vnto after he left Cades, where Miriam, Moses sister died; the first being the feuen and twentieth, and the fecond being the foure and thirtieth Mansion. But for Hor, which is also called Mosera, it should have beene written, Hor iuxta Mosera; Hor neare Mosera: for it is but one roote of a Mountaine, divided into divers tops, as Sinai and Horebare: whereof the West part Moses calleth Mosera, and the East 40 part Horeb. By the West part Moses incamped, as he past towards the Red Sea, on his left hand; by the East part, as hee went backe againe North-wards towards Moab : as in the description of Moses his passage through Arabia, the Reader may perceiue.

Now it was from Cades, before they came to Hor, because Hor belonged to Edom, that Moles sent Messengers to the Prince of Idumaa, praying him that hee might passe with the people of Israel through his Territorie into the Land of Canaan, which bordered it. For it was the nearest way of all other from the Citie of Kadelb, where Moles then incamped; whereas otherwise taking his iourney by the Rivers of Zared, Arnon, and Iordan, hee might have runne into many hazards 50 in the passage of those Rivers, the farre way about, and the many powerfull Kings, which commaunded in those Regions. Now the better to perswade the Prince of Idames hereinto, Moles remembred him, that he was of the same race and familie with Ifrael: calling him by the name of Brother, because both the

Edomites and Ifraelites were the Sonnes of one Father, to wit, Ifaac; inferring thereby, that hee had more reason to favour and respect them, than hee had to affait the Canaantes; against whom Efau his Ancester had made warre, and drinen out the Horites (who were of their ancient races descended of Cham) out of the Region of Seir, calling it by his owne name Edom, or Edumaa. Hee also making a thort repetition of Gods bleffings bestowed on them, and of his purpoles and promiles; affured Edom, or the King thereof, that hee would no way offend his people, or walte his Countrie, but that hee would restraine his Armie within the bounds of the Common, and Kings high waies, paying money for 10 whatsoeuer he vsed, yea euen for the water, which themselues or their Cattaile should drinke. For Moses was commanded by God not to prouoke the children of E/au. But the King of Edumaa knowing the strength of his owne Countrie, Dent. 2.4. the same being neare Canaan, rampard with high and sharpe mountaines: and with all suspecting, as a natural wise man; that 600000 strangers being once entred his Countrie, it would rest in their wills to give him law, resolvedly refused them pasfage, and deliucred this answere to the Messengers: That, if they attempted to en- Num.20.20.20 ter that way, he would take them for enemies, and refift them by all possible means. 21. And not knowing whether such a deniall might satisfie or exasperate, hee gathered the strength of his countrie together, and showed himselfe prepared to defend their 20 paffage. For as it is written : Then E D O M came out against him (to wit, Moses) with Numero, much people, and with a mightie power. Whereupon Moles considering, that the end of his enterprise was not the conquest of Seir or Eduman, and that the Land promifed was that of Canaan: like vnto himfelfe, who was of a naturall vnderstanding the greatest of any man, and the skilfullest man of warre that the world had, he refused to aduenture the Armie of ifrael against a Nation, which being ouer-come, gaue but

E therefore leaving the way of Idumea, turned himselfe towards the East, and marched towards the Deferts of Moab. Which when Arad King of the Canaanites understood, and that Mofes had blanched the way of Edumea; and knowing that it was Canaan, and not Edom, which If rael aimed at, he thought it fafeft, rather to finde his enemies in his neighbours Countrie, than to be found by them in his owne: which he might have done with a farre greater hope of victorie, had Moses beene enforst first to have made his way by the fword through Idumea, and thereby, though victorious, greatly haue lessened his numbers. But although it fell out otherwise than Arad hoped for, yet being refolued to make triall, what courage the Ifraelites brought with them out of Agypt, before they came nearer his owne home, leading the strength of his Nation to the edge of the Defert, he set vpon some part of the Armie; which, for the multitude, occupied a great space, and for the many heards of Cattle that they 50 draue with them, could not incampe so neare together, but that some quarter or other was cuer-more subject to surprise. By which advantage, and in that his attempts were then perchance vnexpected, he flew some few of the Israelites, and carried with him many prisoners.

ioyned his forces with the Amalekites, and gaue an ouerthrow to those mutinous Israelites, which without direction from God by Moses would haue entred Canacan from Cadesbarne. For it seemeth that the greatest number of that Armie were of the Canaanites, because in the first of Deuter. 44 the Amarites are named alone without the Amalekites, and are said to haue beaten the Israelites at that time. And this Anad, if he were the same that had a victoric ouer Israel, neare Cadesbarne, or if it were his Predecessor that then prevailed, this man finding that Moses was returned from the Red Sea, and in his way towards Canaan, and that the South part of Canaan was first to be inuaded, and in danger of being conquered, not knowing of Moses purpose to compassife Moses, determined while he was yet in the Desert to trie to the quarrell. And whereas it followeth in the third verse of the twelfth chapter of Numbers, that the Israelites tetrely destroied the Canaanites and their Cities, they are much mistaken that thinke, that this destruction was presently performed by the streatines. But it is to be vinderstood, to have been done in the future, to wit, in the hee would not have fallen backe againe into the Deferts of Zin and Moab, and Againe, Horma (for so farre the Israelites after their victorie pursued the Camanites) is seated in the South of Indea. There is also a Citic of that name in Simon, But there is no such placeto the South of Edom. And were there no other argument, but the mutinie which followed presently after the repetition of this victorie, it were enough to proue, that the same was obtained in the future, and in Iosua his time, and not at the instant of Arads assaulted for had the Israelites at this time 30 fackt the Cities of Arad, they would not the next day haue complained for want of water and bread. For where there are great Cities, there is also water, and bread. But it was in the time of Iosua, that the Israelites tooke their reuenge, and after they had past Iordan: Iosua then gouerning them; who in the twelfth Chapter and fourteenth Verse, nameth this Arad by the name of his Citie so called; and with him the King of Horma: to which place the Israelites pursued the Cananites. And hee nameth them amongst those Kings, which hee vanquished and put to death.

Now after this affault and furprife by Anal, Mose sinding that all entrance on that side was defended, he led the people Eastward to compasse Identage and the 4p Dead Ses, and to make his entrance by Annon and the Plaines of Mosb, at that time in the possession of the Annonies. But the Israelites, to whom the very name of a Desert was terrible, beganne againe to rebell against their Leader; till God by a multitude of fire Serpents, (that is, by the biting of Serpents, whose venome inflamed them, and burnt them as fire) made them know their errour, and afterward, according to his plentifull grace cured them againe by their beholding an artificiall Serpent, by his Commandement set vp.

From the Mount Hor, Moses leauing the ordinarie way which lieth betweene the Red Sea, and Caelefyria, incamped at Zahmona: and thence hee remoued to Phunon, where hee erected the Brasen Serpent; making these iournies by the codes of Edumea, but without it. For Phunon was sometime a principall Citie of the Edomites. Now where it is written in Numbers 21. Vers. 4. That from Mount Hor they departed by the way of the Red Sea, which grieved the people, it was not thereby meant that the Israelius turned backe towards the Red Sea;

neither did they march (according to Fonseca) per viam, que hatet a lateremare rubrum; By the way that fided the Red Sea, but indeed e they croft, and went athwart the common way from Galaad, Trachonitiu, and the Countries of Moub, to the Red Sea, that is, to Elongaber; Eloth, and Midian: which way, as it lay North and South, fo Ifrael to thunne the border of Edom, and to take the vtmost East part of Moub, crost the common way towards the East, and then they turned againe towards the North, as before.

From Phunon he went to Oboth; where they entred the Territorie of Month, adioyning to the Land of Suph, a Countrie bordering on the Dead Sea; and from thence 10 to Abarim, the eight and thirtieth Mansion, that is, where the Mountaines so called take beginning, and are as yet but small Mountures of Hills, on the East border of Moab; From thence they recovered Dibon Gad, or the River of Zared, which rifeth in the mountaines of Arabia, and runneth towards the Dead Sea, not farre from Petra the Metropolis thereof, being the nine and thirtieth Station. And having past that River, they lodged at Dibon Gad, and from thence they kept the way to Diblathaim, one of the Cities of Moab; which Hieremie the Prophet c. 48.v.22. calleth the House of Diblathaim, the same which afterward was destroied among the rest by Nabuchadneffar. From thence they came to the River of Arnon, and incamped in the mountaines of Abarim: though in the 22. of Numbers, Moses doth not remember 10 Helmondiblathaim, but speaketh of his remoue from the River of Zared, immediately to the other fide of Arnon; calling Arnon the border of Moab, betweene them and the Amorites: speaking, as he found the state of the Countrie at that time. For Arnon was not anciently the border of Moab, but was lately conquered from the Moabites, by Sehon, King of the Amorites: even from the Predecessour of Balac Peor then raigning. From Diblathaim, Moses sent Mcssengers to Schon, King of the Amorites, to delire a passage through his Countrie: which though he knew would be denied him, yet he defired to give a reason to the neighbour Nations, of the warre he vndertooke. And though Edom had refused him as Sehon did, yet hee had no warrant from God to enforce him. Mo/es also in sending messengers to Seon observed 30 the same precept, which he left to his posteritie, and successours, for a law of the war, namely in Deut. 20. v. 10. in these wordes, When thou commest neare vato a Citie to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace, which if it doe accept of and open unto thee, then let all the people found therein be tributaries onto thee, and ferue thee, but if it refuse, &c. thou shall Smite all the Males thereof with the edge of the Sword. Which ordinance all Commanders of Armies have observed to this day, or ought to have done.

(poken in repeating of the battailes of IEHOVAH, against VAHEB in the Countries of SVPH: and against the Rivers, the Rivers of Arnon. In which wordes he vnderstands, that amongst the Warres which the Lord disposed for the good of the Israelites. there was in those times a famous memorie in the mouth of most men, concerning the Warre of Sehon against Vaheb, the King of the Moabites, and of his winning the Countrie neare Arnon, out of the possession of the Moabites. For this Vaheb was the immediate Predecessour of Balac, who lived with Moses: though it be written that this Balac was the sonne of Zippor, and not of Vaheb. For it seemes (as it is plaine in the fuccession of the Edomites) that these Kingdomes were elective, and not successive. And as Iunius in this translation vnderstandeth no speciall Booke of the bat- 10 tailes of the Lord: so others, as Vatablus in his Annotations, doubt whether in this place any special booke be meant; and if any; whether it bee not a prediction of Warres in future ages, to be waged in these places, and to be written in the booke of Indges. Siracides c. 46. tells vs plainly, that those battailes of the Lord were fought by I o s v A. Who was there (faith he) before him like to him? for he fought the battailes of the Lord. But seeing the Histories of the Scripture elsewhere often passe ouer matters of great weight in few wordes, referring the Reader to other bookes, written of the same matter at large: therefore it seemeth probable, that such a booke as this there was; wherein the feuerall victories by Ifrael obtained, and also victories of other Kings, making way for the good of the Ifraelites, were particularly and largely writ- 20 ten. of Moses his sparing the issue of Lot: and of the Giants in those parts: and of Sehon and Og.

Hen Moses had past Arnon, he incamped on the other side thereof at Abarim, oppolite to the Citie of Webo, leaving the Citie of Midian on his left hand, and attempting nothing vpon the Moabites on that side. For Moab did at this time inhabite on the South fide of Arnon, having lost all his ancient and best Territorie, which was now in the possession on of Sehon the Americe. For Moses was commanded by God not to molest Mondy, Dent. 2. 1.9. 6 neither to prouoke them to battaile, God having given that Land to the children 10.11.612. of Lot; the same which was anciently possess by the Emins, who were men of great stature, and comparable to those Giants called Anakims, or the sonnes of Anae.

God also commanded Moses to spare the Ammonites, because they likewise were and descended of Lot: who had expelled from thence those Giants, which the Ammonites called Zomzummims. For it feemeth that all that part, especially to the East of Iordan, euen to the Desert of Arabia, as well on the West, as on the East side of the Mountaines of Gilead, were inhabited by Giants. And in the plantation of the Land promised, the Israelites did not at any time passethose Mountaines to the East of Basan, but left their Countrie to them, as in the description following is made manifest. We findealfo, that as there were many Giants both before and after the floud: so these Nations, which anciently inhabited both the border of Cansan, and the Land it felfe, had among them many families of Giant-like men. For the Ana- 10/15.0.13.6. kims dwelt in Hebron, which sometimes was called the Citie of Arbah, which Arbah 14.0.15.

30 in Iosua is called the Father of the Anakims; and the greatest man of the Anakims. There had also beene Giants in the Land of the Moubites, called Emims: and their chiefe Citie was Aroer or Ar, neare the River of Arnon. To the Giants of the Rephaims, the Ammonites game the name of Zamzummims; which were of the fame ancient Canaanites: and their chiefe Citie was Rabba, afterward Philadelphia. They were also called Zuzims, which is as much to say, as Virirobulti, horrendig, Gigantes; Strong men, and fearefull Giants, who inhabited other Cities of Ham, or Hom, in the same Prouince, and not farre to the North of Aroer.

Now Moles having past Arnon, and being incamped at Abarim; and having (as before) fent to Schon, as he had done to Edom, to pray a paffage through his Coun-40 trie, was denied it. For Sehon being made proude by his former conquest vpon Vaheb the Moabite, which Nation the Amorites esteemed but as strangers and vsurpers, (themselves being of the sonnes of Canam, and the Moabites of Lot) refused to grant Israel any entrance that way; and withall prepared to encounter Moses with as much speede as he could, because Moses incamped in the Countrie of his new conqueste, to wit, the Plaines of Moab; the two and fortieth and last Mansion? which Moses wasted with the multitude of his people, and cattle. Towards him therefore hasting himselfe, they encountred each other at Iahaz: where Sehon with his children and people were broken and discomfitted; and the victorie so pursued by Moses, as few or none of the Amorites escaped. Hee also slaughtered all the Women and 53 Children of the Amorites, which he found in Effebon, and all the other Cities, Villages, or Fields; they being of the race of Canaan, as those of Basan also were: and descended of Emoreus or Amoreus : for Moses calleth the Basanites also Amorites. Dest. 1. 18. And although Ifrael might now have taken a ready way and paffage into Iudea : being at this time, and after this victorie at the banks of Iordan: yet hee knew it to bee perilous to leaue fo great a part of that Nation of the Amorites on his backe, as inhabited all the Region of Bafan or Traconitis : and therefore heled on his Armie to inuade Og : a person of exceeding strength and stature : and the only man of marke remaining of the ancient Giants of those parts, and who at that time had 60. Cities walled and defenced: lying betweene the mountaine of Hermon (which mountaine faith Moles, the Sidonians call Shirion, and the Amorites Shenir) and the River of Iordan. And it befell vnto the King of Balan ( who attended Moles comming at Edrei) as it did vnto Sihon: for he and his sonnes perished, and all his Cities were taken and possest. After this Moles with-drawing himselfe backe agains to the mountaines of Abarim, left the persequution of that warre vnto Jair the sonne of Manasse: 10 who conquering the East parts of Basan, to wit, the Kingdome of Argob, even vnto the Nations of the Gelluri and Machati, 60. walled Cities: called the same after his owne name Hauoth Jair : of all which conquests afterward the halfe Tribe of Ma. nalle posses the North part as farre as Edrei, but the East part that belonged to Sihon the Amorite, with the mountaines of Gilead adjoyning, was given to Ruben and Observations out of the Storie of Moses, how God disposeth both the smallest occasions, and the greatest resistances, to the effecting of his purpose.

Ow let vs a little, for instruction, looke backe to the occasions of sundrie of the great euents, which have beene mentioned in this Storie of the life of Mofes, for (excepting Gods miracles; his promife, and fore-choise of this people) hee wrought in all things else by the medium of mens affections, and natural appetites. And so we thall find that the feare which Pharao had of the increase of the Hebrewes, multiplied by God to exceeding great numbers, was the next naturall cause of the forrowes and losse, which befell himselfe, and the Ægyptian Nation: which numbers when he sought by cruell and vngodly pollicies to cut off and leffen, as when he commanded all the male-children of the Hebrewes to be flaine, God (whose prouidence cannot be resifled, nor his purposes preuented by all the foolish and faluage craft of mortall men) moued compassion in the heart of Pharae's owne Daughter, to preserve that child, which afterward became the most wife, and of all men the most gentle and milde,

40 the most excellently learned in all Diuine and Humane knowledge, to be the Conductor and deliuerer of his oppressed Brethren, and the ouerthrow of Pharae, and all the flower of his Nation; even then, when he fought by the strength of his men of Warre, of his Horse, and Chariots, to tread them under and burie them in the dust. The griefe which Moses conceived of the injuries; and of the violence offered to one of the Hebrewes in his owne presence, moued him to take revenge of the Agyptian that offered it: the ingratitude of one of his owne Nation, by threatning him to difcouer the slaughter of the Agyptian, moued him to slie into Midian: the contention betweene the sheep heards of that place, and Iethro's Daughters, made him knowne to their Father: who not only entertained him, but married him to one of othose Sisters: and in that solitaric life of keeping of his Father in lawes sheepe, farre

from the presse of the world, contenting himselfe (though bred as a Kings Sonne) with the lot of a poore Heards-man, God found him out in that Desart, wherein he first suffered him to live many yeares, the better to know the waies and passages through which he purposed that hee should conduct his people, toward the Land

The like may be said of all things else, which Moles afterward by Gods direction performed in the Storie of Israel before remembred. There is not therefore the smallest accident, which may seeme vnto men as falling out by chance, and of no consequence: but that the same is caused by God to effect somewhat else by: yea, and oftentimes to effect things of the greatest worldly importance, either presently, or in many yeares after, when the occasions are either not confidered, or forgotten.

Of the Nations with whom the Hraclites had dealing after their comming out of Ægypt; and of the men of re-nowne in other Nations, about the times of Moses and Iosva, with the summe of the Historie of I osva.

N like manner if we looke to the qualitie of the Nations, with whom the Israelites, after their comming out of £eypt, had to doe, either in the Wilderneffe, or afterward: we shall finde them long before-hand, by the disposing providence of God, as it were prepared for enmitie: partly in respect that they were most of them of the iffue of Canaan, or at least of Ham : and the rest (as the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Ismaelites) were mingled with them by mutuall marriages: 40 whereas the Ifraelites still continued strangers, and separate from them : and fo partly in this respect, and partly by ancient injuries or enmities, and partly by reason of diversitie in Religion, Eastlide of tor- were these Nations, as it were prepared to be enemies to the Ifraelites: and so to serue dan about Ba- for fuch purposes as God had reserved them for. To make these things more mafan: where they nifeft, we must vnderstand that this part of Syris, bounded by the mountaines of Liof Hussin which banus, and Zidon on the North, by the same mountaines continued as farre as the both 10b dwelt, Springs of Arnon on the East: by the way of Agypt, and the Red Sea on the South: iffue of Hus the and by the Mediterran Sea on the West: was inhabited and peopled by two Nati-Sonne of Wa- ons, the one springing from the sonnes of Cham, the other from Sem: but those of 50 the and Ellin, bern, were but as strangers therein for a long time, and came thither in effect but his fried which. is called a Bu- with * one familie, to wit, that of Abraham, and a few of his kindred. The other git. See here- for the greatest part were the Canaanites, the ancient Lords and Possessor those Territories: by processe of time divided into severall families and names: whereof

some of them were of eminent stature and strength, as the Anakims, Zamzummins, or Zuzei, Emims, Horites, and others. These (as men most valiant and able commonly doe) did inhabite the vtter borders and mountaines of their Countries: the rest were the Zidonians, lebusites, Amorites, Heuites, Hetites, and others, who tooke name after the sonnes of Canaan, and after whom the Countrie in generall was still

As for the Hebrewes which descended of Shem by Abraham, they were of an other familie, and strangers in that Countrie: especially the Israelites, and this was some cause that the Cansanites did not affect them, or indure them: no more then 10 the Philistims did, who descended also of Cham by Mizraim. For though Abraham himselfe being a stranger was highly esteemed and honoured among them: especially by the Amorites inhabiting the West part of Iordan: yet now even they which descending from Abraham, or from his kindred, abode and multiplied in those partes, were alienated in affections from the Ifraelites: as holding them itrangers and Exedentions intruders: making more account of their alliance with the Cananites, and the rest of the issue of Cham, with whomethey dayly contracted affinitie: than of their olde petigree from Abraham.

True it is that these Nations descended of Abraham, or of his kindred, who had Dua.e.11.v.s. lincked themselues and matched with the Cananites and others, had so farr possest 20 themselves of the borders of those Regions, as they began to bee a quall in strength to the bordering Cananites, if not superiour. For of Los came those two great families of the Moabites, and Amonites : Of Efauthe Idumaans: of Madian the Madianites: of Ismael, the eldest sonne of Abraham came the Ismaelites, with whom are loyned as of the same nation, the Amalekites, whom though the more common opinion thinketh to have been a tribe of Edom, because Esau had a grand-child of that name, yet manifest reason convinceth it to have bin otherwise. For the Israelites were forbidden to pronoke the Edomites, of doe them any wrong, whereas contrariwife A- Dentes 1. v.s. malek was curfed and endlesse warre decreed against him : but hereof more elsewhere. Chap. 8. 0.3. Of Ismaels eldest Sonne Naboth spring the Arabians of Exedent, with 20 Petras, called Nabathai. Now even as Abraham befought God to bleffe Ismael, fo it Gen, t. pleased him both to promise and performe it. For of him those twelue Princes came, which inhabited, in effect, all that Tract of Land betweene Hauilath vpon Tigris, and Sur which is the West part of the Desart of Arabia Petraa. Yet howsoeuer the strength of these later named nations, which descended from Abraham, were great: yet it is not vnlikely, but that some reason which moued them not to fauour the entrance of the Ifraelites into Canaan, was in respect of feare: because all Princes and States doe not willingly permit any stranger or powerfull Nation to enter their Territories. Wherefore, though all these families before named, were not so vnited, in and among themselves, but that they had their jealousies of each other, and 40 contended for Dominion : yet fearing a third more strong than themselucs, whether they stood a-part or vnited, they were taught by the care of their owne presernation, to joyne themselves together against Israel: though they did it nothing so malitiously and resolvedly as the Canaanites did. For the Edumaans only denied the Hebrewes a paffage : which the Moabites durst not denie : because their Countrie lay more open; and because themselues had lately beene beaten out of the richest part of their Dominions, by the Amorites : and as for the Ammonites their Countrie lay altogether out of the way, and the strength of Schon and Og Kings of the Amerites, was interjacent: and besides that, the border of the Ammonites was strong by reafon of the mountaines which divided it from Basan. Mondy, Balac, perceived that Moles allotted that valley to the Tribes of Gad and Ruben, he beganne to practife with Balaam against Ifrael, and by the Daughters of Median, as aforefaid, to allure them to Idolatrie and thus at length the Moabites by speciall occasion were more and more stirred up to enmitte against Ifrael. And as for diners of the rest that were descended from Abrahams kindred, wee may note, how in the beginning, betweene the Authors of their Petigrees, God permitted fome enmities to be as it were prefages of future quarrells, which in the posteritie might bee the easier incensed, by the memorie of old grudges; and withall by some disdaine from the elder in nature to the yonger. For the I/maelites being descended from the eldelt sonne of Abraham, and the Edomites from the eldest sonne of Isaac, Iacob, be- 19 ing but a fecond fonne, of a fecond brother, those Princes which were descended of the elder Houses being natural men, might scorne to give place, much leffe to subiect themselves, to their inferiours, as they tooke it, and for a more aggravation the issues of Efau Princes of Edumea, might keep in record that their Parent was bought out of his birth-right by Iacobs taking his advantage, and that he was deceived of his Fathers bleffings also by him: and that Iacob after reconciliation came not vnto him as he promised into Seir or Idumaa.

So also in the posteritie of Ismael, it might remaine as a seede or pretense of enmitie, that their fore-father was by the infligation of Sara, cast out into the Defart, with his Mother Hagar: and had therein perished, but that it pleased God by his Angell 20 to relieue them. If mael also had an Agyptian both to his Mother and to his Wife: and Amales was also an Horite by his Mother : which Horites were of the ancient Canaanites. The Edumaans also, or Edomites, were by their Maternall line descended of the Canaanites. For Efau tooke two Wines of that Nation : one of them was i dath, the Daughter of Elou, the Hittite, and the other Aholibamah, the grand-child of Zibeon the Heuite, Lord of Seir, before the same was conquered by Efau, and called

Lastly, it appeareth that all those families of the Ismaelites, Amalekites, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, &c. were in processe of time corrupted, and drawne from the knowledge and worship of God, and became Idolaters, infected and seduced by the 30 conversation of those people among whom they dwelt, and by those Wives of the Canaanites which they had married: only a few of the Kenites and those Madianites, which inhabited on the edge of the Red Sea, whereof Iethro was Prieft, or Prince, or both, worshipped the true and euer-liuing God.

Of the Kings of the Canaanites and Madianites, mentioned in the ancient Warres of the Israelites.

F the Kings of the Canaanites, descended of Cham, (for Melchizedek 40 may be thought to be of a better Petigree) wee finde foure named by Moses : and one and thirtie remembred by Iosua; though few of these named, otherwise than by the Cities ouer which they commanded: to which each of them had a small Territorie adioyning, and no other

The

Dominion. These Canaanites in a generall consideration are to be understood for all those Nations, descended of Cham by Canaan, as the Hittites, Jebusties, Amorites, Gergesites, Heuites, &c. and so here wee viderstand this name in speaking of the Kings of the Canaanites: and so also we call the Countrie of their habitation, the holy Land, or the Land of promife: for God had appointed that the feuen principall Pamilles should berooted out; and that his owne people should inherite their Lands and 50 Cities. But if we consider of the Name and Nation in particular, then is their proper habitation bounded by Iordan, on the East, and by the Mediterran Sea on the West: in which narrow Countrie, and in the choisest places thereof, those Canaantes which held their Paternall name chiefly inhabited.

The first King of these Nations, named in the Scriptures, was Hamor or Hemor Gen. 34. of the Heuites, whom Simeon and Leui flew, together with his Sonne Sichem, in reuenge of their Sifters rauishment.

Arad was the second King which the Scriptures have remembred, who had that part of Canaan towards the South, neighbouring Edom and the Dead Sea; the same which surprised Israel, as they incamped in the Wildernesse in the edge of Edu- Num. 21.1.

The third named was Sehon King of Effebon, who before Mofes arrivall had beaten the Moabites out of the West part of Arabia Petraa or Nabathea, and thrust them 10 ouer Arnon into the Defarts, the same whom Moses ouer threw in the plaines of Monb: at which time he tooke Effebon, and all the Cities of the Amorites.

The last King named is labin the second, who as it seemeth had rebuilt Hazor, burnt by Iofua. The Madianites had also their Kings at times, but commonly mixt with the Moa- 10seph.15.6.6. bites: and they held a corner of Land in Nabathea: to the South-east of the Dead Sea. They descended from Madian, Abrahams sonne by Cethura. ### ð. III. Of the Amalekites and Ismaelites.

Ind. c.7.

F the Kings of the Amalekites and Ismaelites, I finde few that arenamed, and though of the Ismaelites there were more in number than of the rest (for they were multiplied into a greater Nation, according to 40 the promise of God made vnto Abraham) yet the Amalekites, who together with the Midianites were numbred among them, were more renowned in Mofes time than the rest of the Ismaelites. So also were they when Saul gouerned Ifrael. For Saul purfued them from Sur vnto Hauilah, to wit, ouer agreat part of Arabia Petras, and the Defart. The reason to me seemeth to be this : That the twelve Princes which came of Ismael, were content to leave those barren Defarts of Arabia Petraa, called Shur, Paran, and Sin, to the iffue of Abraham by Cetura, that ioyned with them (for fo seeme the Amalekites to have beene, and so were the Msdianites:) themselves taking possession of a better soile in Arabia the Happie, and about the Mountaines of Galaad in Arabia Petras. For Nabaioth the eldest of those 50 twelue Princes planted that part of Arabia Petraa, which was very fruitfull though adioyning to the Defart, in which Mofes wandred, afterward called 2 Nabathea: the same which neighboureth Indea on the East side. They also peopled a Prouince in Arabia the Happie, whereof the people were in after-times called Napathei (B) changed into (P).

Of the instauration of civilitie in Europe about the setimes, and of PROMETHEVS and ATLAS.

Here lived at this time, and in the same age together with Moses, many men exceeding famous, aswell in bodily strength, as in all forts of learning. And as the World was but even now enriched with the written Law of the liuing God, so did Art and Civilitie (bred and so thered farte off in the East, and in Egypt) beginne at this time to difcouer a paffage into Europe, and into those parts of Greece, neighbouring Asaand Indaa. For if Pelafeus besides his bodily strength, was chosen King of Arcadia, because he taught those people to erect them simple Cottages, to defend them from raine and storme: and learned them withall to make a kinde of Meale, and bread of Acornes, who before lived for the most part, by Hearbs and Rootes: we may thereby judge how poore, and wretched those times were, and how falfly those Nations haue vaunted of that their antiquities accompanied not only with civill learning, but with all other kinds of knowledge, And it was in this age of the World, as both Aug.1.18.c. 8. de Eusebius and S. Augustine have observed, that Prometheus flourished . Quem propterea ferunt de luto formasse homines, quia optimus sapientia Doctor fuisse perhibetur; Of whom it is reported that he formed men out of clay, because he was an excellent teacher of Wisedome: and to Theophrastus expoundeth the invention of fire ascribed to PROMETHEVS, Activiting rom. > There lived also at once with Moses, that famous Atlas, brother to Promethew, both being the Sonnes of Igpetus, of whome though it bee faid, that they were borne before Moles daies, and therefore are by others effected of a more ancient date; yet the advantage of their long lives gave them a part of other ages among Men, which came into the World long after them. Befides these Sonnes of Tapetus ... & Schylus findes two other, to wit , Oceanus, and Helperus, who being famous in the West, gave name to the Euening, and so to the

Also besides this Atlas of Lybia or Mauritania, there were others, which bare the same name : but of the Libyan, and the brother of Prometheus, it was that those Mountaines which crosse Africa, to the South of Marocco, Sus, and Hea, with the Sca adioyning tooke name, which memorie Plate in Criticas bestowes on Atlas, the Sonne of Neptune.

Cicero in the fifth of his Tusculan questions, affirmeth that all things written of Prometheus and Atlas, were but by those names to expresse diume knowledge. Abollowing the Sonne of Prometheus, faith Herodotus. Strabo. Hesiodus gaue him Pandora for Mother, the rest Clymene: Homer Strabo. lib. 5, in the fifteenth of his Odyfees makes Deucalion the Sonne of Minos . but 40 he must needes have meant some other Deucalion; for else either Plyses was mistaken, or Homer, who put the tale into his mouth. For Vlyfles after his returne from Truy fained himselfe to be the brother of Idomeneus, who was sonne to this later Deucalion, the sonne of Minos : but this Minos lived but one age before Troy was taken : (for Idomeneus served in that Warre) and this Deucalion the Sonne of Prometheus, who lined at once with Moses, was long before. In the first Deucalions time happened that great inundation in Theffalie . by which in effect every foule, in those parts, perished, but Deucalion, Pyrrha his Wife, and some few others. It is affirmed that at the time of this floud in Thessale, those people exceeded in all kinde of wickednesse and villanie: and as the impictic of men is the forcible attractive of Godsvengeance, 50 fo did all that Nation for their foule sinnes perish by waters: as in the time of Noah, the corruption and crueltic of all mankinde drew on them that generall destruction by the floud Vniuerfall. Only Deucalion, and Pyrrha his wife, whom God spared, were both of them esteemed to be louers of Vertue, of Iustice, and of Religion.

No man was better, nor more just than hee: Nor any Woman godlier than shee.

It is also affirmed that Prometheus fore-told his sonne Deucalion of this ouer-flowing: and aduised him to prouide for his safetie: who hereupon prepared himselfe a kinde of Vessell, which Lucian in his Dialogue of Timon calls Cibotium : and others Larnax. And because to these circumstances, they afterward adde the sending out 10 of the Doue, to discouer the Waters fall and decrease, I should verily thinke that this Storie had beene but an imitation of Noahs floud deuised by the Greekes, did not Augustine with others of the Fathers and reverent Dei. 1.18. 6.10. Writers approue this Storie of Deucalion. Among other his children Deucalion had these two of note, Hellen of whom Greece had first the name of Hellas, and Melantho on whom Neptune is faid to have begot Delphus, which gave name to Delphos, forenowned among the Heathen for the Oracle of Apollo therein founded.

And that which was no leffe strange and meruailous than this floud, was that great burning and conflagration which about this time also happened under Phaeton: not only in Athiopia, but in Istria, a Region in Italie, and about Cuma, and the 29 Mountaines of Vefunius: of both which the Greekes, after their manner, have inven-

δ. V I. of Hermes Trismegistys.

Vt of all other which this age brought forth among the Heathen. Many there were of this name: and how to diffinguish, and fee Many there were of this name : and how to diffinguish, and set them in their owne times, both S. Augustine and Lactantius finde it difficult. For that Mercurie which was esteemed the God of Theeues, the God of Wreftlers, of Merchants, and Sea-men, and the God of Eloquence (though all by one name confounded) was not the same with that Mercurie, of whose many workes some fragments are now extant.

Cicero, Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, and certaine of the Greekes reckon fine Atlas, which lived while Mofes was yet yong. And yet L. Vives vpon S. Augustine feemes to understand them to be the same with those, whom Cicero, Alexandrinus, Mercuries. Of which two were famous in Agypt, and there worshipped; one, the Sonne of Nilus, whose name the Agyptians feared to vtter, as the lemes did their Tetragrammaton; the other, that Mercurie, which flew Argus in Greece, and flying 40 into £gypt, is faid to have delivered literature to the £gyptians, and to have given tod. vives our them Lawes. But Diodorus affirmeth, that Orpheus, and others after him, brought of Citers in Aug learning and letters out of Agypt into Greece : which Plate also confirmeth, saying; de Chair, D. il. 8. That letters were not found out by that Mercurie which flew Argus, but by that ancient Mercurie, otherwise Theut; whom Philo Biblius writeth Taautus; the Agyptians Thoyth; the Alexandrians Thot; and the Greekes (as before) Hermes. And to Euleb Lt. c. 6.de this Taautus, Sanconiatho, who lived about the Warre of Troy, gives the invention of letters. But S. Augustine makingtwo Mercuries, which were both Agyptians, calls neither of them the sonne of Nilus, nor acknowledgeth either of them to have slaine Argus. For he finds this Mercuric, the flaier of Argus, to be the grand-child of that 50 and the rest have remembred. But that coniecture of theirs, that any Gracian Mereurie brought letters into Egypt, hath no ground. For it is manifest, (if there bee any truth in prophane antiquitie) that all the knowledge which the Greekes had, was transported out of Agypt or Phanicia; and not out of Grecce, nor by any Grecian into Agypt. For they all confesse, that Cadmus brought letters first into Brotia, either out of Agypt, or out of Phanicia: it being true, that betweene Mercurius, that lived at once with Moles, and Cadmus, there were these descents cast; Crotopus King of the Argiues, with whome Moses lived, and in whose time about his tenth yeare Moses died; after Crotopus, Sthenelus who raigned eleuen yeares; after him Danaus fiftie yeares; after him Lynceus: in whose time, and after him in the time of Minos King of Crete, this Cadmus arrived in Bxotia. And therefore it cannot be true,

10 that any Mercurius about Moses his time, flying out of Greece for the flaughter of Argus, brought literature out of Greece into Agypt. Neither did either of those two Mercuries of Agypt, whom S. Augustine remembreth, the one the grand-father, the other the Nephew or grand-child, come out of Greece. Eupolemus and Artapanus note, that Moses found out Letters, and taught the vse of them to the lewes; of whom the Phanicians their Neighbours received them; and the Greekes of the Phanicians by Cadmus. But this invention was also ascribed to Moses, for the reason before remembred; that is, because the lewes and the Phanicians had them first from him. For every Nation gave vnto those men the honour of first Inventors, from whom they receited the profit. Ficinus makes that Mercurie, vpon part of whose 20 workes he Commenteth, to have beene foure descents after Moles; which hee hath out of Virgil, who calls Atlas, that lived with Mofes, the maternall grand-father of Virgil, it. 4. A. the first famous Mercurie, whom others, as Diodorus, call the Counsailer and Instrueter of that renowned Isis, wife of Osiris. But Ficinus giveth no reason for his opini- ramand. Meron herein. But that the elder Mercurie instructed 1sis, Diodorus Siculus affirmeth, and any trifmegiti, that such an inscription was found on a piller erected on the Tombe of Iss. Lod.Viner vpon the fixe and twentieth Chapter of the eighth Booke of S. Augustine, De Or Sanche Cimitate Dei, conceineth, that this Mercurie, whose workes are extant, was not the nieths. See Eufirst which was entituled, Ter maximus, but his Nephew or grand-child. * Sancha- feb, de prap. 20 Mercurie; affirming that he was the Scribe of Saturne, and called by the Phanicians, Vintintib.8.c. Tasutus; and by the Egyptians Thoot, or Thoyt. It may bee, that the many yeares 26. Aug de cinit. which he is faid to have lived, to wit, three hundred yeares, gaue occasion to some Dri. Writers to finde him in one time, and to others in other times. But by those which haue collected the grounds of the Agyptian Philosophie and Divinitie, he is found more ancient than Moles : because the Inventor of the Agyptian Wisedome, wherein it is faid, that Mofes was excellently learned.

It is true, that although this Mercurie or Hermes doth in his Divinitie differ in many particulars from the Scriptures, especially in the approving of Images, which

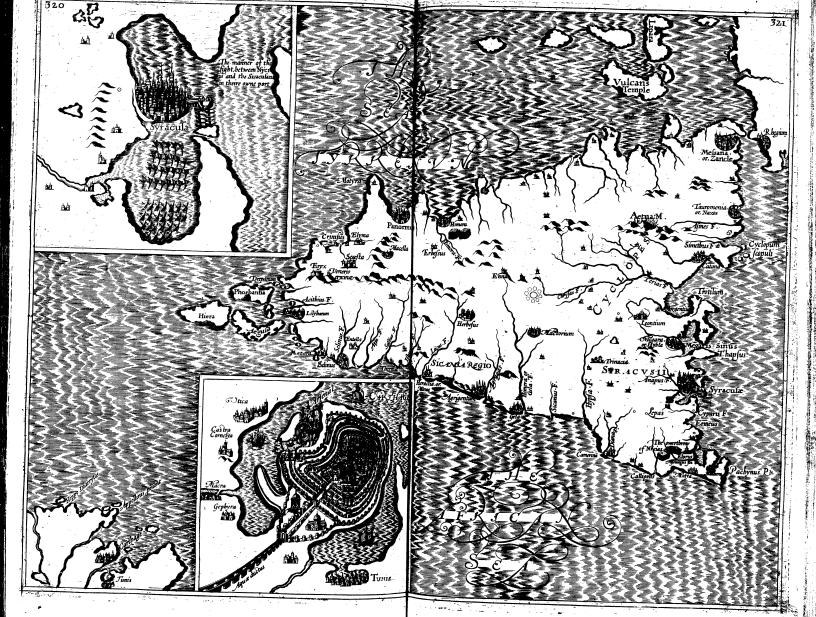

Mojes of all things most detested; yet whosoever shall reade him with an even indg-40 ment, will rather resolue, that these workes which are now extant, were by the Greekes and Agyptian Priests corrupted, and those fooleries inserted, than that ever they were by the hand of Hermes written, or by his heart and Spirit deuised. For there is no man of understanding, and master of his owne wits, that hath affirmed in one and the same Tract, those thinges which are directly contrarie in doctrine, and in nature: For out of doubt (Moses excepted) there was neuer any man of those elder times that hath attributed more, and in a stile more reuerend and divine, vnto almightic God, than he hath done. And therefore if those his two T reatises, now among vs; the one connerted by Apuleius, the other by that learned Ficinus, had beene found in all things like themselues: I thinke it had not beene perilous to haue

50 thought with Eupolemus, that this Hermes was Moses himselfe; and that the Agyptim Theologie hereafter written, was deuised by the first, and more ancient Mercu- Massim, my, which others have thought to have beene lofeph, the sonne of lacob; whom, after the exposition of Pharaohs dreames, they called Saphanet phane, which is as much to say, as absconditorum repertor; A finder out of hidden things. But these are ouer-ven-turous opinions. For what this man was, it is knowne to God. Enuie and aged time hath partly defaced, and partly worne out the certaine knowledge of him: of L.z.c.6. fol.4. whom, who soeuer he were, Lactantius writeth in this fort. Hic scripfit libros, or quidem multos, ad cognitionem divinarum rerum pertinentes, in quibus maiestatem summi ac fingularis Dei afferit, if demá, nominibus appellat, quibus nos, Deum & Patrem; Hee hath written many Bookes belonging to, or expressing the knowledge of divine things, in which he affirmeth the maiestie of the most high and one God, calling him by the same names of God and Father, which we doe. The fame Father also feareth not to number him among the Sybils and Prophets. And so contrarie are these his acknowledgments to those Idolatrous fictions of the Agyptians and Gracians, as for my selfe I am perswaded, to that what soeuer is found in him contrary thereunto, was by corruption inserted. For thus much himselfe confesseth: Deus omnium Dominus, & Pater, fons & vita, potentia & lux, & mens, & Spiritus; & omnia in ipfo, & fub ipfo funt. Verbumenim ex eius esse prodiens, perfectissimum existens, & generator & opisex, &c. God (faith hee) the Lord and Father of all things, the fountaine, and life, and power, and light, and minde, and Spirit: and all things are in him and under him. For his Word out of him elfe proceeding being most perfect, and generative, and operative, falling upon fruitfull nature, made it also fruitfull and producing. And he was therefore (faith Suidas) called Ter maximus, quia de Trinitate loquutus est : in Trinitate unum esse Deum asserens ; Because he spake of the Trinitie, affirming that there is one Godin Trinitie. Hit ruinam (faith FICINVS) presidit 20 prisca Religionis, his ortum noua fidei, his aduentum Christi, his futurum iudicium resurre-In Praf. Mercu. Etionem faculi, beatorum gloriam, supplicia peccatorum; This MERCURIE foresaw the ruine of the old or superstitious Religion, and the birth of the new faith: and of the comming of Christ, the future indgement, the resurrection, the glorie of the Blessed, and the torment or affliction of the wicked or damned.

To this I will only adde his two last speeches reported by Calcidius the Platonist. and by Volateran out of SVYDAS. Hactenus fili pulsus à patria, vixi peregrinus er exul, nunc incolumis repeto: cumá, post paulum à vobis corporeis vinculis absolutus discessero, videtote ne me quasi mortuum lugeatis : Nam ad illam optimam beatamá, Ciuitatem regredior: ad quam universitives mortis conditione venturi sunt. Ibinama, solus Deus est 30 Summus Princeps: qui ciues suos replet suauitate mirifica: ad quam hac, quam multi vitam existimant, mors est potius dicenda quam vita; Hitherto, O Sonne, being driven from my Countrie. I have lived a stranger and banished man : but now I am repairing home-wardagaine in safetie. And when I shall after a few daies (or in a short time) by being loosed from these bonds of flesh and bloud depart from you, see that you doe not bewaile me as a man dead. for I doe but returne to that belt and bleffed Citie, to which all her Citizens (by the condition of death) shall repaire. Therein is the only God, the most high and chiefe Prince, who filleth or feedeth his Citizens with a fweetnesse more than meruallous : in regard whereof this being which others call a life, is rather to be accounted a death, than alife. The other and that which feemeth to be his last, is thus converted by others, agreeing in sense but 40 not in wordes with Svy DAS. O calum magni Dei sapiens opus, teg, O vox patris quam ille primam emisit, quando vniuersum constituit mundum, adiuro per vnigenitum eius verbum, & Spiritum cuncta comprehendentem, miseremini mei; I adiure thee O heauen thou wife worke of the great God, and thee O voice of the Father, which he first uttered, when he framed the whole world, by his only begotten Word, and Spirit, comprehending all thinges,

But Suydas hath his invocation in these wordes: Obtestor te calum magni Dei lapiens opus, obtestor te vocem Patris quam loquutus est primum, cum omnem mundum firmauit, obtestor te per unigenitum Sermonem omnia continentem, propitius, propitius esto; I befeech thee O heaven, wife worke of the great God, I befeech thee O voice of the Father, 50 which he spake first when he established all the World. I befeech thee by the only becotten Word containing all thinges, be favourable, be favourable.

thinkes in his Commentarie vpon Augustine, de Ciuitate Dei, lib. 8. and August. de ciuit, also those two notorious Sorcerers, James and Jambres, who in that impious art excelled all that euer haue beene heard of to this day: and yet " Moles himselfe doth not charge them with any familiaritie with Deuills, or ill Spirits: words indeed that feldome came out of his mouth; how cuer by the Septuagint they are called Sophista or Venefici and Incantatores, Sophists, poisoners, and Inchanters: by Hierome Sapientes & malefici, Wisemen, and euill doers : and so by Vatablus, who also vieth the word Magi. I he Greeke it selfe seemes to attribute somewhat of what they did to naturall Magick: calling them papuanes, workers by drugges. The Exod.9.11.

Geneuan, Sorcerers and Inchanters: IVNIVS Sapientes, Prastigiatores & Magi. Magitians and Wisemen here by him are taken in one sense: and Præstigiators are such as dazell menseies, and make them feeme to fee what they fee not: as falfe colours, and 20 falle shapes. But as some vertues and some vices are so nicely distinguished, and so resembling each other, as they are often confounded, and the one taken for the other: (religion and superstition having one face and countenance) so did the workes and workings of Moses, and of Pharaos Sorcerers appeare in outward shew, and to the beholders of common capacities, to bee one and the fame art and gift of knowledge. For the Deuill changeth himselfe into an Angell of light; and imitateth in all he can the waies and workings of the most High. And yet on the contrarie euery worke which furmounteth the Wisedome of most men, is not to be condemned as performed by the helpe or ministerie of ill Spirits. For the properties and powers which God hath given to naturall things, are such as where hee also bestoweth the know-30 ledge to understand their hidden and best vertues, many things by them are brought to paffe, which seeme altogether impossible, and aboue nature or art: which two speculations of works of nature, and of miracle, the Cabalifts distinguished by these names; Opus de Beresith, & opus de mercana: the one they call Sapientiam natura; The Wisdome of nature: the other Sapientiam disinitatis; The wisedome of disinitie: the one Incob practised in breeding the pied Lambs in Mesopetamia, the other Moses exercifed in his miracles wrought in Egypt, having received from God the knowledge of the one in the highest perfection, to wit, the knowledge of nature: of the other so farre as it pleased God to proportion him, both which he vsed to his glorie, that gaue them: affuming to himselfe nothing at all, either in the least or most. Also S. Au-40 gaffine noteth that from the time that Mofes left Agypt to the death of Iofua; diuers other famous men liued in the world, who after their deaths for their eminent vertues and inventions, were numbred among the Gods: as Dionysius otherwise Liber Pater, who taught the Gracians the vie of the Vine in Attica: at which time also there were instituted Musicall plaies to Apollo Delphicus : thereby to regaine his fanour, who brought barrennesse and scarcitie vpon that part of Greece, because they relisted not the attempts of Danaus, who spoiled his Temple and set it on fire: so did Ericthonius institute the like games to Ainerua: wherein the Victor was rewarded with a present of Oile, in memorie of her that first prest it out of the Oliuc.

In this age also Kanthus ratisfied Europa: and begat on her Radamanthus, Sarpedon, 50 and Minos, which three are also given to Jupiter by other Historians. To these Saint Angustine addeth Hercules; the same, to whom the twelve labours are ascribed, na- Lib.Decinit.De tiue of Tyrinihaa Citie of Peloponnefus: (or as others fay, only nursed and brought cap.12. vpthere) who came into Italie, and destroied many Monsters there; being neither that Hercules, which Eufebius furnameth Delphin; famous in Phanicia; nor that Hercules, according to Philostratus, which came to Gades, whom he calleth an Agyptian: Manifestum fit, non Thebanum HERCVLEM, sed Ægyptinm ad Gades poruenisse, & ibi finem fatuife terra (faith PHILOSTRATVS;) It is manifest that it was the Agy. Philoft, l. 2. ptian HERCVLES, and not the Theban, which travailed as farre as the freights of Gades. and there determined the bounds of the earth. In this time also while Moses wandered in the Deserts, Dardanus built Dardania.

But who foeuer they were, or how worthy foeuer they were that lived in the daies and age of Moses, there was neuer any man, that was no more than man, by whom it pleased God to worke greater thinges; whom he fauoured more; to whom (according to the appearing of an infinite God) hee so often appeared; neuer any 10 man more familiar and conversant with Angells; neuerany more learned both in Diuine and Humane knowledge; neuer a greater Prophet in Ifrael. He was the first that received and delivered the Law of God entire; the first that left to posteritie by letters, the truth and power of one infinite God; his creating out of nothing the World vniuerfall, and all the creatures therein; that taught the detestation of idolatric, and the punishment, vengeance, and eradication, which followed it.

Syracides calleth Moses the beloued of God and Men, whose remembrance is blesfed. He made him (faith the same Author) like to the glorious Saints, and magnified him by the feare of his enemies, made him glorious in the light of Kings, shewed him his glorie, caufed him to heare his voice, fanctified him with faithfulneffe and meekeneffe, and chofe him 20

He is remembred among prophane Authors; as by Clearchus the Peripatetick: by Megastenes and Numenius the Pythagorian. The long lives which the Patriarchs enioyed before the floud, remembred by Moles, Estieus, Hieronymus Agyptius, Hecataus, Elanicus, Acusilaus, Ephorus, and Alexander the Historian, confirme. The vninerfall floud which God renealed vnto Moles, Berofus, Nicolaus Damascenus, and others have teftified. The building of the Tower of Babel, and confusion of tongues. Abydenus, Estieus, and Sybilla haue approued. Berosus also honoureth Abraham. Hecataus wrote a Booke of him. Damascenus before cited speaketh of Abrahams passage from Damascus into Canaan, agreeing with the bookes of Moses. Eupolemon writeth 30 the very same of Abraham, which Moses did. For beginning with the building of Babel, and the ouerthrow thereof by divine power, he faith that Abraham, borne in the tenth generation, in the Citie called Camerina, or Vrien, excelled all men in wifedome : and by whom the Astrologie of the Chaldeans was invented. Is institia pietateg, sua (saith Eusebius out of the same Author) sie Deo gratus fuit, vt divino pracepto in Phanicem venerit ibid, habitauerit: For his iustice and pietie he was so pleasing wnto God, as by his Commandement he came into Phanicia, and dwelt there. Likewise Diodorus Siculus in his second Booke and fifth Chapter speaketh renerently of Moses: There are many other among prophane Authors, which confirme the bookes of Moles, as Eulebius hath gathered in the ninth of his Preparation to the Golbell, Chapter the third 40 and fourth, to whom I referre the Reader. Lastly, I cannot but for some thinges in it commend this notable testimonie of Strabo, who writeth of Moses in these words. Moses enimaffirmabat, docebatá, Agyptios non recte sentire, qui bestiarum & pecorum imagines Deo tribuerunt: itemá, Afros & Gracos, qui Dys hominum figuram affinxerunt :

id verò solum esse Deum, quod nos & terram & mare continet, quod cælum & mundum & rerum omnium naturam appellamus : cuius profecto imaginem, nemo sana mentis, alicuius earum rerum, qua penes nos sunt, similem audeat effingere. Proinde (omni simulachrorum effictione repudiata) dignum ei Templum ac Delubrum constituendum, ac sine aliqua figura colendum. Moses affirmed and taught, that the Ægyptians thought amisse, which attributed unto God the Images of beafts and cattaile: Also that the Africans and Greekes greatly 50 erred in giving unto their Gods the shape of men: whereas that only is God indeede, which containeth both vs, the Earth and Sea, which we call Heaven, the world, and the nature of all thinges, who seimage, doubtlesse, no wise man will dare to fashion out emto the likenesse of those thinges, which are among st vs: That therefore (all denising of Idolls cast aside) a worthy

Now concerning the Egyptian wisedome, for which the Martyr Stephen commended Mofes, laying, That Moses was learned in all the wifedome of the Agyptians, Att. c.7.2.3. and was mightie in his workes and wordes; the same is collected (how truly I know not) by Diodorus, Diogenes Laertius, Jamblicus, Philo Indaus; and Enfebius Cafarren's, and divided into foure parts, viz. Mathematicall, Naturall, Divine, and Morall. In the Mathematicall part, which is distinguished into Geometrie, Astronomic, Arithmetick, and Musick; the ancient Agyptians excelled all others. For Geometrie,

10 which is by interpretation, measuring of grounds, was vielull vnto them : because it confishing of infallible principles, directed them certainly in bounding out their proper Lands, and Territories, when their fields and limits, by the inundations of Ni-, were yearely ouerflowne and confounded, so as no man could know what in

For the second part, to wit, Alronomie, the site of the Countrie being a level and spatious Plaine, free and cleare from cloudes, yeelded them delight with ease, in obseruing and contemplating the risings, fallings, and motions of the Starres.

Arithmetick alfo, which is the knowledge of numbers, they studied: because without it, in Geometrie and Astronomie, nothing can be demonstrated or concluded. But 20 of Mufick they made no other account, nor defired farther knowledge, than seemed to them sufficient to serve and magnific their Gods, their Kings, and good Men.

The Naturall part of this Wisedome, which handleth the principles, causes, elements, and operations of naturall things, differs little from Peripatetical Philosophie; teaching, that Materia prima is the beginning of all things; that of it all mixt bodies and living creatures have their being; that Heaven is round like a Globe; that all Starres haue a certaine fouent heate, and temperate influences, whereby all things grow and are produced; that raines proceede and bee from mutations in the aire; that the Planets have their proper foules, &c.

The Divine part of this wiledome, which is called Theologie, teacheth and belee-30 ueth that the world had a beginning, and shall perish; that men had their first originall in Agypt, partly by meanes of the temperatenesse of that Countrie, where neither Winter with cold, nor Sommer with heate are offensive; and partly through the fertilitie, that Wilm gineth in thosoplaces; That the soule is immortall, and hath transmigration from body to body; That God is one, the Father and Prince of all Gods; and that from this God, other Gods are, as the Sunne and Moone, whom they worship co by the names of Oficis and Iss, and erected to them Temples, Statues, and thers Images, because the true similitudes of the Godsisnot knowne; that many of the Gods have beene in the estate of mortall men, and after death, for their vertues, and benefits bestowed on mankinde, haue beene Deisied;

40 that those beafts, whose Images and formes the Kings did carrie in their Armes, when they obtained victoric, were adored for Gods: because vnder those Ensignes they preuailed ouer their enemies. Moreouer, the Agyptian Dinines had a peculiar kinde of writing, mysticall and secret, wherein the highest points of their Religion and worthip of God, which was to bee concealed from the vulgar fort, were ob-

Clemens distributeth the whole summe of this latter Egyptian learning into three ciemstrately feuerall forts, viz. Epiflolar, which is vied in writing common Epiftles; Sacerdotall; which is peculiar to their Priests; and Sacred; which Sacred containeth Scripture of two kindes: the one proper, which is expressed by letters Alphabeticall in ob-

Jo scure and figurative wordes; as for example, where it is written: The this by the Hornet participateth the beautie of the Hawke; which is red thus : The Moone doth by the Sunne borrow part of the light of God: because Light is an Image of divine beautie; the other symbolicall, or by signatures, which is three-fold, viz. Imitative, Tropicall, and Ænygmaticall: Imitative, which defigneth things by characters, like to the thinges fignified, as by a Circle the Sunne; and by the Hornes of the Moone, the Moone it selfe: Tropicall or Transferent, which applies the divers formes and figures of naturall bodies or creatures, to fignifie the dignities, fortunes, conditions, vertues, vices, affections, and actions of their Gods and of Men. So with the Egyptian Divines, the Image of an Hawke fignifieth God, the figure of the Hornet signifieth the Sunne, the picture of the Bird Ibis signifieth the Moone: by the forme of a Man, Prudence and Skilfulneffe: by a Lyon, Fortitude: by a Horse, Libertie: by a Crocodile, Impudencie: by a Fish, Hatred is to be vnderstood: Ænygmaticall is a composition or mixture of Images or Similitudes: in which sense, the monstrous Image of a Lyons body having a Mans head, was graven on their 10 Temples and Altars, to fignifie, that to men all ciuine things are Ærrygmaticall and obscure. So the Image of the Sunne set on the head of a Crocodile, (which liueth aswell in the Waters, as on Land) expresseth, that the Sunne nourisheth Meteors in the Aire, aswell from the Waters as from the Earth. So a Scepter, at the top whereof is made an Eie, and an Eare, fignifieth God, Hearing, Seeing, and Gouerning all things. The Seythians are thought to have beene delighted with this kinde of writing. For Pherecides Syrius reporteth, That when Darius sending letters, threatned Idanthura, King of the Scythians, with ruine and destruction of his Kingdo me, vnleffe he would acknowledge fubication: Idanthura returned to him a Mouse, a Frog. a Bird, a Dart, and a Plough-share: which Orontopagas, Tribune of 20 the Souldiers, interpreted to fignifie, that by the Mouse, their dwellings : by the Frog, their waters: by the Bird, their airc: by the Dart, their weapons: by the Plough, their lands: were fignified to be ready to be deliuered to Darius, as their Soueraigne Lord. But Xyphodres made an other construction, viz. that the King meant, That except Darius with his Men did haften away, as a Bird through the aire, or creepe into holes as a Mouse, or runne into the waters which they had pasfed as a Frog, they should not escape his armes, but either be slaine, or being made Captines, till his grounds. The same Historie is with little difference reported by Herodotus:

The fourth and last part which is Morall, and Politique, doth containe especially 30 the Layes, which (according to Laertius) Mercurius Trismegistus, or Ter Maximus denifed: who in his Bookes or Dialogues of Pimander and Asclepius, hath written so many thinges of God, worthy of admiration; aswell (faith Sixtus Senensis) of the Trinitie, and of the comming of Christ, as of the last and fearefull day of Iudgement: that (as faith the same Author, the opinion being also ancient) he is not only to be accounted a Philosopher, but a Prophet of things to come.

Tamblicus in his Bookes of Mysteries of the Agyptians, taking two very ancient Historians for his Authors, to wit, Seleucus and Menatus, affirmeth that this Mercurie was not only the Inventor of the Agyptian Philosophie, but of all other learning, called the Wifedome of the Agyptians before remembred : and that he wrote of that 40 Subject 36525 Bookes, or Pages. Of which there were numbred, of Fierie Spirits, one hundred Bookes; of Aereall Spirits as many, and of Spirits Celeffiall a thoufand; which because they were out of the Leyptian language converted by certaine learned Philosophers into the naturall Greeke, they seemed to have beene first writclem, Strom, 1,6, ten in that tongue. Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, that among the Bookes of Hermes, to wit, of the Wisedome of the Egyptians, there were extant in his time 36. of Physick fixe bookes; of the orders of Priests ten; and of Astrologie foure.

A Briefe of the Historie of Iosva: and of the space betweene him and Othoniel: and of the remainders of the Canaanites; with a note of some Contemporaries to losva: and of the breach of

Fter the death of Moses, and in the one and fortieth yeare of the Egrection, in the first moneth called Nisan, or March, sosuate the sonne of Nan, of the Tribe of Epinain, being filled with the Spirit of wisedome, tooke on him the Gouerneage of the state of the Spirit of wisedome, tooke on him the Gouernement of Ifrael: God gining him comfort, and encouraging him to paffe the Riuer of Iordan, and to possesse, and divide among the Israelites the Land promised.

gouerned the Argines; and Ericthonius, Athens.

Influe imitating in all thinges his Predeceffor, lent ouer Iordan certaine discouerers to view the seat and strength of Ierico, the next Citie vnto himon the other side of the River, which hee was to passe over. Which discoverers being saved, and sent backe by Rahab, a Woman of ill fame, because shee kept a Tauerne or Vitling house, made Iosua know, that the Inhabitants of Ierica, and those of the Countrie about it, 20 hearing of the approch of Ifrae! had lost courage. Whereupon the day after the re- 10(1.1.1).

turne of the Spies, which was the fixth day of the one and fortieth yeare after the Egreffion, Iofua remoued from Sittim in the Plaines of Moab, and drew downe his 10/3.1. Armie to the bankes of the River Iordan; and gave them commandement to put themselues in order to follow the Arke of God, when the Leuites tooke it vp, and 10/3.3. moued towards the Riuer: giuing them withall this forcible encouragement, That they should thereby assure themselves of his favour and presence who is Lord of all the world, when the River of Jordan should be cut off and divided, and the waters 10(3.13. comming from about should stand still in a heap, whereby those below towards the Dead sea wanting supply, they might passe ouer into the land of Canan with drie feet.

Healfo commanded Reuben, Gad, and the halfe Tribe of Manasse, to prepare 10(1.11). themselues (according to their Couenant made with Moses) to march in the head of the rest, and as we call it in this age, to leade in the Vanguard, which through all the Deserts of Arabia, from the Mount Sinai to this place, those of the Tribe of Inda had performed. For these Tribes being already prouided of their habitations, and the Countrie and Cities of the Amorites, by the helpe of the rest, conquered for them: It agreed with inflice & equalitie, that Reuben, Gad, and the halfe of Manaffe should also allift their brethren in the obtaining of their parts, as yet in their enemies possession.

On the bankes of for dan they rested themselves from the sixth day to the ninth; and on the tenth day of the first Moneth Wisan or March, they past over to the o-40 ther fide, taking with them twelue stones from the drie ground in the middest of the River: which, for a memorie of that miracle by God wrought, they let vp at Gilgal, on the East side of the Citie of Ierico, where they incamped the first night. At which place Iosuagaue commandement, that all borne in the last fortieth yeare in the De- 1054.19. ferts should bee circumcifed, which ceremonic to that day had been comitted. Of 10/5.5. the neglect whereof S. Augustine giveth for cause, The peoples contempt of their Aug. 43. in Jos. Superiours. Thomas excuseth it in this sort; That the Ifraelites knew not the certaine Thompart 3, time of their remouing from one place to another: Damasten, That it was not need-question arts full by circumcifion to distinguish them from other Nations, at such time as they 4.ad.3. liued by themselues and a-part from all Nations.

On the fourteenth day of the same Moneth, the children of Ifrael celebrated the Paffeouer now the third time; first, at their leaning Egypt; secondly, at Mount Si- 193.10. nai; and now at Gilgal. After which being desirous to taske of the fruits of the Countrie, and having, as it were, furfeited on Man, they parched of the Corne of the land, being not yet fully ripe, and eate thereof.

And as Mojes beganne to distribute those Regions beyond Iordan, to wit, the Lands of the Amorites, which og of Bafan, and Sihon held, so did Iofua performe the rest: and after a view and partition made of the Territories, he gaue to each Tribe his portion by lot. But this partition, and distribution, was not done at once, but at three seuerall times; first, by Moses to Gad, Ruben, and the halfe Tribe of Manasie, of the Lands ouer Iordan; Secondly, by Iofua, to the Tribe of Iuda, Ephraim, and the other halfe Tribe of Manasse, about the fifth yeare of his government: proved in the 14. of Iosua, v. 10. and a third division was made to the other seven Tribes at Shilo, where iofua feated the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

The victories of Iosua against the Kings of the Canaanites, are so particularly set to downe in his owne bookes, as I shall not neede to lengthen this part by their repetition. In whose Storie I chiefly note these particulars. First, how in the beginning of the warre, those little Kings or Reguli of the Canaanites, had not so much understanding, as to vnite themselves together against the Israelites; but according to the custome of those cstates, from whose Gouernours God hath taken away all wisdom and fore-fight, they left those of their owne Nation, which were next the inuaders, to themseliues and to their owne defences: hoping that the fire kindled somewhat farre off, might againe haue been quenched, ere it could spread it selfe so far as their owne Territories and Cities. But after fuch time as Ierico and Ai were entred, and the Kings, People, and Cities confumed; fine of those 31. Kings (all which at length 20 perished in that warre) ioyned themselves together, first attempting the Gibeonites, who had rendred themselves to Iosua. Only five (the rest looking on to see the succeffe) namely the King of the Jebusites, in Jebus, or Hierusalem, the Kings of Hebron, Iarmoth, Lachis, and Eglon, address themselves for resistance: whose Armic being by Iosua surprised and broken, themselves despairing to scape by slight, and hopelesse of mercy by submission, creeping into a Caue vnder ground, were thence by 10sus drawne forth and hanged. In the profequation of which victorie hee also tooke Makkedah, and Libnah, and Lachis. To the reliefe whereof Floran King of Gezar hastened, and perished. After which Iosua possest himselfe of Eglon, Hebron, and Debir, destroying the Cities with their Princes.

In the end, and when the South Countries were possess, the Cities thereof conquered, and their Kings, and People made duft the rest of the Canaanites, guided by the ouer-late counsailes of necessitie, vnited themselves, to make one groffe strength and bodie of an Armie: which Inbin, King of Hazor, practifed and gathered together, being at that time of all the Canaanite Kings the most powerfulls which Armie being by Iofua discourred, as the same rested neare the Lake of Meron, hee vsed such diligence, as he came on them vnawares; and obtaining an absolute victorie ouer them he prosequuted the same to the vttermost effect. And, besides the slaughter of the defendants, he entred their Cities: of which he burnt Hazor only, referuing the rest for Ifrael to inhabite and enioy.

Secondly, I note, that Iofua shewed himselfe a skillfull man of Warre, for that in those ancient times he yied the stratageme of an ambush in taking of Ai; and in that he broke the Armies of the first fine Kings of the Amorites, which attempted Gibeon, by furprise. For he marched all night from his camp at Gilgal, and set on them early the next day; when they suspected no enemie at hand; as hee did also at Aleron, when he ouerthrew Iabin, and his confederates. After which, making the best profit of his victorie, he affaulted the great Citie of Hazor.

Thirdly, the miracles which God wrought during this warre, were exceeding admirable; as the stay of the River of Jordan at the Springs; so as the Armie of Ifrael past it with a drie foot; the fall of Ierico by the found of the Hornes; the shewers of 50 Haile-stones, which fell vpon the Amerites in their flight from Gibeon, whereby more of them perished, than by the fword of Israel: againe, the arrest of the Sunnein the firmament, whereby the day was so much the more lengthened, as the Israelites had time to execute all those, which fled after the ouerthrow : a wonder of wonders, and a worke onely proper to the all-powerfull God. Fourthly, out of the passage betweene losur and the Gibeonites, the Doctrine of keeping Faith is so plainly and excellently taught, as it taketh away all cualion, it admitteth no distinction, nor leaueth open any hole or out-let at all to that curning perfidiousnesse, and horrible deceit of this latterage, called Aquinocation. For, notwithstanding that these Gibeonites were a people of the Heures, express and by 16/9-7. name, by the commandement of God to be rooted out, and not with standing that they were liers, and deceivers, and counterfeits, and that they did ouer-reach, and as it were, deride Iosua, and the Princes of Israel, by faining to bee sent as Embassa-10 dours from a farre Countrie, in which trauaile their clothes were worne; their bread mouldie, which they anowed to have beene warme for newnesse when they sirst fetout; their barrells and bottles of wine broken; their shoes patcht; and their facks rent and ragged : Yet 10/114 having sworne vnto them by the Lord God of 10/59 from the Israel, hee durst not, though vrged by the murmure of the people, to lay violent 5. to the 13.

handes on them; but hee spared both their Lines, and the Cities of their inheri-Now if euer man had warrant to breake Faith, and to retract his promise made,

Io/ua had it. For first, the commandement which hee received from God to roote out this Nation among the rest, preceded by farre the peace which hee had granted 20 them. Secondly, he might justly have put these mento the sword, and have sackt their Cities; if there bee any cualion from a promise made, whereof the liuing God is called to witnesse. For it was not to the Gibeonites that hee gaue peace, because hee knew them to bee a people hated of God. Hee told them, that if they 1059.7. were of the Henites, it was not in his power to make a league with them. But it was to a strange people that hee gaue faith, and to a Nation which came from farre, who hearing of the wonders which the God of Ifrael had done in Agypt and ouer Iordan, fought for peace and protection from his people. Thirdly, the accord, 10, co valid which Israel made with these crastie Canaanites, was without warrant. For it is written in the same place, That the Israelites accepted their tale, that is, beleeved 20 what they had faid, and counsailed not with the mouth, of the Lord. Fourthly, these men who were knowne Idolaters, and serued those Puppets of the Heathen, men of an Apish Religion, as all Worshippers of Images are, could not challenge the witnesse of the true God, in whome they beleeved not. I say therefore, that if euer man might haue serued himselfe by any cuasion or distinction, Iofua might iustly hauedoneit. For hee needed not in this case the helpe of Aquinocation, or Mentall Referuation. For what hee sware, hee sware in good Faith; but hee fware nothing, nor made any promise at all to the Gibeonites. And yet, to the end that the faithlesse subtilitie of man should borrow nothing in the future from his example, who knowing well, that the promises hee made in the name of God, 40 were made to the living God, and not to the dying Man, hee held them firme, and inuiolable, notwithstanding that they, to whom hee had sworneit, were worshippers of the Deuill. For it is not, as faithlesse men take it, that he which sweareth to a Man, to a Societie, to a State, or to a King, and sweareth by the name of the lining Lord, and in his presence, That this promise (if it be broken) is broken to a Man, to a Societie, to a State, or to a Prince; but the promise in the name of God made, is broken to God. It is God, that wee therein neglect: wee therein professe that wee searchim not, and that we let him at nought and defic him. If hee that without Referuation of honour giueth a lie in the presence of the King, or of his Superiour, doth in point 30 of Honour give the lie to the King himselfe, or to his Superiour; how much more doth he breake Faith with God, that giveth Faith in the presence of God, promifeth in his name, and makes him a witnesse of the Couenant made?

Out of doubt, it is a fearefull thing for a Sonne to breake the Promile, Will, or Deed of the Father; for a State, or Kingdome; to breake those Contracts which have beene made in former times, and confirmed by publique faith. For though it were 400. yeares after Iosua, that Saul, even out of devotion, slaughtered forne of those people descended of the Gileonites : yet God who forgat not what the Predecessours and Fore-fathers of Saul and the Israelites had sworne in his name, afflicted the whole Nation with a confuming famine; and could not be appeafed, #ll feuep of Saules fonnes were deliuered to the Gibeonites grieued, and by them hanged vp.

Iof.3.v.13:

And certainly, if it be permitted by the helpe of a ridiculous distinction, or by a God-mocking equinocation, to sweare one thing by the name of the liuing God. and to reserve in silence a contrarie intent : the life of man, the estates of men, the 12 faith of Subjects to Kings, of Servants to their Masters, of Vassalls to their Lords, of Wines to their Hulbands, and of Children to their Parents, and of all trialls of right, will not onely be made vncertaine, but all the chaines, whereby freemen are tied in the world, be torne a funder. It is by oath (when Kings and Armies cannot passe) that we enter into the Cities of our enemies, and into their Armies. it is by oath that warres take ende, which weapons cannot ende. And what is it or ought it to be that makes an oath thus powerfull, but this; That he that sweareth by the name of God, doth affure others that his wordes are true, as the Lord of all the World is true whom he calleth for a witnesse, and in whose presence he that taketh the oath hath promifed ? I am not ignorant of their poore enafions, which play 20 with the seueritie of Gods Commaundements in this kinde: But this indeede is the best answere, That he breakes no faith, that hath none to breake. For whosoener hath faith and the feare of God dares not doe it.

The Christians in the Holie Land when they were at the greatest, and had brought the Caliph of Egypt to pay them tribute, did not only loofe it againe, but were soone after beaten out of the Holie Land it selfe : by reason (saith William of Tyre, a reuerend Bishop which wrote that storie) that Almerick the fiftieth King after Godfrey brake faith with the Caliph Elhadech, and his Vicegerent, The Soldan Sanar', who being sodainely inuaded by Almerick drew in the Turke Syracon to their aide: whose Nephew Seladine, after he had made Agypt his owne, beate the Christians 30 out of the Hole Land; neither would the woodden Croffe (the very Croffe, fay they that Christ died on) give them victoric over Seladine, when they brought it into the field as their last refuge : seeing they had for sworne themselves in his name, that was crucified thereon. And if it bee a direction from the holy Ghost, That hee that (peakethlies, shall be destroied, and that the mouth which ottereth them, slaieth the foule: how much more perilous is it (if any perill be greater than to destroy the foule) to fweare a lie? It was Eugenius the Pope, that perfwaded, or rather commanded the King of Hungarie after his great victorie ouer Amurath the Turke, and when the faid King had compelled him to peace, the most advantagious that ever was made for the Christians, to breake his faith, and to prouoke the Turke to renew the warre, 40 And though the faid King was farre stronger in the field than euer; yet he lost the battaile with 30000. Christians, and his ownelife. But I will stay my hand: For this first volume will not hold the repetition of Gods judgements vpon faith-breakers; bee it against Infidels, Turkes, or Christians of divers Religions. Lamentableitis, that the taking of oathes now-a-daies, is rather made a matter of custome than of conscience.

It is also very remarkeable; That it pleased God to leave so many Cities of the Canaanites vnconquered by Israel, to scourge and afflict them, by fore-seeing their Idolatrie, and as it is said in the Scriptures, To bee Thornes in their eies to proue them, Tudgi. o tudg. and to teach them to make Warre. For these Citties hereafter named did not only 50 remaine in the Canaanites possession all the time of Josua ; but soone after his death, the Children of Dan were beaten out of the plaine Countries, and enforft to inhabite the Mountaines, and places of hardest accesse. And those of Inda were not able to bee Masters of their owne Vallies; because, as it is written in the Indges; The Canaanites had Chariots of yron. And those principall Ind. 1.v.19. Cities which stood on the Sea-side, adioyning vnto Iuda, were still held by the remainder of the Anakims, or Ph. liftims : as Azzah, Gath, Afdod; out of one of which 10,11.2.19. Cities came Goliath, remembred in Samuel.

Neither did the children of Manasse ouer Iordan expell the Geshurites, northe

Maachathites: which inhabited the North parts of Basan, afterward Tracontis. Nor the Nepihalims possesses themselves of Bethipemish: nor of Bethanah, but they 10,13.0.13, inforst those Canaanites to pay them tribute. Neither did Asher expell the Zidonians, northose of Acho, or Acon, Athlab, Achzib, Heblah, Aphike, and Rehob, nor in- 18d 1, v. 31.

No more could Zabulon enjoy Kuron, and Nahalol, but received tribute from them. Also the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among the Ephraims: and among the 167.16.2.10. children of Manafe, on the West of Iordan, the Canaanites held Bethshean, Taanach, Judi.v.27. Dor, Ibleam, and Meggado; yea Hierufalem it selfe did the Iebufites defend aboue foure hundred yeares, euen till Dauids time.

Now lofua liued one hundred and ten yeares, eighteene of which he gouerned

Israel, and then changed this life for a better. The time of his rule is not expressed in the Scriptures, which causeth divers to coniecture diversly of the continuance. In fephius gives him fine and twentie yeares, Seder Ollam Rabbi the Author of the He-20 brew Chronologie eight and twentie: And Maffeus fixe and twentie: Maimonius cited by Massius, fourteene: Ioannes Lucidus, seuenteene: Caietanus, ten: Eusebius giueth him seuen and twentic : and so doth S. Augustine : Melancthon, two and thirtie: Codoman, flue and twentie. But whereas there passed 480. yeares from the deliuerance of Ifrael out of Agypt, vnto the building of the Temple, it is necessarie that wee allow to Iosua only eighteene of them; as finding the rest supplied otherwife, which to mee feemes the most likely, and as I thinke, a well approued

The same necessitie of retaining precisely 480. yeares from the departure out of Aeypt vnto the building of the Temple, conuinceth of errour, fuch as haue infer-

20 ted yeares betweene Iofua and Othomiel, of whome Eufebius finds eight yeare, to Eufeb. Prop. Ewhich Arius Montanus adhereth; and for which hee giveth his reason in his source mang, and twentieth and last Chapters vpon Iofua: Bunting reckons it nine yeare Bucholzer and Reusner bur one, Codoman twentic, and Nicephorus no leffe than three and thirtie: whereas following the fure direction of these 480. yeares, there can be no void years found betweene Josua and Othoniel, vnlesse they be taken out of those eighteen ascribed vnto Iosua by the accompt alreadic specified. The praises and acts of Iosua are briefly written in the fixe and fortieth Chapter of Ecclefiafticus, where among many other things it is faid of him. Who was there before him like to him, for he fought the battells of the Lord?

40 That he wrote the booke called by this name, it was the opinion of Arius Montanus, because it is said in the last Chapter ver. 26. And I os v A wrote these wordes in the booke of the law of God : which feemeth rather to have beene meant by the covenant which Iosua made with Israel in Sichem, where they all promised to serue and obay the Lord: which promise Tofun caused to be written in the booke of the Law: and of this opinion were Caietan and Abulensis: Theodoret doth likewise conceine that the booke of Tofia was collected out of an ancient Volume, intituled Liber Tuftorum: 1.15.12. remembred by Iosua himselfe, and others, that it was the worke of Samuel for whereas Montanus groundeth his opinion vpon these wordes of the 26. verse. And I osv A wrote these wordes, &c. this place hath nothing in it to proue it, for when the

50 people had answered I o s v A: The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obay, it followeth that Iosua made a coucnant with the people, and wrote the same in the booke of the Law of God.

There lived at once with Iosua, Ericthonius in Attica, who taught that Nation to yoke beafts together, thereby to till the ground with more ease and speede: And about about the same time the fiftie Daughters of Danaus (as it is said) slew the fiftie Sonnes of Agyptus, all but Lynceus who succeeded Dan aus, if the tale be true. There liued also with Iosua, Phanix and Cadmus, and neare the end of Iosuas life. Iupiter is faid to have ravilhed Europa the Daughter of Phanix, (afterward married to After Lib.18.c.12.De rius King of Creta) and begat on her Minos, Radamanthus, and Sarpedon. But S. Augustine reports this rauishment to be committed by Xanthus, and yet they are more commonly taken for the Sonnes of Jupiter. But it may be doubted whether Minos Homer, Oding was Father to Deucalion, and Deucalion to Idomeneus, who was an old man at the war of Troy, and Sarpedon was in person a yong or strong man at the same Troian warre. And fo doth Neftor reckon up in the Councell of the Greekes, Thefeus and Perithous 10 for men of antiquitie, and of ages past: Minos being yet more ancient than any of thefe. But hereof elsewhere.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Tribes of Israel, that were planted in the borders of Phænicia, with sundrie Stories depending vpon those places.

The Proame to the description of the whole Land of Canaan, with an exposition of the name of

H ε Storic of the Indges ought to follow that of Iofua, after whome the Common-wealth of the Jewes was gouerned by Kings, of which so many of them as ruled the ten Tribes, shall bee remembred when wee come to the description of Samaria: But because the Land of Canaan, and the borders thereof, were the Stages and Theaters, whereon the greatest part of the Storie past, with that which followeth hath beeneaeted, I thinke it very pertinent (for the better understanding of both) to make a Geographicall description 40 of those Regions: that all things therein performed by the places knowne, may the better bee vnderstood, and conceived. To which purpose (besides the addition of the Neighbour Countries) I have bestowed on cuery Tribe his proper portion : and doe shew what Cities and Places of strength, were by the Iewes obtained: and what numbers it pleased God to leave vnconquered: by whom he might correct and scourge them, when vngrateful for his many graces, they at fundrie times forgat or neglected the Lord of all power, and adored those deafe and dead Idolls of the Heathen. Diuina bonitas (faith S. Avgvstine) ideo maxime irascitur in hoc saculo, ne irascatur in futuro : & misericorditer temporalem adhibet seueritatem, ne aternamiuste inferat oltionem; The divine goodnesse is especially therefore 50 anerie in this world, that it may not be angrie in the world to come, and doth mercifully vie temporall seueritie, that it may not instly bring vponvs eternall vengeance.

To the Cities herein described, I have added a short Storie of the beginnings, and ends of divers Kingdomes and Common-weales: and to helpe my felfe herein, CHAP. 7. S.2. of the Historie of the World.

I have perused divers of the best Authors upon this subject: among whom, because I finde fo great disagreement in many particulars, I have rather in such cases adventured to follow mine owne reason, than to borrow any one of their old patternes.

And because Canaan, with Palastina of the Philistims, and the Lands of Og and Silon Kings of Basan, and the Arabian Amorites, were but small Provinces of Syria: it shall be necessarie, first to divide and bound the generall, and so to descend to this particular, now called the holy Land.

Syria, now Soria, according to the largest description, and as it was anciently ta- Pool Asia at the ken, imbraced all those Regions from the Euxine Sea to the Red Sea: and therefore 10 were the Cappadocians, which looke into Pontus called Leuco Syrians, or white Syrians. Edessa, sometime Rages, now Rage, was the Metropolis of this Region of Syria. In Aurogallia. Syria taken largely, there were many small Provinces, as Calesyria which the Latines 20 call Syria Caua, because it lay in that fruitfull Valley betweene the Mountaines of Lybanus and Anti-lybanus, in which the famous Cities of Antioch, Laodicea, Apamea, with many others were seated. Then Damaseena or Syria Lybanica, taking name of the Citie Damascus, and the Mountaines of Lybanus, the Regall seate of the Adades, the first Kings of Syria. Now besides these Prounces of Phanicia, and Palassina (both which the River of lorden boundeth; fauing that Phanicia stretcheth a little more Easterly towards Damafeus) that part also to the Fast of Iordan, and within the Mountaines of Hermon Gilead and Arnon, otherwise Traconi, fell to the possession of halfe Manasse, Gad, and Ruben, and therefore are accounted a part of Cansan alfo: aswell because anciently possest by the Amorites, as for that they were conquered and enjoyed by the Israelites, which Eastermost parts are againe divided into Basan or Batanea, into Gilead, Moab, Midian, Ammon, and the Territories of the Machati, Geffuri, Argobe, Hus. They are knowne to the later Cosmographers by the name of Arabia in generall; and by the names of Traconitis, Pieria, Batanea, &c. of which I will speake in their pro- 10 per places.

But where Moses describeth the Land of Canaan in the tenth of Genesis, he maketh no mention of the later Provinces, which fell to Manasse, Gad, and Ruben, for these be his wordes. Then the border of the Canaanite's was from Zidon, as thou commest to Gerar untill Azzah (which is Gaza) and this was the length of the Countrie North and South: then it followeth in the Text. And as thou goeff unto Sodome and Gomorah, and Admah, and Seboijm, eucn unto Lasha: by which wordes Moses setteth downe the breadth, to wit, from the Dead Sea to the Mediterran. But in Deuteronomie it seemeth to be farre more large. For it is therein written : All the places whereon the soale of your feet shall treade shalbe yours: your coast shalbee from the wildernesse, and 20 from Libanon, and from the River Perah, whto the vttermost Sea. Now for the length of the Countrie North and South, this description agreeth with the former: only Libanon is put for Zidon: and the Wildernesse for Gerar and Azzah, which make no difference: but for the breadth and extent East and West, if Perah be taken for Euphrates: then the Land promised stretcheth it selfe both ouer Arabia Petraa, and the Defert as farre as the border of Babylon: which the Israelites neuer possest: nor at any time did so much as invade or attempt. And therefore Vadianus doth conceive that by the River Perah, was meant Iordan, and not Euphrates: taking light from this place of Iosva: Behold I have divided unto you by lot these Nations, that remaine to be an inheritance according to your Tribes: from Iordan with all the Nations that I have destroi- 20 ed, cuen winto the great Sea Westward.

And though it bee true that David greatly enlarged the Territoric of the holy Vadian. Epitom. Land: yetas Vadianus well noteth, if Perab in the former place bee taken for Euphratrium terie par-tium. cap. Pale-tes, then was it but per gentes in amicitiam receptas. For David did not at any time enter so faire to the East as Assiria, or Babylonia. Neither doth the not possessing of all these Countries give advantage to those that would make any irreligious cavill, as touching the promise of God to the Ifraclites vnperformed: For when both their Kings, Magistrates, and People, fell from his worship and service, it pleased him not only to inclose them within that Territoric, which was for so many people exceeding narrow: but therein and elsewhere to subject them vnto those Idolatrous Na- 40 tions, whose false and foolish Gods themselves also served and obased. And sure the promise by which the Hebrewes claimed the inheritance of Canaan, and the lasting enjoying thereof, to wit, as long as the heavens were above the earth, was tied to those conditions both in the Verses preceding, and subsequent: which the Israelites neuer performed. And therefore they could not hope for other than all mankinde could or can expect: who know that all forts of comforts from the mercifull goodnesse of God looked for, as well in this life as after it, are no longer to bee attended, than while we perseuer in his loue, seruice, and obedience. So in the eighth Verse of the eleuenth of Deuteronomie, the keeping of Gods Commandements was a condition iouned to the prosperitie of Ifrael. For therein it is written: Therefore shall yee 50 keepe all the Commandements which I command you this day: that yee may be strong, and goe in, and possesse the Land, whether yee goe to possesse it. Also that you may prolong your daies in the Land which the Lord (ware unto your Fathers, &c.

The like condition was also annexed to the enjoying of the land conquered, and the possession thereof, so long as the heavens were about the earth. For if yee keepe Deut. 11. diligently, faith he, all thefe commandements, which I command you to doe, that is to love the Lord your God, &c. then will the Lord cast out all thefe Nations before you, and yee Shall possesse great Nations, and mightier than you. And here, though it bee manifest, that by reason of the breach of Gods Commandements, and their falling away from the worship of his all-powerfull Majestie, to the Idolattie of the Heathen, the conditionall promises of God were absolutely voide, as depending vpon obedience vnperformed : yet I cannot millike that exposition of Melanthon : For, faith he, oftendis promissionem pracipuam non esse de hoc Politico regno; He sheweth that his chiefe pro-10 mile is not of actuil Kingdome. To which agrees that answere, which S. Hierome made to a certaine Heretique in his Epistle ad Dardanum, who accused S. Hierone that he ouerthrew the reputation of the Iewer Storie, and brought the truth thereof in question, by drawing it altogether into an Allegorie, and ad illam duntaxat viuentium terram que in cælis est; (that is) Only to that Land of the liuing which is in Heaven. Quomamtota Iudaorum Regio adeò angusta sit ambitu, vt vix longitudinem habeat 160. milliarium, latitudinem verò 40. & in his etiam regiones loca vrbes & oppida funt plurima, nunquam à Iudais occupata, sed tantum diuina pollicitatione promissa; Because the whole Countrie of the lowes is so narrow in compasse that it scarce hath 160 miles in length, and 40. miles in breadth, and in these are Countries, Places, Cities, and many Townes, which the 20 Jewes neuer possest, but were only granted by divine promise. In like manner the same Father speaketh vpon Esay touching the bleffings promised vnto Hierusalem: where he hath these wordes. De quo discimus Hierusalem nequaquamin Palastina Regione cap. 19.16 petendam: que totius Prouincie deterrima est : & saxosis montibus asperatur. & penuriam patitur sitis : itavt calestibus vtatur plunijs, & raritatem fontium cisternarum extructione Soletur : sed in Dei manibus ad quam dicitur festinauerunt structores tui; From whence faith he, we learne, that Hierufalem is not to be fought in that Region of Palastina, which is the worst of the whole Prouince, and ragged with craggie Mountaines : and suffereth the penurie of thirst : fo as it prescrueth raine water, and supplieth the scarcitie of Wells by building Cesternes, but this Hierusalem is in Gods handes, to which it is said, Thy builders have halle-30 ned, so farre S. Hierome, where also to preuent mistaking, hee thus expoundeth himselfe. Neque hoc dico in suggillationem terra sudea, vt Hareticus Sycophanta mentitur: aut quo auferam historia veritatem : qua fundamentum est intelligentia spiritualis sed vt decutiam supercilium Iudeorum: qui Synagoge angustias latitudini Ecclessa praserunt. Sienim occidentem tantum fequuntur literam, & non spiritum vinificantem : oftendant terram promissionis lacte & melle manantem; Neither (faith he) fay I this to disgrace the land of Judaa (as the Hereticall (yeophant doth belieme) or to take away the truth of the Historie which is the foundation of spiritual understanding, but to beate downe the pride of the lewes: which enlarge the straits of the Synagogue farther then the breadth of the Church : for if they follow only the killing letter; and not the quickening first, let them shew the Land of 40 promife, flowing with milke and honnie . hans som A.

By this it may also be gathered; how soeder it be willkely (seeing the West-bound in the place, Deut 1 1.24 had his truth in the literall fense, that Euphrates or Perath; which is made the East bound; should be taken only in a spiritual sense) yet neuertheleffe that Hieroms opinion inclineth to this jar if this Perath were not to be understood for Euphrates : and that the promise it selfe was never so large : much lesse the plantation and conquest of Ifrael. ... which being habited the

The bounds of the Tribe of Asher.

He Asherites descended of Asher the Sonne of Iacob by Zelpha, the hand-maide of Lea, were increased while they abode in £gypt, to the number of 41 500, and odde perfons, all men aboue twentie yeares of age, and able to beare armes at the time, when they were multered by Moses at Mount Smai: all which number perishing in the Desarts, 20 there remained of their iffues, belides women and children, 53400. bodies fit for the warres; which past the River of Arnon, into the Plaines of Moab, and after the Conquest of Canaan, had for their portion that part of Phanicia, from Zidon and the fields of Libanus, vnto Ptolomais Acon alongst the Sea-coast: containing thirtie English miles or thereabout; and from the Mid-land sea to the East border some twelve miles: though Antoninus makes it somewhat larger. This part of Canaan was very fruitfull, abounding in Wine, Oile, and Wheate, befides the Balfamum, with other pleasant and profitable commodities: according to that Prophecie, Assen pinguis panis : concerning Affer , his bread shall be fat : And hee shall give pleasures for a

Zidon is seated on the very wash of the Phanician Sea, which is a part of the Mediterran or Mid-land Sea. of distance as well betweene these two knowne Cities, as all the rest, make it over difficult to deuise any new scale to the Map and description of the holy Land.

What Kings it had till Agenors time there is no memorie: The Storie which Zeno the Philosopher, who was a Zidonian, wrote thereof, being by time confumed and loft. It seemeth to bee more ancient than Tyre: which was also built by the Zidonians. For as Strabo noteth, Homer speaking of Ziaon, neglecteth the memorie of strab. Lis. Tyre: because it was but a member of Zidon, and a Citie subject to the Kings thereof: though it be true that in after-times it contended with Zidon for Primacie, and became farre more renowned, opulent, and strong: From Zidon had Salemon and Zo-10 robabel, their principall workmen, both in Timber and Stone; for the building of the Temple. For as it flourished in all forts of learning, fo did it in all other Mechanicall Arts and Trades: the Prophet Zacharie calling them the wife Zidonians. The zacharie Citie was both by nature and art exceeding strong, having a Castle or Citadell on the North-side, standing upon an unaccessible Rocke, and compassed by the Sea; which after the Citizens became Christians, was held and defended by the Knights of the Dutch Order: and another Castle it hath on the South side by the Port of Agypt, which the Templers guarded. Of Sarepta, with a briefe Historie of Tyre in the same coast.

 $S_{arepta}$ , or after the Hebrew, Sarphath, is the next Citie Southward from Zidon, betweene it and the River called Naar, or Fons hortorum Libani (of which more hereafter) standing in the way towards Tyre, a Citie very famous for the excellent Wine growing neare it : of which Sidonius.

> Vinamihi non funt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, Queg. Sareptano palmite missa bibas.

I have no wine of Gaza, nor Falerna wine, Nor any for thy drinking of Sarepta's vine.

This Citic had also a Bishop of the Diocesse of Tyre: after it came to the Saracens and Turkes, as the rest: and is now called Saphet, saith Postellus.

Not farre from Sarepta was fituate that fometime famous Citie of Tyre, whole fleets of ships commanded, and gaue the law ouer all the Mediterran Sea, and the borders thereof: during which time of greatnesse and power, the Tyrians erected Vtica, Leptis, and Carthage in Affrica, of which VIRGIL. Vrbs antiqua fuit Tyrij te- 40 nuere Coloni Carthago. And Carthage was therefore called Punica quast Phanicum, a Colonie of the Phanicians. In Spaine they founded Gades, now Caliz. The Zidonians built it vpon a high Hill, whereof many ruines remaine to this day: the place being fill knowne by the name of the ancient Tyre : and because it was a Colonie of the 50 Zidonians, the Prophet Esay calleth it the Daughter of Zidon; which Trogus also confirmeth, though Berofus by affinitic of name makes Thiras the Sonne of Japhet to bee the Parent thereof: and though no doubt it was very ancient ( for so much the

For Alexander Musedon, when the Tyrians presented him with a crowne of gold, and other gifts, defiring to remaine his friends and allies, answered them, that hee had vowed a sacrifice to Hercules, the Defender of their Citie: and the Ancester of the Macedonians Kings: and must therefore enter it. Whereupon they sent him word, that Hereules his Temple was in the Mountaine of old Tyre: where he might performe that ceremonie: but this availed not. For Alexander was not so superfitious, as ambitious, hee defired to enter the Towne, which being denied, hee as one whome no perill could feare, nor labour wearie, gathered together as many

30 ships as he could; and brought from Libanus so great a number of Cedars, and so many waightie Stones, from the old Citie of Tyre adioyning, as notwithflanding that his materialls were often washt away with the strength of the Sea, and the Tides, yet he nener refted, till hee had made a foote passage from the Continent to the Iland : and having once approched their Walls, hee over-topt them with Turrets of wood, and other frames: from whence (hauing filled the body of force with the violent mouing Spirit of resolution) he became Lord thereof, putting all to the fword that relifted, after which he caused 2000 more to be hung vp in a ranke all alongst the Sea-shore: which exequation vpon cold bloud hee performed (as some Authors affirme) vpon the issues of those slaues which had formerly slaine all their Long before this defolation of Tyre, by the crueltie of Alexander, it was attempted by Salmanasser the Assyrian King: when the growing pride of the Assyrians, after that they had conquered the ten Tribes, with the reft of Syria, became enuious of the beautie, riches, and power of that Citie. He besseged it bor on the Land-side, and with three-score ships of Warre held the Port : to the end that neither any vi-Etualls nor any supply of men might enter it : but the Tyrians with twelve faile scattered that fleete, and tooke 500. prisoners of the Asyrians: notwithstanding, the In (ph Ant. lib.) Asyrian continued his resolution and lay before it by his Lieutenants five yeares, but with ill successe. And this siege Menander Ephesius, cited by Iosephus, made rer.Goil. (which the faid Menander converted into Greeke) adding that Elulais, whom Tyrius tofeph dut lib. 9 calleth Helifers, was then King of Tyre, having governed the same sixe and twentic yeares. Soone after this repulse of Salmanassar, and about 200. yeares before the victorie of Alexander, Nabuchodonofor at fuch time as he destroied Hiernfalem with 10 the Temple, came before this Citie: who indeed gaue to Alexander the example of that despairefull worke, of ioyning it to the Continent. For Nabuchodono (or had formerly done it: though by the diligence of the Citizens, and the strength of the Sea, the same cawfey and passage was againe broken downe, and demolished.

Eqe.29.18. Efai.23.006.

Against Nabuchodonofor, for many yeares, the Tyrians defended themselves: for so long did these Babylonians continue before it, As every head was made bald, and every shoulder made bare, saith Ezekiel, who with the Prophet Esay had manifestly foretold the destruction of this proude place. In the end and after thirteene yeares siege or more, the Tyrians despoiled of all their hopes, and remembring ouer-late the predictions and threatnings of Gods Prophets, having prepared a convenient number 20 of thips, abandoned their Citie, transporting with themselves the ablest of all that remained: and with their wives, children, and portable riches failed thence into Crprus, Carthage, and other Maritimate Cities of their Tributaries, or Confederates: To as the Babylonians finding nothing therein, either to fatisfie fo many labours and perills, or any person upon whom to avenge themselves for the losse of so many bodies in that Warre: It pleased God in recompence thereof ( who strengthened this resolution, as in a worke of his owne) to make Nabuchodonosor victorious ouer the Ægyptians: and gaue him that Kingdome and the spoile thereof, as it were in wages for his Armie. Whereupon Saint Hierome noteth, that God leaueth not the good deeds of the Heathen vnrewarded'; who though they cannot hope by any laudable 30 worldly action, to attaine vnto that eternall happinesse reserved for his Servants and Saints: yet fuch is the boundlesse goodnesse of God, as he often repaieth them with many worldly gifts and temporall bleffings.

Now of this enterprise of Nabuchodonofors against Tyre, prophane Historians have Tofephant, 1.10. not been filent. For both Diocles, and Philoftratus (as Tofephus citeth them) the one in his fecond Booke, the other in his Phanician Vistories remember it.

After these two great Vastations by the Kings of Babylon and Macedon: this Citie of Tyre repaired and recourred it selfe againe: and continued in great gloric about 300. yeares, even to the comming of our Saniour Christ: and after him flourished in the Christian Faith neare 600. yeares: the Archbishop whereof gaue place to none 40 but to the Patriarke of Hierusalem only: who within his owne Diocesse had sourcen Gul. The twelve scarchers of the Land which Moses sent from Cadesbarne, travailed Hieron, de Locis as farre to the North as Roob, or Rechob, in the Tribe of Affer, which Rechob, as also Berotha which by Ezekiel cap. 47. v. 16. is placed in these North borders, belonged in Dauids time to the King Hedarhezer, as it may bee gathered out of the second of Samuel the 8. cap. and 8. verse, and cap. 10. v.6. and it defended it selfe against the Afferites, as Zidon, Tyre, Achziph, Ptolomais, Alab, Helbah, and Aphek did.

This Aphekit was, whose Wall falling downe, slew seuen and twentie thousand of Benhadads Souldiers, after that a hundred thousand had beene slaughtered by the Ifraelites, under the conduct of Ahab. Here Iunius finds that the Philistims incamped a little before the battaile at Gilboa, though in his Note vpon the first of Samuel, the 50 9. and 1. he takes Aphek there mentioned (at which battaile the Arke was taken) to haue beene in Iuda. The next place alongst the coast is Sandalium, first called Schandalium of Schander, which we call Alexander, for Alexander Macedon built it, when hee belieged Tyre: and set it on a point of Land which extendeth it selfe into the Sca, betweene Aczibs and Tyre : which Castle Baldwine the first rebuilt and fortified; in the yeare of Christ 1157. when he vndertooke the recourie of Tyre.

Not much aboue a mile from this Castle, there ariseth that most plentifull spring of water, which Salomon remembreth, called the Well of lining waters: from whence canta not only all the fields and plaines about Tyre are made fruitfull by large pipes hence drawne : but the same Spring, which hath not about a bow-shot of ground to tra-10 maile till it recouer the Sea, drineth fixe great Mills in that fhort paffage, faith with

Within the Land, and to the East of Acziba, and Sandalium, standeth Hofa: and 10/112.20 beyond it, under the Mountaines of Tyre, the Citie of Achfaph, or Axab, or after St. Hierome Acifap, a Citic of great strength, whose King amongst the rest was slaine by Tofus, at the waters of Merom.

, †. VII. Of Thoron, Gifcala, and some other places.

Arther into the Land towards lordan; was seated the Castle of Thoron, which T Hugo de Sancto Abdemare built on the Eafter most Hills of Tyre, in the yeare 1107. thereby to restraine the excursions of the Saracens, while they held Tyre against the Christians: the place adiopning being very fruitfull, and exceeding pleafant. From this Castle the Lords of Thoron, famous in the Storic of the Warres for the recouerie of the Holy Land, deriue their names, and take their Nobilitie. It had init a curious Chappell, dedicated to the bleffed Virgin, in which Humphrey of Thoron, Constable to Baldwine the third, King of Hierufalem, lieth buried: There were fine Castles besides this within the Territoric of Asser: whereof foure are seated all-30 most of equal distance from each other: to wit, Castrum Lamperti, Montfort, Indin (or Saron) Castrum Regium, and Belfort. The first neare the Sea under the Hills of Saron: the next three, to wit, Indin, Montfort, and Regium, fland more within the Land, and belonged to the Brother hood and Fellowship of the Teutonici, or Dutch Knights (by which they defended themselves, and gave succour to other Christians at such time as the Saracens possess the best part of the vpper Galilee) the chiefe of which Order was in Ptolomais Acon. The first Fortresse was for beautic and strength called Belfort, leated in the high ground vpon the River 2 yaar, neare the Citic Rama: of which in this Tribe 10f. 19.29 for which the Vulgar reades Horma: making the article a part of the word, and mistaking the vowells: from the siege of this Castle of Herold. To the East of Belfort, is the strong Citie of Alab (or Achlab) which S. Hierome calleth Chalab, one of those that defended themselves against Asser, as Roob (or Rechob) not farre thence did.

Towards the South from Roob they place Galala (which Herod, furnamed the Ascalonne rebuilt) making it of the Territorie of Chabol, Quod Syrorumlingua dispi- 10/4pb ant.13.21 cere fignificat (faith Weishenburg) fo called, because Hiram of Tyre was ill pleased with & is.io. those twentie Cities, seated hereabout, which Salomon presented vnto him in recompence of those provisions sent him for the building of the Temple. Almost of equal distance from the Castle of Thoron, they place the Cities of Gifcala, and Gadara: of which Gadara is rather to be placed ouer lordan: Gifcala was made famous by Iohn the Sonne of Leui, who from a meane estate gathering together four hundred Theeues, greatly troubled all the vpper Galilee : at fuch time as the Remanes attempted the conquest of Judea: by whose practise Josephus, who then commanded in the vpper Galilee, was greatly indangered: whereof himselfe hath written at large, in his second Booke of those Warres. This 10hm betraying in all hee could 10 the Citie of Gifcala (whereof he was natiue) to the Roman State: and finding a relistance in the Citie, gaue opportunitie, during the contention, to the Tyrians and Gadarims, to surprize it : who at the same time forst it, and burnt it to the ground : but being by Iosephus authoritie rebuilt, it was afterward rendred to Titus by composition. They finde also the Cities of Cana Major, and * Cades: (or Cedessa) of the first was that Syro-phanician, whose Daughter Christ delinered of the euili Spirit. Neare the other, they say, it was that Ionathas Machabaus ouer-threw the Armie of De-Maccab.11.73. lofethus Antiq.

Of Capernaum, and the Cities of Decapolis.

Mong the remarkable Cities within this Tribe, Capharnaum is not the least: so A often remembred by the Enangelists, This Citie had the honour of Christs presence three yeares : who for that time was as a Citizen thereof, in which hee first Preached and taught the Doctrine of our saluation: according to that notable pro- 50 phocie of Esay 9. The people that walked in darkenesse have seene a great light: they that dwelt in the Land of the Shadow of death, upon them hath the light Shined.

Capharnaum was seated on Iordan, even where it entreth into the Sea of Galileo: in an excellent and rich foile : of whose destruction Christ himselfe prophecied in these wordes. Ind thou Caphernaum which art lifted up unto heaven, shalt bee brought downe to Hell, &c. which shewed the pride and greatnesse of that Citie : for it was one of the principall Cities of Decapolis, and the Metropolis of Galilee. And although there were some markes of this Cities magnificence in S. Hieromes time, as himselfe confesseth: it being then a reasonable Burge or Towne: yet those that haue since, and long fince seene it, as Brochard, Breidenbech, and Saliniae affirme, that it then confifted but of fixe poore Fisher-mens houses.

The Region of ten principall Cities called Decapolitana or Decapolis, is in this description often mentioned, and in S. Matthew, Marke, and Luke, also remembred; Manh 4. 10 but I finde no agreement among the Cosmographers, what proper limits it had: and Markafo Plinie himselfe confesset : for Marius Niger speaking from others, bounds it on Niger comment. the North by the mountaine Casius in Casiotis: and endeth it to the South at Agypt Asa. 4 5.503. and Arabia; by which description it imbraceth Phanicia, a part of Calesgria, all Palestina, and sudaa.

Plinie also makes it large, and for the ten Cities of which it taketh name, he num-Plinie s.c.18. breth foure of them to be situated towards Arabia: to wit, first these three Damaseus, Opotos, Raphana, then Philadelphia (which was first called Amana, faith Stephanus, or Opotos a Citie as I gheffe Amona rather because it was the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites, knowne francisis in the by the name of Rabbah, before Pto. For the ninth Gelala, which Iofephus takes them tor takes to be Gerafa: and Gerafa is found in Coelefyria by Infephus, Hegefippus and Stephanus: but by Ptolomie (whom I rather follow) in Phanicia. The tenth and last, Plinie nameth Canatha, and so doth Suetonius, and Stephanus, which Vokaterran calls Gamala, but Hegesippus rightly Camala, a Citie in the Region of Basan ouer Iordan, so called, because those two Hillson which it is seated, have the shape of a Cammell. But the collection of these ten Cities, whereof this Region tooke name, is better gathered out of Brochard, Breidenbach, and Saligniae, which make them to bee these; Cafaria Philippi, and Afor, before remembred, Cedes Nephtalim, Sephet, Corazin, Capharnaum, 40 Bethfaida, Iotapata, Tiberias, and Seythopolis, or Bethfan. For all other Authors difagree herein and giue no reason for their opinion. One place of the Euangelist Saint Matthew makes it manifest, that this Region called Decapolitana, was all that Tract betweene Zidon, and the Sea of Galilee. For thus it is written: And he departed againe Mat.4. from the coasts of Tyrus and Zidon, and came unto the Sea of Galilee, through the middelt of the coasts of Decapolis: fo that it was bounded by Damascus and Libanus on the North. by the Phanician Sea, betweene Zidon and Ptolomais on the West: by the Hillsof Gelbo and Beth fan on the South: and by the Mountaines Tracones, otherwise Hermon, Sanir, and Galacd, on the East: which is from East to West the whole breadth of the holy Land: and from the North to the South, neare the fame diffance which may be 50 each way fortie English miles.

Tyrius, Baccar) the same with Traconitis, yet Traconitis it lelfe is farre more to the East than Hammath in Nephtalim: for Traconitis lieth betweene Cafaria Philippi, and the Mountaines Trachones : which the Hebrewes call Gilead : and this Hammath or Chammath is feated under Cafaria, towards the Sea West-ward. And it seemeth that this mistaking grew by confounding Emalb or Hamalb the great in Calefyria, beyond the Mountaines Trachones, 20

To the South-west of this Sepphoris or Diocasaria was that blessed place of Nazareth, the Citie of Marie the Mother of Christ: in which hee himselfe was conceiued, it standeth betweene Mount Tabor, and the Mediterran Sea. In this Citic hee abode chiefly foure and twentie yeares, and was therefore called a Nazarite, as the Christians afterward were for many yeares. It was erected into an Archbishoprick in the following age. Neare vnto it are the Cities Buria (afterward well defended 50 against the Turkes ) and Nahalal of which Iof. 19. 17. and Iud. 1. 30. where it is called Nahalol: and Iof. 21.35. where it is a Citie of the Leuites, neare the Sea: adiovning to the River of Chison is Sarid, noted in Iosua for the vttermost of Zabulon.

In this Territoric of Zabulon there are divers small Mountaines: but Tabor is the most renowned, by the Apparition of Moses and Elias: and by the Transfiguration of Christ in the presence of Peter, James, and John: vnto whome Moses and Elize appeared; in memorie whereof on the top of the Mountaint, the Emprese Helen built a fumptuous Chappell.

The chiefe River of Zabulon is Chifon, which rifing out of Tabor runneth with one ftreame Eastward to the Sea of Galdee, and with an other streame Westward into the great Sea. This River of Chison where it riseth, and so farre as it runneth Southward, is called Chedumim or Cadumim: and for mine owne opinion, I take it to bee 10 the same which Ptolomie calleth Chorfeus : though others diffinguish them: and set Chorseus by Cesaria Palestine. There is a second Torrent or Brooke that riseth in the Hills of Bethulia, and falleth into the Sea of Galilee by Magdalum: and the third is a branch of a river rifing out of the Fountaines of Capharnaum, which falleth also into the same Sca, and neare Magdalum : which Torrent they call Dotham, from the See Laid Bage name of the Citie, from which it passeth Eastward to Bethsaida, and so ioyning with Mappe in or-Iordanis paruus, which runneth from the Valley of Iephthael which Iofuareckneth in 1661,9,14. the bounds of Zabulon, it endeth in the Sea of Galile.

«. VI. THE TRIBE OF FSACHAR.

He next adioyning Territorie to Zabulon, to the South and Southwest, was Jachar, who inhabited a part of the neather Galilee, within lordan; of whom there were increased in £57pt, as appeared by their musters at Mount Sinai 54400, able and warlike men, who leating their bodies with the rest in the Defarts, there entred the Holie

The first Citie of this Tribe neare the Sca of Galilee, was Tarichea, distant from Taricheain Sut-Tiberias eight English mile, or somewhat more, a Citic wherein the Iences (by the ton. practife of a certaine mutinous voltart, John the sonne of Leui) tooke armes against Insephus the Historian, then Gouernour of both Galilees. This Citie was first taken by Cassius, and 2000. Iewes carried thence captine; and afterward with great difficultie by Velpalian who entred it by the Sea lide, having first beaten the lewes in a sea fight repon the Lake or Sea of Galilee: he put to the sword all sorts of people, and of all ages: fauing that his furie being quenched with the Rivers of bloud running through enery street, he reserved the remainder for slaves and bond-men.

40 Next to Tarichea is placed Cession, or Clipion, of the Leuies, and then Ifachar, re- 10/21,28 Kiffin membred in the first of Kings; c.4.10.17 then Abes or Ebess, 10f. 19. 20. and Remeth on, which i. com of which 10f. 19.21. otherwise Ramoth 1. After these are the Cities of Calaloth, of which 1. Macchab. 9.2. Anem or Hen-Gannim of the Leuites, and Seesima or Shahatsima, the West border of Isachar, of which 10f.19.22. From hence ranging the Sea coast, there is found the Castle of Pilgrimes: a strong Castle inuironed with the Sea, fometime the store-house and Magasine of the Christians, and built by the Earle of S. Giles or Toloufe.

From the Castle of Pilgrimes the Sea maketh a great Bay towards the North, and the farthermost shore beginneth Mount Carmell, not farre from the River Chilon: where Elijah affembled all the Prophets, and Priests of Baal, and praied King Achab and the people affembled, to make triall whether the God of Ifrael, or the Idoll of Baal, were to be worshipped, by laying a sacrifice without fire on the Altar: which done the Priests of Baal praied, and cut their owne fiesh after their manner, but the 20 fire kindled not, while Elijah in derifion told them that their God was either in purluite of his enemies not at leisure, or perchance a-fleepe, &c. but at the praier of Elyah his fire kindled notwithstanding that he had caused the people to cast many Vestells of water thereon : by which miracle the people incenfed, flew all those Idolaters on the bankes of Chifon adioyning.

At the foote of this Mountaine to the North standeth Caiphas, built, as they fay, by Caiphas the high Priest. It is also knowne by the name of Porlina and Porphyria, sometime a Suffragane Bilhops seate. Returning againe from the Sea coast towards Tiberias by the bankes of Chifon, there are found the Citie of Hapharaim or Aphraim, and the Castles of Mesra, and Saba: of which Brochard and Breidenbach: and then 30 Naim on the River Chifon: a beautifull Citie while it stood, in the Gates whereof Christ raised from death the widdowes only sonne.

Then Seon or Shion named Iofua 19. betweene the two Hills of Hermon, in Ifachar: beyond it standeth Endor, famous by reason of the Inchauntresse that undertooke to raise vo the body of Samuel at the instigation of Saul.

In these * plaines Gedeon overthrew the Madianites, and herein, they thanke, Saul fought against the Philistims: Achab against the Syrians, and the Tartars against the Saracens.

S. VII. THE HALFE OF THE TRIBE OF MANASSE.

Of the bounds of this halfe Tribe: and of Scythopolis, Salem, Therfa, and others.

He next Tribe which joyneth it felfe to Ifachar towards the South, is the halfe of Manaffe, on the West side of Iordan. Manaffes was the first begotten of lofeph, the eleventh some of lacob. His mother was an Egyptian, the Daughter of Putiphar, Priest and Prince of Heliope-lie: which Manasses with his brother Ephraim, the grand-children of Iacob, were by adoption numbred amongst the sonnes of Iacob, and made up the 20 number of the twelue Patriarks.

Of Manaffe there were increased in Egypt, as they were numbred at Mount Sinat, 32200 able men: all which being confumed in the Defarts, thereentred of their issues $2700 bearing armes. The Territorie which fell to this one halfeof Manaffe, was bounded by Iordan on the East, and Dora vpon the Mediterran Sea on the West, Ie/zaelon the North, and Machmata is the South border.

The first and principall Citic which stood in this Territorie was Bethfan, sometime Ny/a, faith Plinie, built by Liber Pater, in honour of his Nurse there buried, of Plin, 110, 5, c.18, the same name, which Solinus confirmes. Afterward when the Scythians inuaded Afathe leffe, and pierst into the South, to the vttermost of Calefyria, they built this 20 Citie a-new, and very magnificent: and it had thereupon the name of Scythopolis, or the Citie of Scythians given it by the Greekes.

These barbarous Northren people, constrained the Iewes to fight against their owne Nation and kindred, by whose handes when they had obtained victorie, they themselues set on the lewes which scrued them, and slew them all. Stephanus makes it the vemost towards the South of Calesyria : and Strabo iones it to Galilee. It is seated betweene tordan and the Hills of Gilhoe, in aulone ad montes acrabitena, saith Ziegler. But I finde it in the East part of the Valley of Jefrael neare Jordan : after that Iordan streightneth it selfe againe into a River: leaving the Sea or Lake Genezareth, Notwithstanding, Montanus describes it farce to the West, and towards the Medi-40 terran Sea, neare Endor, contrarie to Stella, Laiestan, Adrichome, and all other the best Authors. This Citie was the greatest of all those of Decapolis: but the children of Manaffe could not expell the Inhabitants thereof: and therefore called it Sane an enimie, or Beth-fan, the house of an enimic.

Ouer the walls of this Bethfan the Philistims hung the bodie of Saul, and his sonnes, Index. 106.174 flaine at Gilboe. It had, while the Christian Religion flourished in those parts, an de Bell fair. Archbiflop, who had nine other Biflops of his Dioceffe, numbred by Tyrius, in his 14. Booke and 12. Chapter: but the same was afterward translated to Nazareth. The later trauailers in those parts affirme, that there is daily taken out among the rubble and the ruines of that Citie, goodly pillers and other peeces of excellent 30 marble, which witnesse the stately buildings, and magnificence which it had in elder times, but it is now a poore and desolate Village.

From Bethfan keeping the way by Jordan, they finde an ancient Citie called Sal lem, which Citie the ancient Rabbines, faith Hierome, doe not finde to bee the same Hieron, in Epife. with Hierufalem: there being in the time of Hierome and fince, a towne of that name; at East, the Last Heros.

John speaketh, is but contracted of Shahalim, of which in the Tribe of Beniamin, I. Sam. 9.4. This word Iunius maketh to be the Plurall of Shuhal: of which we reade, 1. Sam. 13.17. for as for that which is added out of Cant. 6.12. of Shylammitis, as if it had beene as much as a Woman of this Saleim, neare Anon, it hath no probabilitie.

In the body of this Territorie of Manalle, but somewhat nearer Iordan, than to the Mediterran Sea, were three great Cities, to wit, Therfa, whose King was one of those that Io/ua flew: which the Kings of Israel vsed for their Regall seate: till such time as Samaria was built. From hence the wife of Ieroboam went to Achia to enquire of her sonnes health: who knowing her, though shee were disguised, told her

The fecond was Thebes neare Samaria, of which name there are both in Agypt, and Greece, of great fame: in the affault of the Tower of this Towne, whereinto the 40 Citizens retired the Bastard Abimilee was wounded by a waightie stone, throwne by a Woman over the Wall, who despairing of his recoverie, commanded his Page to flay him out-right, because it should not be faid that he perished by the stroke of a Woman. But others fet this Citie in Ephraim neare Sichem or Neapolis.

Iud.9 v.54.

The third is Acrabata, of which the Territoric adioyning is called Acrabatens Hier:Mac. 1.c.5 (one of the Ten Toparchies or Governments in Iudea) for which Hierome 1. Macc. 5. reades Arabathena : but in the Greeke it is Acrabatine : Isidore calls it Agrabat. This Citie had one of the largest Territories of all Palastine belonging to the Gouernour thereof. Iofephus remembreth it often, as in his second Booke of the Iewes Warres, 6. 11.25.28. and elfe where.

The difference betweene a Tetrarchie and a Toparchie, was, that the first was taken for a Prouince, and the other for a Citie with some leffer Territoric adjoyning, and a Tetrarch is the same with Prajes in Latine, and President in English, being commonly the fourth part of a Kingdome; and thereof fo called. To the South-west of Acrabata they place the Cities of Balaam or Bilham, and Gethremmon of the Leuites : but Iunius out of 10f.2 1.25. and 1. Chron. 6.70. gathers that these two are but one : and that Iibleham Iof. 16. 11. is an other name of the same

Then is Iefrael a Regall Citic, set at the foot of the Mountaines of Gilboe, towards the South-west: herein Iezabel by a false accusation caused Naboth to be stoned, to the end thee might possesses his Vineyard adjoyning to the Citie, which Naboth re-10 fuled to fell, because it was his inheritance from his Father.

Isram also was cast unburied into the same field: for which his Mother Iezabe! King. 2: cap. 2, murthered Naboth.

Toward the Sca from Iefrael is the Citie which they call Gaber: in whose ascent as Ahaziah King of Iuda fled from Iehu, when hee had flaine Ioram, hee was wounded with the shot of an arrow, of which wound hee died at Mageddo adioyning. The 2. King. 9. 27. Scripture calls this Citic of Gaber, Gur.

The River vyhich passeth by the Towne, may perhaps beethe same which Ptolomie calleth Chorfeus: and not that of which wee haue spoken in Zabulon. For because this name is not found in the Scriptures, many of those that have described the Holie Land delineate no such River. Moore only fets it downe in his Geographie of the twelue Tribes: but the River which paffeth by Maggeddo hee understandeth to bee but a branch, falling thereinto. Lairstan and Schrot make a great confluence of waters in this place: agreable to this Scripture in 20 the fifth of Iudges: Then fought the Kings of Canaanin Tanaac by the waters of Maggeddo. The 40 later trauailers of the holy Land call Maggeddo Subimbre at this day.

It was the first of the Easterne Cities that received a Bishop: afterward erected into L.t. 2. bell. an Archbishopticke, commanding twentie others under it, saith Tyrius.

St. Hierome nameth Theophilus, Eusebius, Acacius, Euzorus, and Gelasius to haue 20 beene Bishops thereof. In this Citie was Cornelius the Centurion baptized by S. Peter: and herein dwelt Philip the Apostle: S. Indg. 1. 27.) may seeme to bee Dor. It was a strong and powerfull Citie: and the fourth in account of those twelue Principalities or Sitarchies, which Salomon ere-Eted. Iunius vpon Maccab, 15.11. placeth it betweene the Hill Carmel and the mouth of the River Cherfeus: for so some name the River Chorfeus, of which we have spoken already.

Into this Citie, for the strength thereof, Tryphon fled from Antiochus the sonne of Demetrius: where he was by the same Antiochus besieged with 120000.foot-men Macr. 1, 13, 15, and 8000. It had also a Bishops scate of the Diocesse of Casaria.

Of the Kingdome of Phanicia.

The bounds and chiefe Cities, and Founders, and Name, of this Kingdome : and of the invention of Letters ascribed

Ecavs E these fine Tribes, of Affer, Nephtalim, Zabulon, Iffachar, and the halfe of Manaffe, poffeft the better part of that ancient Kingdome of Phanicia, to wit. of fo much as lay to the South part of Anti-libanus: I have therefore gathered a Briefe of those Kinges which have governed therein : at least so many of them as time (which deuoureth all things) hath left to posteritie: and that the rest have perished, it is not strange: seeing so many volumes of excellent learning in fo long a race and revolution, & in fo many changes of Estates and Conquests of Heathen Princes, haue beene torne, cast away, or otherwise consumed.

The limits of this Kingdome, as touching the South parts, are very vncertaine: 40 but all Cosmographers doe in effect agree, that it takes beginning from the North, where that part of Syria, which is called Casio is, ends : most of them bounding it by Orthofia, to the North of Tripolis. Ptolomie makes it a little larger, as reaching from Pro . Toberfe. the Riner Eleutherus, that falls into the Sea at the Iland of Aradus, somewhat to the North of Orthofia, and stretching from thence alongst the coast of the Mediterran sea, as farre as the River of Chorfeus, which feemes to bee that which the lewes call the Plantis, cale. Torrent or River of Maggeeddo. Plinie extends it farther and comprehends loppe within it : Coruinus and Budaus, Joppe and Gaza. Phanicia apud priscos appellata (faith By DAEVS) que nunc Palestina Syria dicitur: It was called Phanicia of old (faith hee) which now is called Palastina of Syria.

50 Strabo comprehends in this Countrie of Phanicia, all the Sea fide of Iudaa, and strab.l.16. Palestina, euen vnto Pelusium, the first Port of Agypt. On the contrarie Diodorus Bude. de Asta. Sieulus, foldeth it vp in Calefyria, which hee boundeth not. But for my selfe I take a middle course, and like best of Protomies description, who was seldome deceived in his owneart. It had in it these famous Maritimate Cities (besides all those of the Ilands) to wit, Aradus, Orthofia, Tripolis, Botrys, Byblus, Berytus, Sidon, Tyre, Ptolomais (or sicon) Dora, and Cafaria Palaftina: and by reason of the many ports and goodly Sca-townes, it anciently commanded the Trades of the Easterne world : and they were absolute Kings of the Mediterran Sca.

The ancient Regall Scate of those Princes was Zidon, built by Zidon the first fonne of Canaan: and the people then subject to that familie were called Zidonians: the same state continuing even vnto Iosus time. For till then it is probable that there was but one king of all that region; afterward called Phanicia: which Proceedius also confirmeth in his second Booke of Vandall Warres. But in processe of time the Citie of Tyre adioyning became the more magnificent: yet according to the Pro- to phet it was but a Daughter of Zidon, and by them first built and peopled.

But after the death of Moses, and while Iosua yet gouerned Israel, Agenor an Agyptian of Thebes, or a Phanician bred in Agypt, came thence with his sonnes C. mus, Phanix, Cyrus, and Cilix, (fay Cedrenus and Curtius) and built and poffeft the Cities of Tyre and Zidon: to wit, the new Tyrns, and brought into Phanicia (fo called after the name of his fecond Sonne) the vse of letters; which also Cadmus in his pursuite after his fifter Europa taught the Gracians. For Taurus King of Crete, when he surprised Tyre, had stollen her thence : of which the Pocts deuised the fable of Iupiters transformation into a Bull, by whome that stealth was also supposed to be made, Pomponius Sabinus makes Belus the first King of Phanicia: and findes Caumus 20 his fucceffour: whom hee calleth his grand-child: and it feemeth that Belus was the Father of Agenor, and not Neptune: because the successours of Dido held that name alwaies in reuerence, making it a part of their owne as Afdrubaal, Hannibaal: which memorie Firgil also toucheth in these Verses:

The Queenc anone commands the waightie bowle (Waightie with pretious stones and massie gold) To flow with wine. This BELVs vs'd of old, And all of BELVs Line.

Whether this Belus were Father or Grand-father to Agenor, the matter is not great. But it feemeth to me by comparing of times, that Belus was Ancestor to these Phanicians, and preceded Agenor. For were Belus, or Jupiter Belus, the sonne of Neptune by Libya, the Daughter of Epaphus, or were he the sonne of Telegonus, according to Eusebius; yet it is agreed that Cecrops then ruled in Attica: and in the end of Cecrops time, faith S. Augustine, Moses left Agypt : Agenors successour living at once 40 with Iofua. Now that Agenor returned about the fame time into the Territoric of Zidon, I cannot doubt: neither doe I denie, but that he gaue that Region the name of Phanicia, in honour of his Sonne. But in steede of the building of Tyre, and Zidon, it is probable that hee repaired and fortified both: and therefore was called a Founder, as Semiramis and Nabucho dono for were of Babylon.

For beeit true that Agenor was of the same Nation, and brought up in Agypt: where he learnt the vse of letters ( Agypt flourishing in all kind of learning in Moses time) or were he by Nation an Egyptian: yet is it very likely that either he came to faue his owne Territorie: or otherwise to defend the coast of Canaan, from the Israelites: who were by Meses led out of Agypt, to the great losse and dishonour of 50 that Nation: and by Iosua conducted over Iordan, to conquer and possesse the Canaanites Land. For though the Agyptians by reason of the losse which they receiued by the hand of God, in the Red sea, and by the ten plagues cast on them before that, and by the flaughter of fo many of the Male children at the fame time, could not hinder the Hebrewes from inuading Canaan by Land: which also they knew had fo many powerfull Nations to defend it : the Defarts inter-jacent, and the strong Edomites, Moabites, Emorites, and Ammonites their borderers : yet Egypi having fuch Veffells, or Ships, or Gallies, as were then in vie : did not in all probabilitie neglect to Garrison the Sea coast, or ashift Agenor with such forces, as they had to spare; and which they might performe with the greater facilitie, in that the Philistims which held the shores of Canaan, next adioyning vnto them, were their Priends and Confederates.

Now as it appeareth by the course of the storie, those Cities of Phanicia, which 10 Agenor was said to haue built (that is, to haue fortified and defended against Iosua, and against the Tribes after him, as Zidon, Sor, or Tyre, by Iofua called the strong Ci- C.19, V.30. tie, Accho afterward Ptolomais, Aczib and Dor) were all that Phanicia had in those

That the Kings of Phanicia were mightic, especially by Sea, it appeareth, first by their defence against Ifrael: secondly by this, that David and Salomon could not mafler them: but were glad of their alliance: thirdly, that one of their Cities, though they were then but Reguli, defended it selfe 13. yeares against a King of Kings, Nabuchodonofor : and that Alexander the great (who being made victorious by the prouidence of God, seemed vnresistable) spent more time in the recouerie of Tre, than 20 in the conquest of all the Cities in Asia.

Other opinions there are, as that of Berofus out of Tofephus, who conceives that Tyre was founded by Tyras the sonne of Japhet. And for the Region it selfe, though Callishenes derine it ab arbore dactylorum, and the Greekes from the word Phonos, of flaughter, because the Phanicians flew all that came on their coasts, yet for my selfe I take it that Phanix the sonne of Agenor gaue it that name. But that either Agenor in Phanicia, or Cadmus his sonne in Greece, were the Inventors of Letters, it is ridiculous: and therefore the dispute vnnecessarie.

The Athiopians affirme that Atlas , Orion, Orpheus, Linus, Hercules, Prometheus, Cadmue, and others, had from them the first light of all those Arts, Sciences, and 20 einill Policies, which they afterward profest, and taught others: and that Pythagor as himselfe was instructed by the Libyans: to wit, from the South and Superior Egyptians: from whom those which inhabited nearer the out-let of Wilns, as they say, borrowed their Divinitie and Philosophie: and from them the Greekes, then barbarous, receiued Civilitie. Againe, the Phanicians challenge this invention of Letters and of Learning : acknowledging nothing from the Agyptians at all; neither doe they allow that Agenor and his fonnes were Affricans: whence Lucan.

Lucan. 1.5.35

Phanicians first (if fame may credit haue) In rude Characters dar'd our wordes to grave.

And that Cadmus was the sonne of Agenor, and was a Phanician, and not an Agyptian, it appeareth by that answere made by Zeno: when he in a kinde of reproch was called a stranger and a Phænician:

> Si patria est Phanix quid tum? nam CADMVS & ipse Phænix : cui debet Gracia docta libros.

Athen.t.Digue,

Out of doubt the Phanicians were very ancient : and from the Records and Chronicles of Tyre, Iosephus the Historian confirmes a great part of his Antiquities The Thracians againe subscribe to none of these reports : but affirme constantly, that the great Zamolxis flourished among them : when Atlas lived in Mauritania Nilus and Vulcan in Agypt: and Ochus in Phanicia. Yea, some of the French doe not blush to maintaine, that the ancient Gaules taught the Greekes the vse of Letters, and other Sciences. And doe not we know that our Bardes and Druids are as ancient as those Gaules, and that they sent their sonnes hither to bee by them instructed in all kinde of learning?

Lastly, whereas others bestow this invention on Moses, the same hath no probabilitie at all, for hee lived at such time as learning and arts flourished most, both in Ægypt, and Affyria, and he himfelfe was brought vp in all the learning of the Æ eyptians, from his infancie.

But true it is that letters were invented by those excellent Spirits of the first age, and before the generall floud: either by Seth, or Enos, or by whom elfe God knowess from whom all wisedome and vinderstanding hath proceeded. And as the same infinite God is present with all his Creatures, so hath he given the same invention to divers Nations: whereof the one hath not had commerce with the other: as well in this as in many other knowledges: for even in Mexico, when it was first discovered, there was found written Bookes after the manner of those Hieroglyphicks, anciently 10 vsed by the Agyptians, and other Nations and so had those Americans a kinde of Heraldrie: and their Princes differing in Armes and Scutchions, like vnto those vsed by the Kingsand Nobilitie of other Nations. bookes of Zero, Sachoniatho, Musseus, and others of that Nation, being no where found) the same is to be gathered out of the Malenta and M ing no where found) the same is to be gathered out of the Scriptures, Iofephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus.

Agenor lived at once with Iofua, to whome succeeded Phanix, of whom that part of Cansan, and so farre towards the North as Aradus, tookethe name of Phanicia: what Kings succeeded Phanix it doth not appeare: but at such time as the Gracians belieged Troy, Phasis governed Phanicia.

In Hieremies time and while Iehoiakim ruled in Iuda, the Tyrians had a King a-part: for Hieremie speaketh of the Kings of Zidon, of Tyre, of Edom, &c. as of seucrall

In Xerxes time, and when he prepared that incredible Armie wherewith he inuaded Greece, Tetramnestus ruled that part of Phanicia, about Tyre, and Zidon: who commanded as some Writers affirme, Xerxes sleete, or rather, as I suppose, those 200. Gallies, which himselfe brought to his aide: for at this time it seemeth, that the Phaenicians were Tributaries to the Persian: for being broken into Reguli, and pettic Kings in Hieremies time, they were subjected by Nabuchodonofor; of whose conquests in the Chapter before remembred, Hieremie prophecied.

Tennes, though not immediately, succeeded Tetramnestus: remembred by D. Siculus in his 14. Booke.

Strato, his successor, and King of Zidon, Alexander Macedon threw out, because of 50 his dependancie vpon Darius, and that his Predecessors had served the East Empire against the Gracians. But divers Kings, of whomethere is no memorie, came betweene Tennes and Strato. For there were confumed 130. yeares and somewhat more betweene Xerxes and Alexander Macedon. And this man was by Alexander effeemed esteemed the more vinworthic of restitution, because (saith Curtius) hee rather submitted himselfe by the instigation of his Subjects (who foresaw their vtter ruine by relillance) than that hee had any disposition thereunto, or bare any good affection towards the Macedonians.

Of this Strate, Atheneus out of Theopompus reporteth, that hee was a man of ill Athen. Lt2.c.13 liuing: and most voluptuous; also that hee appointed certaine games and prizes for Women dancers, and fingers: whom he to this end chiefly inuited, and affembled: that having beheld the most beautifull and lively among them, hee might recover them for his owne vse and delights. Of the strange accident about the death of one 10 Strato King of these coasts, S. Hierome and others make mention : who having heard Hieron L. cont. that the Persians were neare him with an Armie too waightie for his strength, and louin. finding that hee was to hope for little grace, because of his falling away from that Empire, and his adhering to the Agyptians: hee determining to kill himselfe, but fainting in the exequation, his wife being present wrested the sword out of his hand and flew him: which done flee also therewith pierced her owne bodie; and died.

After Alexander was possest of Zidon, and the other Strato driven thence, Hee gaue the Kingdome to Hephaftion, to dispose of: who having received great entertainement of one of the Citizens, in whole house he lodged, offered to recompence him therewith; and willingly offered to establish him therein; but this Citizen no 20 leffe vertuous than rich, delired Hephaftion that this Honour might beeinferred on fome one of the bloud and race of their ancient Kings: and presented vnto him Balonymus, whom Curtius calls Abdolominus, IvsTINE Abdolomius, and Plutarch Alynomus: who at the very houre that he was called to this regall Estate, was with his owne handes working in his Garden, fetting hearbs, and rootes, for his reliefe and fustenance: though otherwise a wise man and exceeding inft.

These were the ancient Kings of Zidon: whose estate being afterward changed into Popular or Ariflocraticall: and by times and turnes subjected to the Emperours of the East: there remaineth no farther memorie of them, than that which is formerly deliuered in the Tribe of Affer.

30 The Kings of Tyre, who they were before Samuels time, it doth not appeare: 10fephus the Historian; as is faid, had many things wherewith hee garnished his Antiquities from the Tyrian Chronicles : and out of Iofephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus. there may be gathered a descent of some twentie Kings of the Trians, but these Authors, though they both pretend to write out of Menander Ephesius, doe in no fort agree in the times of their raignes, nor in other particulars, Abibalus is the first King of the Tyrians, that Iosephus and Theophilus remember: whom Theophilus calls Abemalus: the same perchance that the sonne of Sirach men- case. tioneth in his fourtie and fixth Chapter, speaking of the Princes of the Tyrians.

To this Abibalus, Suron succeeded, if he be not one and the same with Abibalus. 40 Dauid (faith Eufebius out of Eupolemus) constrained this Suron to pay him Tribute, of Prep. Europ. 19. whom also David complaineth Pfal. 83.

Hiram succeeded Suron, whom sosephus calls Irom, and Theophilus sometime Hieromenus, sometime Hieromus, but Tatian and Zonaras Chiram. He entred into a league with Dauid, and fenthim Cedars with Masons, and Carpenters, to performe his buildings in Hierusalem: after he had beaten thence the Iebusites. The same was hee that fogreatly affifted Salomon: whom he not only furnished with Cedars, and other Materialls towards the railing of the Temple, and with great fummes of money, but also he ioyned with him in his enterprize of the East India, and of Ophir: and furnished Salomon with Mariners and Pilots: the Tyrians being of all Nations the most excellent

Nauigators : and lent him 120, talents of gold. Of this Hiram there is not only mention in divers places of Scripture, but in Iosephus in his Antiquities the 7 and 8. 2.5 am. 5. De. chap. 2. & 3. in Theophilus his 3d booke, in Tatianus his Oration against the Greekes and 2. Some. s. in Zonaras Tome the first. This Prince seemed to be very mightie and magnificent, 1. F the great mutations of this Kingdome and State of the Tyrians, mixed with a discourse of diuers other Nations, there is one Bozius that hath written a Trast at large, intituled deruinis Gentium. ties, yea in all thinges vnder Heauen, haue proceeded from his ordinance who only is vnchangeable, and the same for euer; yet whereas the said Boesius, inforcing herehenee, that the prosperitie and ruine of the Tyrians were fruits of their imbracing or for faking the true Religion, to proue this his affertion, suppose the Tyrians to haue beene Edumeans, descended from Esau, tacebe brother: hirst, it can hardly be beleeued that Tyre, when it flourished most in her ancient glorie, was in any fort truly deuout and religious. But to this end (besides the proofe which the Scriptures give of the mans good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Tyres to the send of the same good affection when Schonge hall the Schonge hall the true the same good affection when Schonge hall the same 20 Scriptures giue of Hirams good affection when Salamon built the Temple) he brings Box, deruin, many coniecturall arguments: whereof the strongest is their pettigree and descent: Genal. 5.2.7, it being likely in his opinion that the posteritie of Esau received from him by Tradition the Religion of Abraham and Isaac. That the Tyrians were Eslamanns, he endeuours to shew, partly by weake reasons, painefully strained from some affinitie of names, which are arguments of more delight than waight: partly by authoritie. For Strabo, Herodotus, Plinie, and others witnesse; that the Tyrians came from the Red Sea, in which there were three llands, called Tyrus, Aradus, and Sidon: which very names (as he thinketh) were afterwards given to the Cities of Pharicia. Considering therefore that all the coast of the Red Sea, was (in his opinion) under the Edu-

30 means: as Elab and Estingaber; or vinder the Amalekites, who descended of Amalec the Nephew of Esan, whose chiefe Citie was Madian, so called of Madian the sonne of Abraham by Ceihura, whose posteritie did people it: the consequence appeares good (as he takes it) that the Tyrians originally were Edomites: differing little or nothing in Religion from the children of Israel. Hercunto hee addes that Cadmus and his Companions brought not into Greece the worship of Assarias, the Idoll of the Sidenians. That the Parents of Thales and Pherceydes being Phanicians, themselves differed much in their Philosophie from the Idolatrous customics of the Greekes. That in Teman, a Towne of the Edumeans, was an Vinuarsitie, wherein as may appeare by Eliphas the Temanite, who disputed with 10b, Religion was sincerely taught.

Such is the discourse of Bozms, who labouring to proue one Paradoxe by an other; descrives in both very little credit. For neither doth it follow, that if the Tyrims were Edumeans, they were then of the true Religion, or well affected to God and his People: neither is it true that they were Edumeans at all. In what Religion Esai brought up his children it is no where found written, but that himselfe was a prophane man, and disauowed by God, the Scriptures in plaine termes expresse. That his posteritie were Idolaters, is directly proued in the flue and twentieth Chapter of the second booke of Chromoles. That the Edomites were perpetuall enemies to the House of If sal, sauconly when David and some of his face, Kings of Inda, held them in subjection, who knowes not? In who is ignorant of Davids vastiently behavior amongst them, when sirtle they were subdued? Surely it was not any argument of Kindred or Alliance, betweene Tyrus and Mount Seir, that Hiram held such good correspondence with David: cuen then when David sew all the Males of Edom: neither was it for their denotion to God, and good affection to Ifrael, that the Edomites were so ill intreated. It seemeth that the pietie and ancient wisedome of Eliphaz the I i  $\frac{1}{3}$  Themanite, Iuftin.l.11. Virgil.l.1. Themanite was then forgotten, and the Edumaans punished, for being such as David in his owne daies found them. Although indeede the Citie of Teman whence Elipost came to reason with lob, is not that in Edumaa, but an other of the same name, lying East from the Sea of Galalee, and adioyning to Hus, the Countrie of lob: and to Such the Citic of Bildad the Subite, as both fuch Chorographers who best knew those parts, doe plainly thew, and the holy Text makes manifest. For lob is said to have exceeded in riches; and Salomon in wifedome, all the people of the East; not the inhabitants of Mount Seir, which lay due South from Palastina. True it is that Eliphaze the sonne of Esau had a sonne called Teman: but that Fathers were wont in those daies to take name of their sonnes, I no where finde. And Ismael also had a 10 fonne called Thema: of whom it is not vnlike that Theman in the East had the name: for as much as in the feuenth Chapter of the booke of Indges the Midianites, Amalekites, and all they of the East are called Ismaelites. And he that well considers how great and strong a Nation Amalec was, which durst give battaile to the Host of I/rael. wherein were 600000. able men, will hardly belieue that fuch a people were defcended from one of Efan his grand-children. For how powerfull and numberlesse must the forces of all Edom have beene: if one Tribe of them, yea one Familie of a Tribe had beene fo great? furely Mount Serr and all the Regions adioyning could not have held them. But wee no where finde that Edom had to doe with Analee: or affifted the Amalekites: when Saul went to roote them out. For Amalec is no 20 where in Scripture named as a Tribe of Edom: but a Nation of it selfe, if distinct from the Ilmaelites. The like may be faid of Midian, that the Founder thereof being fonne to Abraham by Cethura, doubtleffe was no Edomite. And thus much in generall for all the Seigniorie of the Red Sea-coast, which Bozius imagines the Edumeans to have held: if the Edomites in after-times held some places as Elan and Estongaber on the Red Sea shore, yet in Moses time, which was long after the building of Tyre, they held them not. For Moles himselfe saith that Israel did compasse all the borders of Edom: within which limits had Midian stood, Moles must need shaue knowne it: because he had sojourned long in that Countrie: and there had left his Wise and Children, when he went into Egypt.

But coniccturall Arguments, how probable focuer, are needleffe in so maniscit a case. For in the 83. Pfal. Edom, Amalec, and Tyre, are named as distinct Nations: yea the Tyrians and Sidomans being one people, as all good Authors shew, and Bazim himselfs consessed where Camanites, as appeares Gen.c. 10. v. 15. & 10. appointed by God to have beene destroicd, and their Landsgiven to the children of Asir tos. 20. because they were ever Idolaters, and of the cursed seed of Canan, not Cosens to Israel, nor professors of the same Religion. For though Himan said, Biesseibe God that hash sent King David a wife Some., we cannot inferre that he was of Davids Religion. The Turke hath said as much of Christian Princes, his confederates. Certains it is that the Sidonians then worthipped Assamble, and drew See 40 lamon also to the same Idolatrie.

Whereas Euram aided Saloman in building the Temple, hee did it for his owne endes, receiving therefore of Saloman great prouifion of Corne, and Oile, and the offer of twentie Townes or Villages in Galice. And if wee rightly confider thinges, it will appeare that Euram, in all points, dealt Merchant-like with Saloman, Hee allowed him Timber, with which Libanus was, and yet is ouer-peftered: beingotherwise apt to yeeld filkes: as the Andarine filkes which come from thence, and other good commodities. For Corne and Oile, which hee wanted, hee gaue that which he could well spare to Saloman. Also gold for Land: wherein Saloman was the wifer: who having got the gold first, gaue to Hiram the worst Villages that hee 50 had: with which the Trian was ill pleased. But it was a necessarie pollicie which inforced Tyrus to hold league with Israel. For Danid had subdued Mash, Amman, Edan, the Aramites, and a great part of Arabia, cuen to Euphrates: through which Countries the Tyrians were wont to carrie and recarrie their Wares on Cammells, to their fleetes on the R cd Sea: and backe again to Tyrus: fo that Salomon being Lord of all the Countries, through which they were to paile, could have cut off their Trade.

But the Ifraelites were no Sea-men, and therefore glad to share with the Tyrians in their aductures. Yet Salmon as Lord of the Sea-townes, which his Father had taken from the Philistinus, might have greatly distressed the Tyrians, and perhaps have brought them even into subjection. Which Hiram knowing was glad (and no merualle) that Salmon rather meant as a man of peace to imploy his Fathers treasure, in magnificent workes, than in pursuing the conquest of all Syria. Therefore hee wilso lingly aided him, and sent him cunning workemen, to increase his delight in goodly buildings, imageries, and instruments of pleasure.

As these passages betweene Salomon and Hiram, are no strong Arguments of pietie in the Tyrians: fo those other proofes which Bozius frames negatively vpon particuiar examples, are very weake. For what the Religion of Cadmus was, I thinke, no man knowes. It feemes to me that having more cunning than the Greekes, and being very ambitious, hee would faine haue purchased divine honours: which his Daughters, Nephewes, and others of his house obtained, but his owne many misfortunes beguiled him of such hopes, if he had any. Thales and Pherecy des are but fingle examples. Euery faluage Nation hath fome whose wisedome excelleth the 20 Vulgar, cuen of civill people. Neither did the morall wisedome of these men expresse any true knowledge of the true God. Only they made no good mention of the Gods of Greece: whome being newly come thither, they knew not. It is no good argument to fay, that Cadmus and Thales being Tyrians, are not knowne to haue taught Idolatrie, therefore the Tyrians were not Idolaters. But this is of force, That Carthage, Vtica, Leptis, Cadiz, and all Colonies of the Tyrians (of which, I thinke, the Ilands before mentioned in the Red Sca to have beene, for they traded in all Seas) were Idolaters, even from their first beginnings: therefore, the Tyrians, who planted them, and to whom they had reference, were so likewise.

This their Idolatrie from Salomons time o wards is acknowledged by Bozius, 30 who would have vs thinke them to have beene formerly a strange kinde of depout Edomites. In which fancie he is so peremptorie, that he itileth men of contratie opinion, impios politicos, as if it were impietie to thinke that God (who even among the Heathen, which have not knowne his name, doth favour Vertue and hate Vice) hath often rewarded morall honestie, with temporall happinesse. Doubtlesse this doctrine of Bozius, would better have agreed with Iulian the Apollata, than with Cyril. For if the Afgrians, Greekes, Romanes, and all those Nations of the Gentiles, did then prosper most when they drew nearest unto the true Religion: what may bee faid of the foule Idolatrie which grew in Rome, as falt as Rome it felfe grew: and was inlarged with some new superstition, almost vpon enery new victorie? How few 40 great battailes did the Romanes winne, in which they vowed not either a Temple to fome new God, or some new Hongur to one of their old Gods? yea, what one Nation faue only that of the Iewes, was fubdued by them, whose Gods they did not asterward entertaine in their Citie? Only the true God, which was the God of the Jewes, they rejected, upbraiding the Jewes with him, as if he were unworthie of the Romane Majestie: shall we hereupon inforce the leud and foolish conclusion, which Heathen writers yfed against the Christians in the Primitive Church: That such Idolatrie had caused the Citie of Rome to flourish, and that the decay of those abhominations did also bring with it the decay of the Empire? It might well be thought so, if prosperitie were a signe or effect of true Religion. Such is the blinde zeale of Bozius, 50 who writing against those whom he fallly termes impious, gives strength to such as are impious indeede. But fuch indifcretion is viually found among men of his humour: who having once either foolifhly imbraced the dreames of others: or vaincly fashioned in their owne braines any strange Chimara's of Dininitie, condemne all fuch in the pride of their zeale, as Atheifts and Infidells, that are not transported with the like intemperate ignorance. Great pittie it is that fuch madde Dogges are oftentimes incouraged by those, who having the command of many tongues, when they themselues cannot touch a man in open and generous opposition, will wound him fecretly by the malicious vertue of an Hypocrite.

AVING now past ouer Phanitia, we come to the next Territorie adioyning: which is that of Ephraim: fomtime taken per excellentiam for the whole Kingdome of the ten Tribes. Ephraim was the second sonne of Isfeph, whose iffues when they left Egypt were in number 45000. all which dying in the Defarts (10/14 excepted) there entred the Holy Land of their children, growne to bee able men 3 2 500. who fate 30 downe on the West side of Iordan, betweene Manasse, and Beniamin : who bounded Ephraim by the North and South; as Iordan, and the Mediterran Sea, did by the East and West.

The first and chiefe Citic which Ephraim had was Samaria : the Metropolis of the Kingdome of Israel: built by Amris or Homri King thereof: and seated on thetop of the Mountaine Somron, which ouer-looketh all the bottome, and as farre as the Sea-coast. It was afterward called Sebaste, or Augusta, inhonour of August. Cafar. This Citie is often remembred in the Scriptures: and magnificent it was in the first building; for as Brochard observeth, the ruines which yet remaine, and which Bro- 40 chard found greater than those of Hierusalem, tell those that behold them, what it was when it stood vpright: for to this day there are found great store of goodly marble pillers, with other hewen and carued stone in great abundance, among the rubble.

It was beaten to the ground by the Sonnes of Hyrcanus the high Priest: restored and built by the first Herod the some of Antipater : who to flatter Casar called it Sebaste. Herein were the Prophets Helisaus, and Abdias buried : and so was John Baptist. It now hath nothing but a few Cottages filled with Gracian Monkes.

Neare Samaria towards the South, is the Hill of Bethell, and a towne of that name: on the top of which Mountaine Ieroboam erected one of his golden Calues, to bee 50 worshipped: with which he seduced the Ifraelites.

In fight of this Mountaine of Bethel, was that ancient Citie of Sichem; after the re-Sietar. Ioh. 4.5. stauration called Neapolis, now Pelosa, and Napolasa: It was destroiced by Simeon and Malorthan, 10/ept, 11, ant. 1. Leui, in reuenge of the rauishment of their Sifter Dina: and after that by Abimelec euened with the foile. Ieroboam raifed it vp againe : and the Damascens a third time cast it downe.

Under Sichem towards the Sea standeth Pharaton or Pirhathon on the Mountaine 1udg.12:15. Amelec, the Citie of Abdon Judge of Ifrael. And under it Bethoron of the Leuites, 2.King. 13. built as it is faid by Sara, the Daughter of Ephraim. Neare to this Citie Iudas Macchabaus overthrew Seron and Lyfias , Lieutenants to Antiochus. This Citie had Salomon formerly repaired and fortified.

Betweene Bethoron and the Sea, standeth Samir of which Tof. 10. And Saron whole King was flaine by Iofua: it is also mentioned Acts 9.25. and of this Saron the 10/6:12.18.

10 Valley taketh name, which beginning at Cafaria Palastina extendeth it selfe alongst the coast as farre as Ioppe, faith Adrichome. Though indeede the name Sarona is not particularly giuen to this Valley, but to every fruitfull plaine Region; for not only this Valley is so called, to wit, betweene Casaria and Joppe, but that also betweene the Mountaine Tabor and the Sea of Galilee : for so S. Hierome vpon the fine and thirtieth Chapter of Esay interprets the word Saron: and so doth the same Father in his Commentaries vpon Abdia, reade Saron for Affaron: vnderstanding thereby a Plaine neare Lidda: which Lidda in his time was called Diospolis, or the Citic of Jupiter, one of the Toparchies of Indea, the fifth in dignitie (or the third after Plinie) where Saint PETER (non sua sed Christi virtute) cured Aneas. Niger calls all that Region from Alle. 20 Anti-libanus to Ioppe Sarona. Thus farre Tyrus, by whole testimonie we may coniccture, that this S. George was not that Arrian Bishop of Alexandria; but rather some better Christian; for this of Alexandria was flaine there in an vprore of the people, and his affice caft into 40 the Sea, as Ammianus Marcellinus reports. And yet also it may be, that this Geor- L, 22, 6, 150

gius was a better Christian, than hee is commonly thought: for his wordes of the Temple of GENIVS, How long shall this Sepulcher stand ? occasioned the vprore of the people against him: as fearing least hee would give attempt to overthrow that beautifull Temple. This also Marcellinus reports : who though hee say that this Georgius was also deadly hated of the Christians, who else might have rescued him: yet he addeth that his ashes with the ashes of two others, were therefore cast into the Sea, least if their Reliques had been gathered vp, Churches should be built for them, as for others. But for my part I rather thinke that it was not this Georgius. whose name lives in the right honourable Order of our Knights of the Garter, but 30 rather an other, whom Tyrius, aboue cited, witneffeth to have beene buried at Lidda or Diospolis. The same also is confirmed by Vitriac. S. Hierome affirmes that it salie rom. 6.c.4 was fometime called Tigrida, and while the Christians inhabited the holy Land, it had a Bishop Suffragan.

Of the Kings of the ten Tribes from IEROBOAM to

F the first Kings of Ifrael, I omit in this place to speake: and reserve it to the Catalogue of the Kings of Iuda: of whom hereafter.

Touching the acts of the Kings of the ten Tribes, but briefly, beginning after the division from Iuda and Beniamin, now it followeth to speake. The first of these Kings was Jeroboam, the sonne of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, who being a man of strength and courage was by Salomon made ouer-feet of the buildings of the Millo or Munition in Hieru/alem, for as much as belonged to the charge of the Tribes of Ephraim and Manaffe: and so many of them as wrought in those workes. During which time as hee went from Hierusalem, hee incountred the Prophet Ahijah: who made him know that he was by God destinied to 40 be King of Ifrael: and to command ten of the twelue Tribes. After this fearing that those thinges might come to Salomons knowledge, hee fled into Egypt to Shishak, whom Esfebius calleth Ofochores, whose Daughter he married : the Predecessour of which Shiftak (if not the fame) did likewise entertaine Adad the Idumaan, when hee was carried youg into Agypt from the furie of David, and his Captaine loab: which Adad, the King of Expt married to his Wines lifter Taphnes : vling both him and Ieroboam as instruments to shake the Kingdome of Indea: that himselfe might the easilier spoile it, as he did : for in the fifth yeare of Rehoboam, Shishack fackt the Citic LReets of Hierusalem, and carried thence all the treasure of David and Salomon, and all the Spoiles which David tooke from Adadezer of Soba, with the presents of Toba, King of

This Ieroboam after the death of Salomon became Lord of the ten Tribes: and though he were permitted by God to gouerne the Israelites, and from a meane man exalted to that state: yet preferring the pollicies of the world before the leruice and honour of God (as fearing that if the Tribes vnder his rule should repaire to Hierusa

Hee had three sonnes named in the Scripture, Ochozias, Ioram, and Ioas: besides feuentie other sonnes by fundry wines and Concubines.

Ochozias succeeded his father Achab. The Moabites fell from his obedience: hee Recolochab was bruifed himselfe by a fall: and sent for counsaile to Beel-zebub the God of Acharon. the same with Eliab the Prophet meeteth the meffenger on the way: and milliking that Ochozing Below and Pilling the County helps from that dead Idoll selved the moffenger. If there were not a Coding to faith Pige. fought helpe from that dead Idoll, asked the messenger, If there were not a God in ane you List, Ifrael? Ochozias sendeth two Captaines, and with each fiftie souldiers to bring Eli- *Kors 1.

loram the brother of Ochozias by lezabel, succeeded: He allured Iosaphat king of Juds, and the king of Edom to affifthim against the Moabites, who refused to pay him the tribute of 20000. The three kings wanted water, for themselves and their horses, in the Desarts. The Prophet Elisba causeth the ditches to flowe. The Moshites are overthrowne: their king flicth to Kirharafeth: and beeing belieged, according to some Expositors, burnt his sonne on the walles as a Sacrifice, whereat

20 the three kings moved with compassion returned and left Moab, wasting and spoyling that Region. Others, as it seemes with better reason, understand the Text to speake of the some of the king of Edom, whom they suppose in this irruption to haue beene taken prisoner, by the Moabites, and that the king of Moab shewed him ore the walls, threatning vnlefle the fiege were dissolued, that he would offer him in facrifice to his Gods. Whereupon the king of Edom befought those of Iuda and Israel to breake off the siege for the safetie of his sonne: which when the other kings refused to yeeld vnto, and that Moab according to his former threatning had burnt the king of Edoms sonne vpon the rampire, that all the assailants might discerne it, the king of Edom being by this fad spectacle inraged, for sooke the partie of the other to kings; for want of whose affishance the siege was broken vp.

After this the king of Aram fent to Ioram, to heale Naman the Captaine of his Armie of the leprovile. The answere of Ioram was; Am I God to kill, and to give life, that hee doth fend to heale a man from his leprousie? adding, that the Aramite fought but matter of quarrell against him. Elisha hearing thereof, willed the king to fend Waaman to him: promifing that hee should know that there was a Prophet in Ifrael, and so Maaman was healed by walking himselfe seven times in Iordan. E. liss refused the gifts of Naaman. But his servant Gebazs accepted a part therof: from whence the fellers of spiritual gifts are called Gehazites, as the buyers are Simonians 1.1.1.1.

Afterward Benhadad king of Aram or Damasen, having heard that this Prophet diddiscouer to the king of Israel what soener the Aramite consulted in his secretest councell, sent a troupe of horse to take Elissa: all whom Elissa stroke blinde, and brought them captines into Samaria, Ioram then asking leaue of the Prophet to flay them, Elifha forbade him to harme them: but caused them to be fed and sent backe to their owne Prince in safetie.

The king of Aram notwithstanding these benefits did againe attempt Samaria: and brought the Citizens to extreame famine. Ioram imputeth the cause thereof to the Prophet Elisha. Elisha by prayer caused a noise of Charriots and armor to sound in the ayre, whereby the Aramites affrighted, fled away, and left the fiege, an act Jo of great admiration as the same is written in the second of Kings, After this, when 2. King 7. Azzel obtained the kingdome of Syria by the death of his Mafter, Ioram entring vpon his frontire tooke Ramoth Gilead: in which warre he received divers wounds: and returned to Iefrael to be cured. But whilest hee lay there, Iehn (who commanding the armie of loram in Gilead, was annoynted king by one of the children of the Iehu who raigned after Iehoram, destroyed not onely the race of his foregoers, but also their Religion; for which hee received a promise from God, That his seede should occupie the Throne vnto the fourth generation. Yet hee vpheld the idolatric of Ierobosm, for which hee was plagued with grieuous warre, wherein he was beaten by Hazael the Aramite, who spoiled all the Countries to the East of Iordan: in which warre he was flaine faith Cedrenus: whereof the Scriptures are filent. Iebu raigned 28. yeeres.

Ioachaz or Iehoahaz the sonne of Iehu succeeded his father, whome Azael and his 10 fonne Benhadad often inuaded: and in the end subjected: leaving him onely 50. horse, 20. chariots, and 10000. foot: and as it is written in the Scriptures, he made them like dust beaten into powder. Ioachaz raigned 17. yeeres.

After Ioachaz Ioas his sonne gouerned Israel: who when hee repaired to Elisha the Prophet as he lay in his death-bed, the Prophet promifed him three victories ouer the Aramites: and first commaunded him to lay his hand on his bowe, and Elisha couered the kings hands with his, and bad him open the window westward (which was toward Damascus) and then shoot an arrow thence out. He againe willed him to beate the ground with his arrowes, who smote it thrice, and ceased: The Prophet then told him, that hee should have smitten five or fixe times: and then hee 20 should hauchad so many victories ouer the Aramtes as hee gaue strokes. And so it fucceeded with Ions, who ouerthrew the Aramites in three battells, and recoursed the Cities and Territorie from Benhadad the sonne of Azael, which his father Ioachaz had loft. He also ouerthrew Amazia king of Iuda, who prouoked him to make the war: whereupon hee entred Hierusalem, and sacked it with the Temple. This Ioas raigned sixteeene yeeres and died; in whose time also the Prophet Elisha exchanged this life for a better.

Ieroboam the third from Iehu, followed Ioas his father, an Idolater as his predeceffors: but hee recoursed all the rest of the lands belonging to Israel, from Hamath which is neere Libanus, to the dead Sea, and raigned one and fortie yeeres.

Zacharias the fift and last of the house of Iehu, slaine by Shallum his vassall, who raigned in his stead, gouerned six moneths. Shallum held the kingdome but one mo-neth, being flaughtered by Menahem of the Gadites.

Menahem who tooke reuenge of Shallum, vsed great crueltie to those that did not acknowledge him: ripping the bellies of those that were with child. This Menahem being inuaded by Phul, bought his peace with tenne thousand talents of siluer, which he exacted by a Tribute of fiftie shekels from every man of wealth in Israel. Menahem gouerned twentie yeeres.

Pekahiah or Phaceia, or after Zonaras Phacelia, succeeded, and after hee had ruled two yeeres, hee was flaine by Phaca or Pekah the Commaunder of his armie, who 40 raigned in his place. In this Pekahs time Phulassar or Tiglat-Phylassar invaded the kingdome of Ifrael, and wanne Iion, Abel-Bethmaaca, Ianoach, Kedelh, Hafor, and Gie lead, with all the Cities of Galilee, carrying them captines into Allyria: he was drawn in by Achas king of Iudea against Pekah and Rezin, the last of the Adades. For Achas being wasted by Pekah of Israel and by Rezin of Damascus, did a third time borrow the Church riches, and therewith ingaged the Affirian, who first suppressed the Monarchie of Syria and Damaseus: and then of Ifrael: and this inuiting of the great Assyrian, was the vtter ruine of both States, of Israel and of Iudea. Pekahraigned

Then Hospea or Osea, who slew Pekah, became the vasiall of Salmanassar: but ho- 50 ping to shake off the Affyrian yoake, he sought aide from So, or Sua, or Sebicus king of Egypt: which being knowne to the Affyrian, hee cast him into prison, besieged Samaria, and mastred it : carried the ten idolatrous Tribes into Miniute in Assiria, and into Rages in Media, and into other Esterne Regions, and there dispersed them:

and ro planted Samaria with divers Nations, and chiefly with the Cutha (inhabiting about Cuthaa Riuer in Persia, or rather in Arabia Deserta) and with the people Ca- Ptol.15. tanei bounding vpon Syria, and with those of Sepharuaijm (a people of Sephar in Me- Efai,37. fopotamia vpon Euphrates, of whose conquest Senacherib vaunteth) also with those of Aua: which were of the ancient Auins who inhabited the Land of the Philistims in Abrahams time, dwelling neare vnto Gaza: whom the Caphtorims rooted out : and at this time they were of Arabia the Defart, called Hanai: willing to returne to their ancient seates. To these headded those of Chamath or Iturea, the ancient enemies of the Israelites, and sometime the Vassalls of the Adads of Damaseus: which so often af-10 flicted them. And thus did this Affyrian adulfe himselfe better than the Romanes did. For after Titus and Vefpasian had wasted the Cities of Iudaa, and Hierusalem, they carried the people away captine: but left no others in their places, but a very few fimple labourers, besides their owne thinne Garrisons, which soone decaied : and thereby they gave that dangerous entrance to the Arabians and Saracens, who never could be driven thence againe to this day.

And this transmigration, plantation, and displantation, hapned in the yeare of the world 2292. the fixth yeare of Ezekia King of Iuda: and the ninth of Holes the last King of Israel.

Of the memorable places of DAN, SIMEON, IVDA, RVBEN, GAD, and the other halfe of MANASSE.

of DAN, where of loppe, Gath, Accaron, Azotus, and Ow following the coast of the Mediterran Sea, that portion of Land affigned to the Tribe of Dan, joyneth to Ephraim, whereof I spake last : of which familie there were numbred at Mount Sinai 62 700. fighting men, all which leaving their bodies with the rest in the 20 Defarts, there entred the Holy Land of their fonnes 66400. bearing armes. The first famous Citie in this Tribe on the Sea coast was loppe, or lapko, as in the 19. of Iosua: one of the most ancientest of the World, and the most famous of others on that coast, because it was the Port of Hierulalem. From hence Ionas imbarked himselfe when hee fled from the service of God, towards Tharsis in Cilicia. In the time of the Macchabees this Citie received many changes: and while Iudas Macchabaus governed the Iewes, the Syrians that were Gartifond in Toppe, having their fleet in the Port, inuited 200 principall Citizens abourd them, and cast them all into the Sea: which Indas revenged by 30 firing their fleet, and putting the companies which fought to escape to the sword.

It was twice taken by the Romanes, and by Cestius the Lieutenant vtterly burnt and ruined. But in the yeare of Christ 1250. Lodousk the French King gaue it new Walls and Towers: It is now the Turkes, and called Iaffa. There are certaine Rocks in that Port, whereunto it is reported that Andromeda was fastned with chaines: and from thence deliuered from the Sea-Monster by Perseus. This fable (for so I take L.3.1.15 de bel. it) is confirmed by Iofephus, Solinus, and Plinie. Marcus Scaurus during his office of Ind. Solin. C.47. Adilelhip, shewed the bones of this Monster to the people of Rome. S. Hierome vpon long speakes of it indifferently. The next vnto loppe was lamnia, where Iudas Macchabaus burnt the rest of the Sy- 40 rian fleet: the fire and flame whereof was feene at Hierusalem 240. furlongs off. It

After Iamnia is the Citic of Geth or Gath, somtime Anthedon, saith Volaterran. And so Montanus seemes to understand it. For he sets it next to Egypt, of all the Philistim Cities, and in the place of Anthedon. But Volaterran gives neither reason nor authoritie for his opinion; for Ptolomic fets Anthedon farre to the South of Joppe: And Geth was the first and not the last (beginning from the North) of all the great Cities of the Philistims: and about fixteene miles from loppe; where S. Hierome in his time found a great Village of the same name. It was sometime the Habitation and 50 Seminarie of the Anakims: ftrong and Giant-like-men, whom Iofua could not expell, nor the Danites after him: nor any of the Ifraelites, till Danids time: who flew Goliath, as his Captaines did diners others not much inferiour in strength and stature vnto Goliath.

Roboam the Sonne of Salomon rebuilt Geth: Ozias the sonne of Amazia destroicd it againe. It was also laid wast by Azael King of Syria. Fulke the fourth King of Hierusalem, built a Castle in the same place out of the old ruines. Whether this Geth was the same that Will of Tyre in the holy Warre calls Ibijlin, I much doubt: the cr- L.21, c.18. rour growing by taking Gath for Inthedon.

Not farre from Geth or Gath standeth Bethfemes or the house of the Sunne. In the fields adiouning to this Citie(as is thought) was the Arke of God brought by a voke of two Kine, turned loofe by the Philifims: and the Bethfemites prefuming to looke therein, there were flaine of the Elders 70. and of the people 30000. by the ordito nance of God. He Tribe of Simeon takes up the rest of the Sea-coast of Canaan, to the border of Agypt: who being the second Sonne of Iacob by Lea, there were increased of that Familie while they abode in £gypt, as they were numbred at Monnt Sinai 59300. able men, all which ending their lines in the Defarts, there entred the Land of Promile of their if-

The Reguli or pettic Kings thereof were called Ascalonita: of which Volaterran portion of Inda out of Xanthus, in the Historic of the Lydians, reports, that Tantalus and Ascalus were this Tribes fees the fonnes of Hymenaus : and that Ascalus being imploied by Aciamus King of the 206.19.21. 20 Lydians, with an Armie in Syria, falling in love with a yong Woman of that Countrie, built this Citie and called it after his owne name : the same hath Nicolaus in his Historie, faith Volaterran.

Diodorus Siculus in his third Booke remembreth a Lake neare Ascalon, wherein there hath beene a Temple dedicated to Derceto the Goddeffe of the Syrians : having 40 the face of a Woman and the bodie of a Fish: who, as I have said before, in the storie of Ninus, was the Mother of Semiramis, fained to be cast into this Lake, and sed and releeued by Doues. And therefore was the Doue worshipped both in Babylomaand Syria, of which Tibullus the Poet:

The white Doue is for holy held, in Syria Palastine.

It was one of the chiefest and strongest Cities of the Philistims. It bred many lear- 50 ned men (faith Volaterran) as Antiochus, Sofus, Cygnius, Dorotheus the Historian, and Vol. vt supra, Artemidorus who wrote the storic of Bithynia.

In Ascalon, as some say, was that wicked Herod borne, that seeking after our Samiour, caused all the Male-children of two yeares old and under to be slaine. In the CHAP.10. S.2. of the Historie of the World.

Christian times it had a Bishop, and after that when it was by the Saladine defaced, Richard King of England while he made Warre in the holy Land, gaue it a new wall and many buildings. Eius muros cum SALADINVS diruiffet, RICH ARDVS An- Adrich in Trib. glorum Rex inflaurauit, faith Adrichomius.

In Dauids time it was one of the most renowned Cities of the Philistims : for hee nameth Gath and Ascalon only, when hee lamenteth the death of Saul, and 10- 2. Sain. 1. nathan : not speaking of the other three. Tell it not in Gath, nor publish it not in the fireets of Ascalon : It is now called Scalone. Gabinius restored it as hee did Azotus and Gaza.

Next to Ascalon stood Gaza or Gazera, which the Hebrewes call Hazza, the Syrians Azan: of Azonus (as they fay) the sonne of Hercules. Other prophane writers affirme, that it was built by Iupiter. Pomp. Mela gives the building thereof to Cambyfes the Persian: because belike he rebuilt it, and Gaza in the Persian tongue is as much to say as Treasure. This Gaza was the first of the fine Satrapies of the Phili- Vollit, fims : and the South bound of the Land of Canaan towards Agypt. But this Citie was farre more ancient than Cambyfes, as it is proued by many Scriptures. It was once taken by Caleb : but the strength of the Anakims put him from it. At such time steph.de wrb, as Alexander Macedon invaded the Empire of Persia, it received a Garrison for Darius: lud 1.6 16. in despight whereof it was by the Macedonians after a long siege demolished, and was 1. Alexander Janneus King of the Jewes surprised it : and slew 500. Senators in the 10/ep.13.401.19. Temple of Apollo which fled thither for Sanctuarie: but this Gaza was not let up in the same place againe, to wit, on the foundations which Alexander Macedon had ouer-turned, but somewhat nearer the Sea side: though the other was but two mile off. It was a Towne of great account in the time of the Machabees, and gaue many wounds to the leves till it was forst by Simon: of which he made so great account as he purposed to reside therein himselfe, and in his absence lest John his Sonne and Maccount Successiour to be Gouernour. In Brochard his time it was still a goodly Citie, and Broch Lina, 7. knowne by the name of Gazara.

At the very out-let of the River of Befor, flandeth Maioma the Port of Gaza: to which the priviledge of a Citie was given by the great Constantine, and the place called Confiance after the name of the Emperours Sonne. But Inlian the Apoftata wift tope 6.4. foone after favouring the Gazeans made it subject vnto them, and commanded it to Niceph 10, bif. be called Gaza maritima.

Chatzar-Susa so named Iosua 19. 5. for which Iosua 15. wee have Chatzar-Gadda, both names agreeing in fignification : for Gadda is Turma, and Sula

In the same places of losua and of the Chronicles Chorma is named, which they 20 thinke to bee the same with that of which Numb. 14. 45. to which the Amalekites and Canaanites purfued the Ifraelites. But that Chorma cannot bee in Simeon, nor within the Mountaines of Edumaa. For Ifrael fled not that way : but backe againe to the Camp, which lay to the South of Edumea, in the Defart.

It was also called the Citie of Isaac, because hee dwelt long there. While the Christians held the Holy Land, they laboured much to strengthen this place, standing on the border of the Arabian Defart, and in the South bound of Canaan. It hath now the name of Gibelin. The other Cities of Simeon which are named in 30 the places of Iosua, and of the Chronicles, aboue noted, because they helpe vs nothing in storie, I omit them. The Mountaines within this Tribe are few, and that of Sampson the chiefest: vnto which he carried the Gate-post of Gaza. The Rivers are Befor, and the Torrent of Agypt called Shichar, as is noted in Affer.

S. III. THE TRIBE OF FVDA.

CHAP.10. S.3.

F Inda the fourth Sonne of Iacob by Lea, there were multiplied in Æ gypt 74600 all which (Caleb excepted) perished in the Desarts. And of their sonnes there entred the Land of Canaan 76500. bearing armes: Agreeable to the greatnesse of this number was the greatest Territorie giuen, called afterward Iudea: within the bounds whereof were the portions allotted to Dan and Simeon included. And many Cities named in these Tribes, did first, as they say, belong vnto the children of suda: who had a kind of Sourraigntic over them: as Succeth, Cariathiarim, Lachis, Bethfemes, Tfiglag, Beerheba, and others. The multitude of people within this small Province (if it bee meated by that ground given to this Tribe only) were vncredible if the witnesse of the Scriptures had not warranted the report. For when David numbred the pcople they were found fine hundred thousand fighting men.

The Cities of Iuda were many. But I will remember the chiefest of them: beginning with Arad, or Horma, which standeth in the entrance of Judea from Idumea : whose King first surprised the Israelites as they passed by the border of Canaan to- numerical wards Made: and took from them some spoiles, and many prisoners: who being wards offerward quest browne by the Wradies the somes of Koni the Kinstone of Males. afterward ouerthrowne by the Ifraelites, the sonnes of Keni, the Kinsimen of Meses, obtained a possession in that Territorie: who before the comming of the straelites, dwelt betweene Madian and Amalek.

Following this Frontier towards Idumen and the South, Ascensus Scorpionis, or Num 344. Acrabbim is placed, the next to Arad: fo called because of Scorpions, which are faid Downers. to be in that place: from which name of Acrabbim, Hierome thinks that the name of 30 the Toparchie called Acrabathena was denominated: of which wee have spoken in Manasses. On the South side also of Indea they place the Cities of Ingur, Dimona, Adada, Cedes, Ashma, Jethnam, and Afor or Chatfer, most of them Frontier Townes.

And then Ziph: of which there are two places so called: one besides this in the body of Iuda, of which the Defart and Forrest adioyning tooke name: where David hid himfelfe from Saul. After thefe are the Cities of Efron, Adar, Karkah, and Afemona, or Hat mon, of no great fame.

Turning now from Idumaa towards the North, we finde the Cities of Danna, Shemal, Amam, the other Afor, or Chasfor, Behaloth, and the two Sochoes : of all which fee 10f. 15. alfo Carioth by 10 fuac. 15. v. 25. called Kerioth : whence tudas the Traitor tude 15. 8. 11

40 was called If-cariath, as it were a man of Carioth. Then Hetham the abode of Samp Chian. 116. Juni fon which Rehoboam recdified. Beyond these towards the North border, and to out of the in words Elevations of the core in 4.32 wards Eleutheropolis, is the Citic of lethar, or latthir, belonging to the Leutes: In Saint notes that this Hieromes time it was called lethira: and inhabited altogether with Christians: neare Hethemihough unto this Citie was that remarkeable battaile fought betweene Afa King of Inda, the bounds of and Zara King of the Arabians, who brought into the field a Million of fighting Inda belonged men; and was not with standing beaten and put to flight: Af following the victoric to since and was not with standing beaten and put to flight: as farre as Gerar, which at the same time he recovered.

Not farre from lether, standeth farmuth, whose King was slaine by tofue, and the Hebr. Citicouerturned. Next vntoit is Marefa thenatine Citic of the Prophet Michea: 39 Betweene it and Odolla, Indas Machabeus ouerthrew Gorgius: and fent thence ten i. Mac. 12.351 thousand Dragmas of silver to be offered for Sacrifice.

Odolla or Hadullam it selfe was an ancient and magnificent. Citie, taken by Iosua, Gen 18 b. r. and the King thereof slaine. Ionathus Macchabaus beautified it greatly. Then logistis. Ceila or Keila afterward Echela, where David sometime hid himselfe : and which r. Samirada afterward he deliuered from the affaults of the Philistims: neare which the Prophet Abacue was buried: whole monument remained and was feene by S. Hierome.

Neare it is Hebron sometime called the Citie of Arbah, for which the Vulgar hath Cariatharbe: the reason of this name they give as if it signified the Citie of source: because the foure Patriarchs, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, were therein buried. but of Adam it is but supposed : and it is plaine by the places Iofua 14.14. and 15.13. and 20. 11. that Arbah here doth not fignific foure, but that it was the name of the Father of the Giants called Anakim, whose some as it seemes Anak was and Achiman, Shelhai, and Talmai (whom Caleb expelled Iol. 15.) were the sonnes of this Anak, Num. 13.23. The name of Anak fignifieth Torquem, a chaine worne for orna- 10 ment : and it seemes that this Anak inriched by the spoiles which himselfe and his Father got, wore a chaine of gold, and so got this name: and leauing the custome to his posteritie left also the name: so that in Latine the name of Anakim may not amisse be expounded by Torquati.

The Citie Hebron was one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan : built seuen yeares before Toan or Tanis in Agypt: and it was the head and chiefe Citie of the Anakims, whom Caleb expelled: to whom it was in part given: to wit, the Villages adiovning. and the eft to the Leuites. It had a Bishop in the Christian times, and a magnificent Temple built by Helen the Mother of Constantine.

Not farre inner they finde Eleuther opolis or the free Citie, remembred often by 20 S. Hierome. Then Eglon whose King Dabir affociated with the other foure Kings of the Amorites, to wit, of Hierusalem, Hebron, Jarmuth, and Lachis, besieging the Gibeonutes, were by Io/ua vtterly ouerthrowne. From hence the next Citie of fame was Emans, afterward Nicopolis, one of the Cities of Gouernment or Prafidencies of Indea. In fight of this Citie Indas Macchabass (after he had formerly beaten both Apollonius and Seron) gaue a third ouerthrow to Gorgias Lieutenant to Antiochus.

In the yeare 1301, it was ouer-turned by an earth-quake, faith Eufebius. In the Christian times it had a Bilhops scate of the Diocesse of Casaria of Palastine. From Emais toward the West Sea there are the Cities of Nahama, Bethdagon, and * Alfo Lebron, Gader or Gedera, or Gederothaima, of which and of Gederoth * Iof. 15. v. 26. 6. 41. 30 4.39. as is a- Then Azechato which Iofua followed the flaughter of the flue Kings before named, a Citic of great strength in the Valley of a Terebinth or Turpintine : as the Vulgar reabred in the deth 1. It revolted from the subjection of the Iewes while Ioram the sonne of a lunius for in Valle Terebin- Io aphat ruled in Hieru (alem: And next vnto this standeth Maceda which Io sua vtterthe hath in valle ly difpeopled.

On the other fide of Emass towards the East standeth Bethfur, otherwise Bethfora, Vatablus keeps and Bethfor: one of the strongest and most sought for places in all Inda: It is scated on a high Hill; and therefore called Beth fur (the house on the Rocke, or of strength.) lefep.13. ant.9. It was fortified by Roboam : and afterward by Indas Macchabasus. Lyfias forfit, and 40 Antiochus Eupator by famine: Ionathas regained it: and it was by Simon exceedingly fortified against the Syrian Kings.

Bethleem is the next vnto it within fixe miles of Hierusalem, otherwise Lehem: fometime Ephrata: which name, they fay, it had of Calebs wife, when as it is so called by Moses before Caleb was famous in those parts Gen. 28. 16. Of this Citie was Abessan or Ibzan, Judge of Israel, after Jephtab, famous for the thirtie Sonnes and thirtie Daughters, begotten by him. Elimelee was also a Bethlemite, who with his wife Naomi sojourned in Moab during the famine of Inda in the time of the Indges, with whom Ruth the daughter in law of Naomi returned to Bethleem: and maried Booz of whom obed, of whom Ishai, of whom David. It had also the honour to be the native Citic 10 of our Saujour Ie (us Christ: and therefore shall the memorie thereof neuer end.

Amos.1.v.1.

In Zabulon of Galilee there was also a Citic of the same name : and therefore was fuper Math. c.2. this of our Sauiour called Bethleem Iuda.

From Bethleem some foure or five mile standeth Theona: the Citie of Amos the Prophet: and to this place adioyning is the Citic of Bethzacaria, in the way between 1. Macc. 6.32. Bethlura and Hierusalem: on whose Hills adjoyning the glorious gilt thiclds of An- 10(cph. Ant. 12. tiochus shined like lamps of fire in the cies of the Lewes. The Citic of Bezek was alfo neare vnto Bethleem, which Adoni-bezec commanded; who had during his "See in Maneff raigne tortured 70. Kings, by cutting off the ioynts of their Fingers and Toes: and c.7.0.7.†.1. made them gather bread vnder his Table: but at length the fame end befell him- 1ude 1. v. 6.60 felfe by the sonnes of Iuda, after they had taken him prisoner.

The rest of the Cities in this part (most of them of no great estimation) wee may paffe by vntill we come to the magnificent Castle of Herodium, which Herod erected 10 on a Hill, mounting thereunto with 200. Marble steps, exceeding beautifull and 10fe.14 nmt.22. strong. And towards the Dead Sea, and adioyning to the Defart of Jeruel, between it and Tekoa, is that cliuus floridus, where in the time of Ieho (aphat, the Iewes flood and 2.chro.20, v. 16. lookt on the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, maffacring one an other, when 626. they had purposed to ioyne against Inda: neare which place is the Valley of blesfing, where the Iewes the fourth day after, folemnely came and bleffed God for fo strange deliuerance.

Now the Cities of Iuda which border the Dead Sea, are these; Aduran beautified 2.chron. 11. by Roboam: and Tohar which the Vulgar calleth * Segor: fo called because Lot in his some callit praier for it vrged that it was but a little one: whence it was called Tohar, which fi- Vitula confer-20 gnifieth a little one: when as the old name was Belah, as it is Gen. 142. In the Ro- nams See in gnifieth a little one: when as the old hame was beian, as it is denoted. If the ones time gade to $5.5 mans times it had a Garrison, and was called (as they say) Pannier: in Hieromes time poli principam Balezona. Then Engaddi or Hen-gaddi, first A/asonthamar: neare vnto which are the in Harober. Gardens of Balfamum, the best that the world had called Opobalfamum: the most Gen. 19.10. part of all which Trees Cleopatra Queene of Agypt sent for out of Indea, and Herod. Histor. English. who either feared or loued Anthonie her husband, caused them to be rooted up and southamer. presented vnto her: which shee replanted neare Heliopolis in Agypt. This Citie was 2,0000,20.2. first taken by Chedorlaomer, and the Amorites thence expelled. It was one of the Gen. 14.7. most remarkable Cities of Indea: and one of the Prasidencies thereof.

The rest of the Cities are many in the In-land; and among them lest all; not that 1. Rez. 21. 20 which was the Citie of Naboth, of which alreadie: but an other of the same name, the Citie of Achinoan, the wife of David, the mother of that Ammon, whom Absa- 2. Sam. 17.25. lom flew : also as some thinke the Citie of Amasa, Absaloms Lieutenant, and the commander of his Armic. But this seemeth to bee an errour grounded ypon the nearenesse of the wordes, Ifrael and Jefrael: and because the 2. Sam. 17.25. Amasaes father is called a Infraelite, who first of the Chron. 2.17. is called an Ifmaelite: indeede the Hebrew Orthographie sheweth that Amasaes Father is not said to be of the Citie Iesrael, but an Israelite in Religion, though otherwise an Israelite.

In this Tribe there were many high Hills or Mountaines, as those of Engaddivppon the Dead Sea : and the Mountaines of Inda, which beginne to rife by Emaus, 40 and end neare Taphna, and these part Iuda from Dan and Simeon. Of others which fland fingle there is that of Hebron: at the foote whereof was that Oake of Mambre where the three Angells appeared to Abraham, which S. Hierome calleth a Firtree; Hieron, in loc. and faith that it flood till the time of Constantine the yonger. There is also that Hebre question Mountaine called Collis Achilla, on the South fide of Ziph: on the top whereof the Hebr. great Herod, inclosing the old Castle, erected by Ionathas Misschabaus, and called 6,20, Massada, garnished it with seven and twentie high and strong Towers and therein left Armour and furniture for an hundreth thousand men: being as it seemeth a place vnacceffable, and of incomparable firength.

In the Valley afterward called the Dead Sea, or the Lake Albhaltitis, this Countrie 50 had foure Cities, Adama, Sodom, Seboim, and Gomorra, destroied with fire from Heanen for their vnnaturall finnes.

THE TRIBE OF REVBEN

The feates and bounds of Midian , Moab , and Ammon, part whereof the Reubenites wanne from SEHON King of Hesbon.

N the other side of the Dead Sea, Reuben the eldest of Iacobs sonnes inhabited: of whose children there were numbred at Mount Sinat 46000 who dying with the rest in the Desarts, there remained to possesse the Land promised 43700. bearing armes. But before wee speake of these or the rest that inhabited the east side of Iordan, something of their borderers : to wit, Midian, Moab, and Ammon, whose land in our wri- 20 ters are confusedly described, and not easily distinguished. And first wee are to remember that out of Abrahams kindred came many mightie Families : as by I/aac and Iacob the Nation called Ifrael, and afterward Iewes : by Efau or Edom the Idumsans: by Ismael the eldest sonne of Abraham, the Ismaelites: and by Keturah his last wife the Midianites. And againe by Lot, Abrahams brothers sonne, those two valiant Nations of the Moabites, and Ammonites: all which being but strangers in the Land of Canaan (formerly possess by the Canaanites, and by the Families of them descended) these issues and alliances of Abraham, all but Iacob, whose children were bred in A gypt, inhabited the frontier places adioyning.

Esau and his sonnes held Idumaa: which bounded Canaan on the South. Ismael 30 tooke from the South-east part of the Dead Sea: stretching his possession over all Arabia Petras, and a part of Arabia the Defart, as farre as the River of Tigris, from Sur to Hauilah, Moab tooke the rest of the coast of the Dead Sea, leaving a part to Midian: and passing ouer Arnon, inhabited the plaines betweene Iordan and the Hills of Abarim or Arnon, as farre North as Effebon, or Chesbon.

Ammon fate downe on the North-cast side of Arnon, and posses the Tract from Rabba afterward Philadelphia, both within the Mountaines of Gilhead, and without them as farre forth as Arroer, though in Moses time hee had nothing left him in all Mun. 21. v. 24. that Valley: for the Amorites had thrust him ouer the River of Iaboc, as they had 40 done Moab ouer Arnon. As these Nations compassed sundrie parts of Canaan, so the border betweene the River of Iaboc and Damafeus was held by the Amorites themselues, with other mixt Nations: all which Territoric on the East side of Iordan, and on the East side of the Dead Sea, was granted by Moles to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and halfe Manasse: whercof that part which Moab had, was first posses by the Emims a Nation of Giants weakned and broken by Chedorlahomer, after expulsed by the Moabites, as before remembred. That which the Ammonites held was the Territorie and ancient possession of the Zamzummims or Zurai, who were also beatenat the same time by Chedorlahomer, Amraphel, and the rest: and by them an easic way of conquest was prepared for the Ammonites.

Now where it is written that Arnon was the border of Moab, the same is to bee vnderstood according to the time when Moles wrote. For then had Sehon or his Ancester beaten the Moabites out of the plaine Countries, betweene Abarim and Iordan, and driven them thence from Hesbon over Arnon, and this happened not long before Moles arrivall vpon that border, when Valeb governed the Mosbites. For he that ruled Moab when Moses past Arnon, was not the sonne of Vaheb, but his name was Balae the sonne of Zipper. And it may be that those Kings were elective. as the Edumeans anciently were.

Now all that part of Moab betweene Arnon and Iordan, as farre North as Effebon was inhabited by Reuben. And when I fract arrived there out of Agypt, it was in the possession of sehon, of the race of Canaan by Amoreus : and therefore did Iephian the ludge of Ifrael inftly defend the regaining of those Countries against the claime of the Ammonites : because (as he alleaged) Moses found them in the 10 possession of the Amorites, and not in the handes of Moab or Ammon: who (faith ludgets, Jephtah) had three hundred yeares time to recover them, and did not; whence hee

And least any should maruaile why the Ammonites in Tephtah his time should makeclaime to these Countries : whereas Moses in the place Numb. 21. verf. 26. rather accounts them to have beene the ancient possession of the Moabites then of the Ammonites: it is to be noted that Deut. 2. 11. when it is faid that the yron bed of og was to be seene at Rabbath, the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites, it is also signifled, that much of the Land of og, which the Ifraelites possessed, was by him or his Attectors got from the Ammonites, as much of Sehons was from the Moabites.

And as the Canaanite Nations were feated to confusedly together that it was hard to diftinguish them : fo also were the sonnes of Mosb and Ammon, Midian, Amalek, 16,13. versis and Ismael. Yet the reason seemeth plaine enough why Ammon commanded in Ismus notes chiefe, in Iephtahs time; for sometime the one Nation; sometime the other of all hale of the those borderers acquired the Soueraigntie; and againe that one part of the Land Land of Hammore borderers acquired the Sourcagnite; and against that one part of the Land more which is which Gad held, namely within the Mountaines of Galdad, or Gilbread, and as firre this place of the place o South as Arroer belonged to the Ammonites. And therefore taking advantage fue isfaid to of the time, they then fought to recouler it againe. Yet at fuch time as Mofes ouer- haue beene githrew Schon at lahaz, the Ammonites had loft to the Ammorites, all that part of their dura, was taken possession which lay about Arrest, and betweene it and labor: Schon and Og two first from the 30 Kings of the Ammorites having displanted both Moeb and Ammon of all within School but the the Mountaines. For it is written in the one and twentieth of Numb. v. 24. that If- place Drug, 12 rael conquered the Land of Sehon from Arnon unto labor, even unto the children of prouct that Ammon, lo as at this time the River of Iaboc was the South bound of Ammon, with Sober, had got in the Mountaines, when as anciently they had also possessions over labor which ten Lands over atlength the Gadites possest, as in the thirteenth chapter of Issua verf. 25. it ap-otte mands or the damment.

THe chiefe Cities belonging to Reuben were thefe, Kedemoth, for which the Vulgar, without any shew of warrant, readeth Jethson. The Vulgaror Hierome fol- 10/ 21.37. lowed the septuagint those two verses 36. and 37. of 21. 10st being wanting in the old Hebrew Copies, and the Septuagint red Kedfon for Kedmoth, which Kedfon by writing flipt into leth fon.

The plaine Country hereabout by Moses called The Plaines of Moab, where heexpounded the Booke of Deuteronomy to the people, a little before his death, is in the beginning of the same booke precisely bounded by Moles. On the South it had the great Defart of Paran : where they had long wandred. On the East it had Chatferoth, and Dizahab (of which two the former is that Gazorus, of which Ptolomy in 30 Palastina, the later was a Tract belonging to the Nabathai in Arabia Petraa, where * The fame as Was * Mezahab, of which Gen. 36.39.) by the Geographers called Medaua and Meit feems which daba. On the West it had Iordan: and on the North it had Laban (in Iunius Edi-Num. 11. 30. is tion, by the fault of the Print, Lamban Deuteron. 1. 1.) the fame which the Geographers call Libias: and some confound it with Linias, of which even now wee reade of the plaines of Me-See before,c.5 S.7.

Also on the same North side towards the confines of Calefyrea, it had Thophel: whereabout sometime Pella of Cælesyria stood: which was in the region of Decapolis, and as Stephanus faith, was sometime called Butis. It is also noted in Moses to be over Dauid against or necre vnto Suph, for which the Vulgar hath the red Sea, as also 27 ym. 2.14. 49 Hanum the Amit translateth the word Suphab in like manner: whereas in this place of Deuteronomie 19.7. The place in these large plaines of Moab, where Moses made those divine exhor-

Nebo (in flead of which Innius Ef. 46.1 reades Deus vatieinus) was the name of their Romen diorum Idoll-Oracle, and Baal-meon is the habitation of Baal. Of the same Idoll was the Hill electron nere-Nebo in these parts denominated : from whose top, which the common Translators audiatur i. ore 10 call Phasgah, Moses before his death saw all the Land of Canaan beyond Iordan. In 100 25.16.4 nor which storic Iunius doth not take Phasgah or Pisgah, for any proper name : but for nomina comnit an appellative, fignifying a Hill : and so also Vatablus in some places; as Num. 21.20 labys meis Hef : where he noteth that some call Pigab that top which looketh to Iericho, and Hair as mina Babalimo it looketh to Moab, which opinion may be somewhat strengthened by the name of rum ab ore give. a Citie of Reuben mentioned Iof. 13. 20. called Ashdoth-Pilga, which is as much as they vice for decursus Pisga: to wit, where the waters did runne downe from Pisga. With better reason perhaps out of Num. 21. v. 19. wee may fay that Mathana and Nahaliel were in these confines of Reuben : through which places the Ifraelites past after they had left the Well called Beer: Then Deblathaim which the Prophet Hieremie threatneth with the rest of the Cities of Hierem. 483

Madian also is found in these parts, the chiefe Citie of the Madianites in Moab: 40 but not that Midian or Madian by the Red Sea; wherein Iethro inhabited. For of the Madianites there were two Nations, of which these of Mosh became Idolaters, and received an exceeding overthrow by a Regiment of twelve thousand Ifraclites, fent by Moses out of the plaines of Moab : at such time as Israel beganne to accompanie their Daughters: their fine Kings with Balaam the South-faier were then flaine: and their Regall Citic with the rest destroied. The other Madianites ouer whom lethro was Prince, or Priest, forgate not the God of Abraham their Ancestor, but relieued and affisted the Israelites in their paincfull trauailes, through the Desarts: and were in all that passage their guides. In the South border of Moab adjoyning to Edom, and sometime reckoned as the chiefe Citie of Edom, there is Elastic. 50 that Petra which in the Scriptures is called Selah, which is as much as rupes or petra. 1.Reg 14.7. This Citie Petra, Scaurus besieged with the Romane Armie; and finding the place in show impregnable, he was content by the persuasion of antipater, to take a composition of money, and to quit it. Yet Amasias King of Iuda (after he had slaughter red 10000. of the Arabians in the Valley called Salinarum) wanne also this Citie. S. Hierome finds Ruth the Moabite to be natural of this Citic. In the time when the GulTyr, 20, bell. Christians heid the Kingdome of Hierusalem, it had a Latine Bishop, having before beene under the Greeke Church. It is feated not farre from Hor where Aaron died. and on the other fide towards the North is the River of Zared or Zered, by which 20 Moles incamped in the 38. Station. Adrichome describeth the waters of Memrim.or rather Nemrim, in his Map of Reuben, not farre hence, and betweene Zared and Arnon : and so he doch the Valley of Saue : but the waters of Nimra or Beth-Nimra (for which it seemes Adric. omius writ Nemrim ) refresh the plaines of Moab : and the confluence of those waters of Nimra are in the Tribe of Gad. Saucalso cannot bee found in this place, that is, to the South of Arnon, and under Midian. For after Abraham returned from the pursuite of the Affyrian and Persian Princes, the King of Sodome met him in the Valley of Saue, or Shaueh, which is the Kings Dale, where Absalom set up his Monument, as it seemes, not farre from Hierusulem, And at the fame time Melchizedec King of Salem also incountred him. But Abraham comming 30 from the North, and Melchizedec inhabiting, either neare Bethsan otherwise Scythopolis in the haife Tribe of Manaffe, or in Hierusalem (both places lying to the West of

of the Iewish warre: where he describes the place by nature to be almost inuincible; and in the storie of the siege, shewes how respassar with much danger of his owne person, entring it, was at first repulsed, with other very memorable accidents: and how at length after the comming of Titus, when it was taken, many leaping downe the rocks with their wines and children, to the number of fine thousand, thus perished: besides foure thousand slaine by the Romanes : so that none escaped, saue only two women that hid themselues.

About foure miles West from Gadara, and as much East from Tiberias (which is 20 on the other fide of the Lake) tofephus placeth Hippus, or Hippene, whence Ptolomie in vita find; giues the name to the hills that compate the plaines in which it standeth: fo that it may seeme to have beene of no small note. It is seated farre from the hill Countrie: on the East of the Lake, as also Plinie noteth lib. 7 . cap. 1 5. It was restored by Pompey: after by Angustus added to Herods Tetrarchie: It was wasted by the Irines; in the 1-sep. Bell. Jude beginning of their rebellion: when by many massacres of their Nation, they were like.rg. inraged against their borderers.

The next Citic of note, but of more ancient fame, is Edrehi or Edrai, wherein Og Of another E-King of Basan chiefly abode, when Moses and Israel invaded him: and neare vnto drebi in Nephr. this his Regall Citie, it was that he loft the battaile and his life. It flood in S. Hieromes Deut 3.1.0.10 30 time : and had the name of Adar or Adara. Not farre from these Townes near 10r- 11cm 16,13,310 dan, in this valley stood Gerassa or Gergessa, inhabited by the Gergesstes, descended of the fift sonne of Canaan. Of these Gergesites we reade Mat. 8.28 that Christ comming Mati, 9,28, from the other side of the Lake of Tiberias, landed in their coasts: where cashing the Diuels out of the possessed, he permitted them to enter into the heard of Hogs: in which storic for Gergesites or Gergesins, S. Luke and S. Marke have Gadarens : not as if Marcs. these were all one (for Gergessa or Gerassa is a distinct Towns in these parts from Ga- Inc. 80 dera) but the bounds being confounded, and the Cities neighbours, either might well be named in this storie. This Citie received many changes and calamities: of which Insephus hath often mention. For besides other aduentures, it was taken by 40 L. Annius Lieutenant to Vespasian: and 1000. of the ablest yong men put to the sword, and the Citie burnt. In the yeare 1120, it was rebuilt by Baldwine King of Damafcus; and in the same yeare recoucred by Baldwine de Burgo King of Hierusalem: and by him vtterly razed. Neare vnto Gerafa is the Village of Magedan, or after the Syriake Magedu, or after the Greeke Magdala, where the Pharifees and Sadducees defired Maints. of our Saujour a figite from heauen; the fame place or some adjoyning to it, which S. Marke calleth Dalmanutha. By the circumstances of which storic it appeares that Marc. 8. this coast lay between the Lake of Tiberias and the Countrie of Decapolis. Brochard Broch. itin. 2. makes both these places to be one; and findes it to be Phiale, the fountaine of Iordan fee in Alphinia according to Islephus: but this Phiale is too farre from the Sea of Galilee, and from c.7.4.413. 30 Bethfaids, to be either Magdala or Dalmanutha. For as it appears by the storie, not farr hence towards the North was the Defart of Bethfaida, where Christ filled 5000. Mait. 14. people with the fine Barley loanes and two Fishes.

On the North of this Beth saida they place Iulias, not that which was built by Hered, but the other by Philip, which boundeth the Region Trachonitis towards the South

Not farre from Asteroth Adrichomius out of Brochard and Breidenbachius placeth reading cornu-Cedar, in the way out of Syria into Galilee, foure miles from Corazin. Now concerning the Texts which he citeth, it is fo that the Greeke hath Galaad in fleed of the word Cedar, which the Vulgar doth vie in that place of Iudith, and joyneth Carmel and Galilee. The Cantieles and the 120. Psalme doe rather proue that 30 Cedar was not here about, than any way helpe Adrichomius. For that they speake of Scenit & Cedareni, it is apparent, and as enident by the place in the Canticles that they were decolores, much more than any under the Climates of the land of Canaan : whence Junus out of Lampridius and Plinie placeth them in Arabia Petrea, farre from these parts. Touching the Sepulcher of Ich it is certaine that the Arabians and Saracens (holding those places) faine many thinges to abuse the Christians, and to get moaft. in Gen. Bell. ney. Further, it may well be affirmed that many (if not all) the historicall circumin Com. lib. t. de stances of Iob are so obscure, that we should rather by finding his Countrie seeke fup.F.p. ad Rom. to get some knowledge of him, than by any presumptions founded upon him, inferre what his Countrie was, and build vnto him a Citie by coniecture. 1.18. c.4. The Land of Huts or Hus wherein Iob dwelt is from the Greeke Ove, which the whence they vied Augustor Septuagint vie for the word Huts, translated by the Vulgar sometime Hus, as 10b.1.v. s fomtime Austis, as Hierome 25.20. This Land is placed by Junius between Palestina Junius and o. and Caelesyria, besides Chamatha (or Hamath) under Palmyrene in the Countrie calthers it is called by Ptolomie Trachonitis or Bathanted the bounds of thich Countries are confounled Aufanitis, & ded with Bafan in this halfe Tribe at Manaffes. And that this Land of Hus was thus they readeit in feated it may in part bee gathered out of the place of Ieremie the 25. 20. where hee the Septuagiat. reckons the Hulbites among the promiscuous borderers of the Ilraelites, whom hee 1400, in Gen. 10. therefore calleth promiscuous or miscellaneam turbam, because their bounds were not only iounced but confounded, and their Seignibries mingled one with the other, but of this place the wordes of Hieremie, Lamentations 4, 21. speaking of the same prophelie, of which he speaketh in the fine and twentieth Chapter, must needes be expounded: as Junius reades them diftinguilhing the Land of His from Edom: O filis Edomi, o que habitas in terra Hutzi; O Daughter of Edom, O thou which dwelleft in the Land of Hus. Now because the Vulgar doth not so distinguish, but readeth Filia Edom que habitas in terra Hus; Daughter of Edom which dwellest in the Land of Hus: Hence, as it seemes, some of the learned have thought that tob was an Edomite, as we have faid, and King of Edom, which if they understand by it Idumaa or Edom, so called in Mo-

10 fes time, they are greatly mistaken, making this Land of Hus to be in Edumaa. For it Deut, 3,9, is very probable that Efan when he first parted from Iacob did not seate himselfe in Edom, or Seir, which lieth on the South border of Indea, but inhabited Seir farre to the East of Iordan, and held a part of those Mountaines otherwise called Galaad, and Hermon, which by corruption the Sidonians call Shirion, and the Amorites Shenir for Seir, and from this his habitation did Esau incounter Iacob when he returned out of Melopotamia, who passed by the very border of Esau his abiding. It is true that at fuch time as Moles wandred in the Defarts, that the posteritie of Elan inhabited Scir to the South of Indea: for it is like that the Ammorites who had beaten both Ammonand Mosb, did also drive the Edomites out of those parts, who thence-forward 20 scated themselves to the South of Indea, bordering the Defart Paran, and stretched

Now for this Hus which gaue the name to a part of the Land of Trachonitis, whether it were Hus the sonne of Aram, as Iunius thinkes in his note vpon Gen. 13.23. or rather Hus the sonne of Nachor, Abrahams brother, the question is doubtfull. For my part I rather incline to thinke, that it was Hus the fonne of Nachor : partly because these Families of Aram seeme long before to have beene lost : and partly because in 10b c. 32.2. Elihu the fourth of 10bs friends, which seemes to be of 10bs owne Countrie, is called a Buzite, of Buz, the brother of Hus, the sonne of Nachor: as also vyhence the Hieremie 25 in the same continuation (though some other Nations named between) setting in call 30 where Hus is spoken of, there Buz is also named. Neither doth it hinder our conic- him exregione Eture that in the place of lob 32. Elihu the Buzite is faid to be of the Familie of Ram: dufitide. (which Iunius expounds to be as much as of the Familie of Aram) for that by this Aram we are not to understand Aram the sonne of Som, Junius himselfe maketh it plaine, both in his annotation upon the beginning of his booke, where he faith that one of labs friends (which must needes be this Elibu) was of the posteritie of Nachor (as also in this place he confesseth so much expresly) and in as much as he readeth not è familia Aram, or Ram, but è familia Syra; like as elsewhere Laban who forung of Nachor is called a Syrian. As for the other three of lobs friends (of whom by this note of Elibu his being of 40 the Sprian Familie or, of the familie of Nachor) it is implied that they were of other See Sixtus See kindreds; as also by the Septuagints addition, that this Elibu was of the Land of Hus, noise. or Austis, it is implied that they thought only Elibu to have beene of Jobs owne

Francifeus Brochard the Monke, in his description of the holy Land in the journey from Acon Eastward, findeth Suetha, and Theman on the East of the Sea of Galilee: both very neare to the Land of His: whereof the one may seeme to have denominated Bildad the Shuchit; the other Eliphaz the Themanite: two of the three friends of lob, of the which lob 2.11. But Junius thinks that the Shuchits were inhabitants of Arabia the Defart, descended of Shuach the some of Abraham and Ketura: of whom 50 Gen. 72.2. perhaps, faith he, the same whom Plinie calls Saccei. So also he thinketh the Themanites of whom Eliphaz was, to have beene of Arabia the Defart : and Eliphaz himselfe to have beene of the posteritie of Theman the sonne of Eliphaz, which was the fonne of E/au. Amasevs of all other in this border, and of that part of the world, was the most famous, excelling in beautie, antiquitie, and riches, and was therefore called the Citie of joy or gladnes, and the House of pleasure; and is not onely remembred in many places of Scripture, but by the best Historians and Cosmographers. The Hebrewes faith Iofephus thinke it to have bene built by Iofeph. 1.14. Hus the sonne of Aram: of which opinion S. Hierome vpon Esai scemeth to be: though in his Hebrew questi- Instaire. ons hee affirmeth that it was founded by Damafeus, the sonne of Eliezer Abrahams Steward, athing very Gen. 15.2. vnliklie, seeing the citie was formerly knowne by that name, as appeares by Abrahams calling this his Steward Eliezer of Damasco. David was the first that subjected it to the Kingdome of Inda, after the ouerthrow of Adadezer their King, but in Salomons time, Rezon recoursed it agains, though he had no title at all or right to that principalitie: but Dauid hauing ouerthrowne Hadadezer king of Sophena, (otherwise Syria Soba or Zobah) Razon or Rezon with the remainder of that broken armie, in-30 uaded Damascena, and possest Damascens it selfe, and became an enemie to Salomon all 1.7(1.11.0.46)

The next King of Damaseus was Adad the Edomite, who flying into Agypt from 1-Reg. it. Danid, and Ioab, when they flew all the males in Edom, was there entertained, and married Taphnes the King of AEgypts wines fifter : of whom Taphnes in Egypt was fo called. This Adad returning againe became an enemie to Salomon, all his life, and (as some writers affirme) inuaded Damaseus, and thrust Rezon thence out. In the line of Adad that Kingdome continued nine descents? as hereafter may be shewed in the catalogue of those Kings of Syria) to whom the Assyrians & then the Greeians succeeded. This citic was exceeding strong, compassed with waters from the rivers

40 of Abanah, and Parphar: wherofone of them prophane writers call Chryforrhous the 1. Reg. s. golden river. Iunius takes it for Adonis. The countrey adioyning is very fruitfull of excellent wines and wheats, and all manner of excellent fruits. It had in it a very strong Castle built as it seemes by the Florentines, after it became Christian: the lillies Herold. 6. Bell. being found cut in many marbles in that Cit'adell. Against this Citie the Prophets Sacr. Amos; Efai, Hieremy and Zaeharias; prophecied that it should be taken, burnt, demo- 1, 3,8,10,8,17, lished, and made a heape of stones. After that it was ytterly ruined by the Babylonians, faith Herome vpon Efai: which thing 30 was performed by Salmanafar according to Iunius, in his note vpon that place, fine

yeeres after the prophetic. In time it was reflored by the Macedonians, and the Prolomies ; but long after when Syria fell into the hands of the Romanes, it was taken tolephant.4. by Metellus and Lollius. In the time of the Christians it had an Arebbishoppe : S. Hierome living, as he affirmeth upon the Altes, it was the Metropolis of the Saracens:

Gen. 36.40. is named among the fonnes of Efau that gaue denomination to the places where they were feated) or elfe to be the same Nahamah, which Iof. 15. 41, is reckoned for a Citic of Inda in the border, as he thinkes, of Edom. And yet I denie not but that neare to the Land of Hus, in Bafan, as it seemes, in the Tribe of Manasses, there is a Region which at least in latter times was called Suitis, or of some De Bell, Sacr. le like name. For this is evident by the Historic of Willielmus Tyrius, which reports of 22.6.15. 6 21: a Fort in this Region of Suita or Suites (as he calls it diversly) of exceeding great strength and vse for the retaining of the whole Countrie: which in the time of Bald-

wine the fecond King of Hierusalem was with great digging through rocks recovered 10 by the Christians: having not long before been lost to the great disaduantage of the Countrie, while it was in the handes of the Saracens. The situation of this Fort is by Tyrius described to be fixteene miles from the Citie Tiberius, on the East of Iordan: by Adrichomius foure miles North-ward from the place where Iordan enters the Lake Tiberias at Corazin.

Other Cities of this part of Manaffes named in the Scripture are thefe: Golan, Be. helbthera, Mitsha of Gilead, and Kenath, which after the comming of the Israelites was called Nobach. Of Nobach or Kenath, and Mitspa of Gilehad, we have spoken by occasion among the Cities of Gad: The two other were given to the Leuites, and Golan made one of the Cities of refuge : from which Golan wee have both Gaulanitis fupe- 20 rior & inferior, oft in Iosephus. Beheshthera is accounted the chiefe Citie of Basan by fome, but the writers corrupting the name into Bozra, it is confounded with Betler or Bozra of Reuben, and with Bozra of Edom. Argob is oft named for a Region in this Tract, and hence Hierome hath Arga, a name of a Citie placed by some about the waters of Merom (as they are called by Iofua) which make the Lake Samachonitis. as Iosephus calls it. This Lake being as it were in the midst betweene Casaria Philippi and Tiberias, through which as through the Lake of Tiberias, Iordan runneth, boundeth part of this halfe Tribe on the West. When the snow of Libanus melteth itis very large, faith Brochard: otherwise more contract, leaving the marish ground on both fides, for Lyonsand other wild beafts, which harbour in the shrubs that plen- 30 tifully grow there.

Adioyning to this Lake in this Countrie of Manasses, Insephus names two places of strength fortified by himselfe in the beginning of the Jewes rebellion; Seleucia the one, and Sogane the other. In the North fide of this halfe Tribe of Manaffe, and in the North-cast, the Scripture nameth divers bordering places toward Damaseus, as Tsedad, Chauran, and Chatsar-Henan, lying in a line drawne from the West; of which three Cities we reade Ezek. 47. 15. with which also agrees the place Numb. 24.8. where for Chauram, betweene Tfedad, and Chatfar-Henan, Ziphron is named. From this Chauram is the name of Auranitis regio, in Iosephus and Tyrius, whose bounds

(as also the bounds of Gessur and Mahachath or Macati, which were likewise 40 borderers to Manaffes toward the North-east) are vnknowne; only that Geffur was of might, it appeares in that Dauid married Mahaca the Daughter of Tholmay King of Geffur : by whom he had the most beautifull, but wicked, and vnfortu-

In the yeere 1400. Tamberlaine Emperour of the Parthians, inuaded that region. and belieged the citie with an armie of 1200000. (if the number be not miltaken) He entred it and put all to the fword, filling the ditch withhis prisoners, those that retired into the Castle which seemed a place impregnable, hee overtopped with another Castle adjoyning the forbare the demolishing of the citie in respect of the beautie of the Church, garnished with 40. gates or sumptuous porches. It had within it 2000 lanternes of gold & filuer: but while he inuaded Agypt they againg furprized Damafeus. Lastly in his returne after three monethes siege he forst it; the Mahametans proftrating themselves with their priests, desired mercie; But Tamber- 29 laine commaunding them to enter the Church, he burnt them, and it, to the number of 30000, and did so demolish it, as those that came afterwardes to see their houses, knew them not by the foundations. And as a Trophey of his victory he raised three towers with great Arte, builded with the heads of those whom hee had flaughtered. After this it was restored and reposses by the Soldane of Egypt with a garrison of Mammalukes: And in the yeere 1717. Selimus Emperour of the Turkes wrested it out of the hands of the Agyptians: in whose possession it now remaineth inhabited with Mahometans, and Christians, of all neighbouring nations.

by Damaseus the sonne of Eliezer Ahrahams steward, we finde no relation of their Kings, or Commonwealth till Davids time. For is flood without the boundes of Canaan: and therefore neglected by Mose, Josua, and the Judges, as impertinent to that Storic . But were it so that it had some reguli, or pettie Kings ouer it, as all the Cities of those partes had, yet none of them became famous for ought that is left to writing, till fuch time as 40 David overthrew Adadezer prince of Sophena or Syria Zoba: the same Nation which Plinie calleth Nubei, inhabiting betweene Batanea and Euphrates. Now the better to vnderstand the storic of those Syrian Princes, whom soone after the Kings of Damascus made their vassals, the reader may informe himselfe. That on the Northeast parts of the holy land there were three chiefe principalities whereof the Kings or Commaunders greatly vexed or disturbed the State or Commonwealth of Israel, namely Damaseus or Aram, Sophena or Syria Zoba, and Chamath, or Chamath-Zoba, of which these were the Princes in Davids and Salomons times: Razon or Rezon of Damascus, Adadezer of Syria Zoba, and Tohu of Chamath. But it seemeth that Damascus was one of the cities subject to Adadezer when David invaded him, though when so Saul made warre against Zoba, Damaseus was not named. And as Iosephus affirmeth the leader of those succours, which were levied and sent to Hadad-Hezer from Damascus, had the name of Adad: who was in that battaile slaine with 22000. Aramites of Damascus: whereof, as of the ouerthrow of Adadezer, Rezon, the Commander of his armie, taking aduantage, made himselfe King of Damaseus: Adadezer and Adad of Damafous being both flaine. About the same time Tohu King of Chamath or Itured, 1.Rig. 11. hearing thathis neighbour and enemie Adadezer was vtterly ouerthrowne, sendeth for peace to Danid, and presenteth him with rich gifts, but in dolo faith S. Hierome; it was craftily done of him. Now to the North of the holy Land, and to the West of Damaseus, the Tyrians and Zidonians inhabited : but they for the most part were in league and peace with the Iudaans and Israelites. But to returne to the kings of Syria, I meane of Syria as it is taken in the Scriptures, containing Damascena, Soba or Zoba, and Chainath or Iturea, to which I may adde Gelhur, because it is so accounted in the 10 2. of Sam. 15. as ioyning in the territoric to Damaseus (for Syria at large is farre greater, of which Paleflina it selfe is but a Prouince, as I have noted in the beginning of this Tract) It is not agreed among the Historians of former times, nor of our latter writers, who was the first of those Adads of Syria Zoba, and Damafeus.

Some account Rezon, other Adad of Idumea: of whom it is written in the first of Kings, that David having invaded that region, and left loab therein to destroy all the male children thereof: Adad of the kings feed, fled into Agypt: and was there married to Taphnes the Queenes lifter as before, who hearing of Dauids death; and of the death of his Captaine loab (whom indeed all the bordering Nations feared) hee returned againe, and as Bunting thinketh, this Adad did expell Rezon out of Da-

20 mafeus : and was the first of the Syrian Kings. To mee it seemeth otherwise. For as 2 sam.8.3. I take it, Adadezer the sonne of Rehob, whom Saul inuaded, was the founder of that and 12. principalitie: and the first of Adads, who for faking his fathers name, as hee grewe powerfull, tooke vpon him the style of Adad, the great God of the Affrians, faith Macrobius, which fignified oneneffe or Vnitie. I also finde a citie called Adada in the fame part of Syria: of which whether these Princes tooke the name or gaue it, I am ignorant. For Adad-ezer, Ben-adad, Eli-adad were the fame in name, with the differences of Ezer, Ben, and Eli, adioyned. And that Adadezer was of greatest power, it appeareth first because it is against him, that David vndertooke the warre; secondly because he leuied 22000. Aramites out of the territorie of Damascus: as out of his

30 proper Dominions: for had the Damascens had a King apartitis probable that the Scriptures would have given vs his name, thirdly because Syria Zoba, of the most of which Adadezer was king, was an exceeding large territorie, and contained of Arabia the Defart as farre as to Euphrates, according to Plinie; and the greatest part of Arabia Petranaccording to Niger. Whofoeuer was the first, whether Adadezer, or Adad of I- 1.Reg. 11, dumaa, Rezon was the second: Who was an enemie to Ifrael all the dayes of Salomon. Befids the cuil that Adad did, the cuil that Hadad did, scemeth to be referred to Hadad of Idumea, lately returned out of Agypt: to wit, 23. yeres after he was carried thither.

The third king of Damaseus, and of Zobah both, was Hezion, to Hezion succeeded Tabrimmon, or Tabremmon, to him Benhadad, as is proued in the first of Kings. 1.King. 15.18.

40 For Asaking of Inda the sonne of Abiam, the sonne of Roboam, the sonne of Salomon, being vexed and inuaded by Baasha, the successour of Nadab, the sonne of Ieroboam, fent to Benhadad, the sonne of Tabrimmon the sonne of Hezion, king of Aram, that dwelt at Damaseus, to invade Israel (while Baasha sought to fortific Rama against Asa: thereby to blocke him vp, that he should not enter into any of the territories of 1/6rael) who according to the defire of Afa, having received his prefents, willingly inuaded the countrey of Nepthalim, and tooke divers cities, and spoiles thence: Afa fortific Rama, withall, and converted them to his owne vie.

This Benhadads father Tabremmon was in league with Asa: and so was his father 50 Hezion; for Asarcquireth the continuance of that friendship from Benhadad, his some: though it seemeth that the gold and silver sent him out of the Temple, was the most forcible argument. And that this Tabremmon inuaded Ifrael, before the enterprize of his some Benhadad, it is coniectured. For Benhadad when he was prisoner with Achab, spake as followeth. The Cities which my father tooke from thy father; I will 1.Reg. 20, 0, 34;

reflore: and thou shalt make streetes or keepers of the borders, for thee in Damascus; as my father did in Samaria. And herein there ariseth a great doubt (if the argument it selfe were of much importance) because Tabremmon was father indeed to Benhadad which inuaded Baa/ha, at the request of Asa; But this Benhadad that twice entred vpon Achab : and was the second time taken prisoner, was rather the sonne of Ben. badad, the first of that name, the confederate of Asa and Abiam, as before, than the fonne of Tabremmon. For betweene the invalion of Benhadad the first, in Baalhas time, and the feige of Samaria, and the ouerthrow of Benhadad by Achab, there past 49 yeeres, as may be gathered out of the raignes of the Kings of Ifrael. So that if we allow 30 yeeres of age to Benhadad, when he inuaded Baafha, and after that 40, 10 yeeres, ere he was taken by Achab, which make eightie lacking one, it is vnlikely that Benhadad at such an age would make warre. Besides all this, the first Benhadad came with no fuch pompe, but the fecond Benhadad vaunteth, that he was followed with 32. Kings : and therefore I resolue that Benhadad the sonne of Tabremmon inuaded Baalha and Omri, and Benhadad the second inuaded Achab, at whose hands this Benhadad received two notorious overthrowes: the first at Samaria, by a fallie of 700. Ifraelites: the second at Aphee, where with the like number in effect, the Ifraelites flaughtered 100000. of the Aramites: belides 2 7000, which were crushe by the fall of the wall of Aphee. And this Benhadad, Achab againe fetteth at libertie; to whom he rendreth those townes, that his father had taken from the predecessour of A- 20 chab, but being returned, he refuseth to render Ramoth Gilead, a frontier towne, and of great importance. Now three yeeres after (for follong the league lafted) Ramoth not being deliuered, Achab inuadeth Gilead, and affeigeth the citic, being affifted by 10 Suplat. The Aramites came to succour and fight; in which Achab is wounded and dieth that night. After this, Benhadad sendeth the commaunder of his forces called Naaman, to Ioram the sonne of Achab to be healed of the leaprosie; and though Elizeus had healed him ; yet he picketh quarrell against Ioram ; and when Ioram by Elizeus his intelligence, had escaped his plot, he sent men, and Chariots to take the Prophet, as is aforefaid. After Benhadad befiegeth Samaria againe, and being terrified thence from heaven, he departeth home, and fickneth, and fendeth Azael with 30 great gifts to Elizeus, to know his estate, if he might line. Azael returning, smothereth him. Zonar as and Cedrenus call this Benhadad Adar, and the sonne of Adar: Amos and Hieremie mention the towers of Benhadad. Insephus writeth that Benhadad and his fuccessour Azael were worshipped for Gods by the Syrians to his time, for the fumptuous Temples which they built in Damafeus. The Syrians also boasted much of their antiquitie, ignorant faith he, that scarce yet 1100. yeeres are compleate fince their warres with the Ifraelites.

Hazael or Azael the first king of the race of the Adads of Damaseus was anointed by Elisha, or Elizeus, when he was sent by Benhadad to the Prophet, to know whether Benhadad should recour his present sicknesse: He waged warre with Ioram; who 40 received divers wounds at the incounter at Ramoth in Gilead: from whence returning to be cured at Iefrael, he and the King of Inda, Ahaziah, or Ochozias, are flaine by Iehu, as before is faid. After the death of Ioram, Azael continued the warre against lebu, and wasted Gilead, and all those portions of Gad, Reuben, and Manasse, ouer Iordan. Hee then inuaded Iuda, and tooke Gath, but by gifts from Ioas hee was auerted from attempting Hierusalem: for he presented him all the hallowed things which I EHOSAPHAT, I EHORAM, and AHAZIAH his fathers, Kings of Iuda had dedicated; and which he himselfe had dedicated; and all the gold which was found in the Temple was spoyled to please the Adads of Damascus. For Asa did present Benhadad 50 with those treasures, when he inuited him to warre vpon Baasha King of Israel. And

Fter Hazael, Bennasaa inc tooling, the fonne of Hazael, reigned in Damafeus: who fought against Ifract, with ill direcesse: for loss king of Ifrael, the sonne of the vinhappie 10-2-2-2-2-3; ashe was foretold by Elisate Prophet, beat Bernhadad in three Inseptament, in the lost all those cities to Ifrael, which his father Fter Hazael, Benhadad the second, or rather the third of that name, feuerall battels : and he lost all those cities to Ifrael, which his father

Hazael had taken violently from Ioachaz.

After this Benhadad the sonne of Hazael, there succeeded three others of the 10seph.an.l.g. fame name, of whom the Stories are loft, onely Nicholaus Damafeenus, cited by Iofe- 6.6. phus, makes mention of them: and in one of these Kings times it was that leroboam the second, the sonne of Iom recovered Damaseus it selfe, to Indah faith the Geneua, 1.King.i. 18 but better in Iunius, vique recuperabat Damascum, & Chamatham Iehuda prò Israele; that is, And how he recovered for Israel, Damaseus and Chamatha of Iudaa; for these cities sometimes conquered by Dauid, did of right belong to the tribe of Iuda. And it is likely that this conquest vpon the Adads was performed: the first of these three Adads then living, of whom there is no Storie. For when as Iehoas the king of the tenne Tribes had thrice overcome the Syrians in the time of Benhadad the sonne of Hazael, and had recovered the cities which Hazael had wonne from Ifrael; and fo left his Kingdome to his sonne Ieroboam the second, it seemeth that this Ieroboam without delay, and hauing nothing else left for him to enterprize, instantly followed his fathers good fortune, and inuaded Damascus. Razin, or Rezin, after Iosephus Rases, after Zonaras Raason, the 10. Adad, maketh league with Pekah, or Phacas King of Ifrael, against Achaz King of Iuda; both carie 30 away a great number of prisoners. After this they both besiege Achaz in Hierusa lem : but in vaine. Then Adad alone inuadeth Elath, and beating out the lewes, 2. King i. K. makethit a Colonie of Syrians. Hazael, whom Elifha forctold, with teares, of his advancement; the fame who de uerthrew Ioram King of Ifrael, at Ramoth Gilead. And that there was a second Hazael which preceded Benhadad the third, it is not probable, because that Hazael which tooke Geth, and compounded the warre with Ions, made the expedition 30. yeeres, and perchance more, after the first Hazael which stifled his master Benhadad. and had flaine toram the fonne of Achab King of Ifrael. For toas began to reigne in the 7 yeere of Iehu King of Ifrael; and after he had reigned 23. yeeres, the Temple was not yet repaired; after which (and how long wee know not) it is faid that Ha-50 zael tooke Geth, and turned his face towards Ierusalem. It is also some proofe that Hazael which tooke Geth, was not the same with Hazael that murdered Benhadad; because hee could not at that time but be of good yeeres, being as it seemeth the second person in the Kingdome, and Commaunder of Benhadads men of warre. To this Hazael, be he the first or second, succeeded.

Now betweene Benhadad the third, and Rezin the last, Nicholaus Damafeenus findes three other Kings of the Adads, which make twelve in all.

For the rest of the Princes of Syria, which were but reguli, as those of Emath, and Geffur, we finde that Tohu was King of Emath or Chamath in Davids time, to whom he fent his sonne Ioram with presents, after Davids victorie against Adadezer. Also Senacherib speaketh of a King of Emath, but names him not.

Of the Kings of sophena or Syria, Soba or Calefyria, there are two named, Rehob or Rochob 22 the father of Adadezer, and Adadezer himselfe, and it is plaine that after his death the feat of the Kings of Soba was transferred to Damafeus, a Citie better fitting their greatnesse. After Rezin became Lord of both Principalities. And the race of these Kings of Syria (which became so potent, and joyned Soba, Damascus, Emath, and the defart of Arabia with other Provinces into one, under Rezin the fecond of the Adads) as it began with David, so it ended at once with the Kingdome of Israel. For Ahaz king of Inda waged the Assyrian Teglatphalassar against Pekah King of Ifrael, and against Rezin the last King of Damafeus : which Teglath first inuaded Damascena, and the region of Soba, and tooke Damasceus it selfe, and did put to death Rezin the last, carrying the inhabitants captine. This was the second time 20 that the Affyrians attempted Ifrael. For first, Phul Belochus entred the borders thereof (Menahem gouerning Israel) who stopt the enterprize of Phul with a thousand talents of filuer : for this Phul Belochus, whose pedigree wee will examine hereafter, being scarce warme as yet in his seate at Babylon, which hee, with the helpe of his companion Arbaces, had wrested from Sardanapalus: having besides this King of Syria in his way, who feemed to be a great and strong Prince, was content to take the composition of a thousand talents of the King of Israel for that present time. But his sonne Teglath following the purpose of his father Belochus, and finding so excellent an occasion, as the warre begun betweene Israel and Iuda, Pekab commaunding in the one, and Ashaz in the other, his neighbour Rezin being also wrapt in 40 that warre, and wasted in strength thereby, did willingly accept the offer of Achas King of Inda, his imprest and entertainment. So, first attempting Damaseus, which lay in his path towards Ifrael, he carried it (as is before remembred) and then with great case possest himselfe of the Cities of Nephthalim: leading with him a great part of the people captine. And his sonne Salmanassar, whom Ptolomy calleth Nabonassar, after the renolt of Hofea, forced Samaria: and rent that Kingdome afunder. So as the line and race of Ninus in Sardanapalus, whom Belochus Supplanted; the race and Monarchie of the Syrian Adads in Rezin, whom Teglath flaughtered; the Kingdome of Israel in Hosea, whom Salmanassar ouerturned, happened neere about a time: that of Ninus in the daies of Belochus, and the other two in the daies of Teglatphalaffar, and 50 Salmanassar his sonne. For Sardanapalus perished, Osaruling Inda; and the other two length vtterly ouerturned. Herusalem and the Temple burnt 132, yeeres after the captiuntie of Ifrael, and Samaria: the destruction of Ifrael beng in the ninth yeere of Holea: that of Iuda in the eleauenth of Zedechia. Now the Emperours of Allyria and Babylon held also the Kingdome of Syria from the eight yeere of Salmanasser, to the last of Baltassar, whom Herodotus calleth Labynitus: in all about 200. yeeres. After these the Persians from Cyrus to Darius their last King, held syria about 200.

Kingdomes were diffolued, Achaz yet liuing. Lastly, the Kingdome of Iuda it selfe, being attempted by Senacherib, the sonne of Salmanasfar in vaine, and preserved for the time by God miraculously, was at CHAP.12. S.I. of the Historie of the World.

Then Alexander Macedon tooke this among other Provinces of the Persian Empire, and his successours the Seleucide reigned therein, till it became subject vnto the 10 power of the Romanes, from whom it was wrested long after by the Saracens, and remaineth now in possession of the Turke, as shall be shewed in due place. Thus much of the nations bordering upon the Israelites, with whom they had most to doeboth in warre and peace, being the onely people, whose Historie in those antient times carried an affured face of trueth.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Tribe of BENIAMIN, and of Hierusalem.

Of diners memorable places in the Tribe of Beniamin, whereof Hiericho, Gilgal, Mit/pa, Bethel, Rama, Gobah and Gibha.

F the Tribe of Beniamin, the twelfth and youngest fonne of Iacob, whom hee had by Rachel, there were mustred at Mount Sinai 3 5000. able bodies: all which perishing in the Defarts, there entred the holy Land of their Issues 45000. fit to beare Armes: and these had their Territorie on this side Iordan, betweene Iuda and Ephraim: The Cities within this Tribe neerest Iordan, are Lod, Hadid, and Ono: of which Lod and Ono were built by Shemed a Beniamite: 1,Chro,8,11, they were all three reinhabited with Beniamites, after the returne out of captivitie, as is mentioned, Webe.

Samarim or Tsemaraim, named of Tsemary, one of the sonnes of Canaan, was another of their Cities; and further into the Land standeth Iericho, one of the Topara ther of their Circs; and intruct into the Landau and the last of inda; seated in a most fruitfull valley, adorned with many palme trees: and therefore elsewhere called the Citie of Palmes. From the time 1,86,17,36, of 10/14, who vtterly destroyed it, it lay waste vntill the time of Achab: in whose 1,06,639. daies Chiel of Bethel laid the new foundation of it, in the loffe of Abiram his cldest This Halmon is 50 sonne, and built the gates of it in the losse of his youngest sonne Segub: according methywhence to the curse of Iosua: in which and other respectes Hos. 12. 14. calleth Iosua a Pro- they make a phet. fo much mention in the Scripture, where lofua first cate of the fruites of the lande. circumcifed all those borne in the Defarts, and celebrated the Paffeouer. The reason of the name, or rather a memorable application of the Etymologie of this name (for it feemes by the place, Deut. 11.30. that the name was knowne before the comming of the Ifraclites into Canaan) is noted 10.5.9.0b devolutionem probri Agyptiaci, because their foreskinnes (the people being there circumcifed) were mum Dei furit, tumbled downe the Hill: which from thence was called Gollis preputiorum. This and interprets Gilgal was also called Geliloth, as appeares by comparing the places, Iof. 15.7. and 18. 17. for it was in the borders of lordan, of which lof. 22. 13. and Geliloth lignifieth borders. * It flood (though in some distance) directly Eastward, ouer against the 10 two hils Garizim and Hebal: vpon the one of which the bleffings, and on the other Exod, 23, 17 the the curlings were to be read to the people, both being the mountaines of Ephraim. Further, for the situation of this Gilgal, it is to bee noted, that both it, and Mitspa of Beniamin (of which also wee reade oft in the Scripture) were leated about the midst of the length of the land of Canaan: for which reason * Samuel chose these two where the arke places, to either of which he came yeerely to give judgement to the Ifraelites; of was, out times which two, Gilgal (as is faid) was necre lordan on the East fide of this Tribe; and ipeake of fefti- Mit/paneere the West sea, towards the land of the Philistims.

The third place, which is named with these two, whither also Samuel vsed yere-tings: and be - ly to come, is * Bethel: which also was seated in this Tribe of Beniamin. But to re- 20 fide the Priefts turne to Gilgal which was the first place, where the Arkeresided, after they past ouer bring the 4the Iordan from whence it was carried to Silo, & thence to Kiriath-ieharim, and at length to Hierusalem) here in Gilgal it was that Iosua pitched vp the twelve stones, which were taken out of the channell of Iordan when it was drie, that the Ifraelites might passe ouer it, by which Storie, as it is set downe 10st. 4. it appeares, that the same day that they passed ouer Iordan, they lodged at Gilgal. At the same Gilgal, to omit many other memorable things, it was that Samuel he wed Agag the King of the Amalekites in pieces. And as for Mitsa, whither also Samuel came yeerely to give Judgement, there also were often the greatest meetings held; as that for the reuenge of the Bethel other-Leuites wife against Gibha, and the Beniamites, Iud. 20. 1. and another against the Phi- 30 wife then for the Citie Relistims 1. Sam. 7.12. Thither also Indas Macchabaus gathered the Iewes (when Hie-Junius allo take rusalem was possest by the Heathen) as it is 1. Macc. 3.47 in which place this reason it for the place of their meeting is added; Quià locus Orationi fuerat Mitspa anteà Israeli. Touching this Mitflu, to avoid confusion, it is to be remembred, that the Scriptures mention foure places of this name: Mitspa of Juda, of which 10f. 15.38.* Mitspa of Gilead, of which wee have spoken alreadie in the Tribe of Gad: Mitspa of the Moabites, where Danid for a while held himselfe, commending his parents to the King of Moab 1. Sam. 22.3 and laftly, this chiefe Mitspa of the Beniamites. And as in this place the 11,0.05 ap peares by that chiefe meetings were held both before Hierusalem was recourred from the Iebusties, which is added and also in the time of the Macchabees (as we have faid ) when Hierusalem was held by 40 Serfar crietom, the wicked under Antiochus, so also in the time of Hieremie, after the destruction of the three quar. the Temple by the Chaldeys, Gedaliah whom Nabuchodonofor left in Jewry as Gouernour over those that were left in the land, held his abiding in this place: vntill (to the great hurt of the lewes) he was flaine by the treason of Ismael, one of the royall blood of Inda, as it is Herem. 14.

Necre veto this Mitspa, the *Scripture mentioneth Beth-car, after called Aben-Hezer, that is, the Stone of helpe: where Samuel pitched up the pillar or Stone, for a Trophy against the Philistims.

Touching Bethel which (as it seemes) was the third place where Samuel held his chiefe meetings for the ministring of Iustice, that it was aunciently called Luz, and 50 how it was taken by the iffue of Tofeph (though it belonged to the portion of Benin the Tribe of iamin, as it is Nehem. 11. 31. and Iof. 18.22.) and how another Citic called Lux *neere Affer. * 1.Sam 7.11. adioyning to it, was built by the man of the Citic which shewed the entrance to the spies, as it is Indg. 1 and of the occasion of the name from Iacobs vision: and how

The territorie of Bethel, which at the first belonged to the Kingdom of the tenne Linds and Ifred Tribes, from the time of the great victorie of Abia against Ieroboam (of which 2.Chr. between Hai 13.) was taken from them, and adjoyned to the Kingdome of Inda: and so it continued, as appeares by the Storie of Ioshia: which performed the Prophecies against See 9.8 16 the altar of Bethel, 2.Reg. 23. whence those coastes 1. Not farre from this Bethel, in this Tribe, we finde three other Cities often men- wyeelds to the tioned in the Scriptures, Rama, Gibba, and Gebah. Of a fourth Rama we reade 2. Reg. 8. 29. which is Ramoth in Gilehad. The first, Tribe of Since which is most often mentioned, is Rama of Beniamin, seated as we faid, neere Bethel on toward the 20 the vttermost South-border of the Kingdome of the tenne Tribes: for which cause 10f. 9 8.18 cal-Baufha in the time of $1/4 King of Iuda, fortified it, to hinder those that did fly from the South, and him to Afa. Of this Rama, or Ramatha I should rather thinke Iofeph was, that buried otherwise Ba-Chrift: because it was necret to Hierusalem, and after the captivitie belonged to His halath bee, dea, as it appeares Efd. 2, 26. where in that it is joyned with Gebah, it is plaine that he fruction, that speaketh of that Rama with whose stones (after B.sasha had ceased to build it) Asa (as is, Gouerning it is 1. Reg. 25.22.) built Gebah adioyning to it: both being in Beniamin. And as Rama a genitiue was the South-border of the tenne Tribes, so was Gebah the North-border of the whence the Kingdome of Iuda: whence 2. Reg. 23. 8. weercade that Iofiah through all his King. T what time titerufalem was built (which afterward became the Prin- 30 ceffe of , all Ciries ) it do the not appeare. Some there are who imagine that Melehifedee was the founder thereof in Abrahams time. But *according to others, that Citic out of which Melehifedee incountred Abraham (in his returne from the ouerthow of the Affyrian and Perfian Kings or Captaines, when Lot was made prisoner) standeth by theriner of tordan, in the halfe Tribe of Manasse bordering Zabulon, which was also called Salem, and by the Greekes Solima.

Hierufalem (whenfoeuer or by whomfoeuer built) was a principall Citie in 10fua his time : yet not fo renowned as Hazor the Metropolis (in those daies and before) of all the Cananites. Adonizedek (whom Iofua flew) was then King of Hierufalem. 40 That it was belonging to the Iebusites it is manifest: for how long socuer they held it before Molestime, they were Mafters and Lords thereof almost 400. yeares after him : euen till Danid wanne it : and therefore in all likelihood, it was by the Iebufai (the children of Iebusaus the sonne of Canaan) built; after whom it was called Iebus. And so much did that Nation rely on the strength of the place, as when David attempted it, they bragged that their lame, and blinde, and impotent people should defend it.

2.Sam.5.v.6.

David after he had by Gods affiltance possestit, and turned out the Iebusites, gaue it an exceeding great increase of circuit: strengthened it with a Citadell or Castle: and beautified it with many Palaces, and other buildings: changing the name from 50 Iebussalem, the Citie of the Iebusites, to Hierusalem, which the Geekes call Hierosolima. After Davidstime Salomon amplified, beautified and ftrengthened it exceedingly.

But this ungratefull, Idolatrous, and rebellious Nation, taking no warning by these Gods gentle corrections and afflicti-20 ons, but perfifting in all kinde of impictic, filling the Citie even to the mouth with innocent blood, God railed up that great Babylonian King Nabuchodonofor; as his 2. Then 70 yeeres being expired, according to the Prophecie of Daniel, and the Tewes Hirro 3, Had. by the grace of Cyrus returned : the Temple was againe built, though with inter- Heb. ruption and difficultie enough: and the Citie meanely inhabited, and without wals or other defences, for some 60. and odde yeeres, till Nehemia by the fauour of Artaxerxes rebuilt them. Then againe was the Temple and Citie spoiled by Bagofes, Networks. or Vigoles, the Lieutenant of Artaxerxes: after by * Ptolomeus the first, then by 34 oc. Before the captinitie, the ypto Hien/apeople of the land through the exhortation of of godly Kings, made many and large time offer secrifice. In the second sec offerings to repaire the Temple of Salomon. The wrong done by Ptolomaus Lagi to ant. 1. the second Temple, was requited by the bountie of his sonne Ptolomeus Philadelphus. The mischiefe wrought by Antiochus Epiphanes and his followers, was amended partly by the great Offerings which were sent to Hierusalem out of other Nations. Finally all the loffes, which either the Citie or Temple had endured, might wel are end feeme forgotten in the reigne of Herod that vsurping and wicked, but magnificent cylin King, who amplified the Citie, new built the Temple, and with many sumptuous 30 workes did so adorne them, that he left them farre more stately and glorious than they had beene in the daies of Salomon.

Of the destruction of Ierufalem by the Romanes.

N this florishing chate, it was at the comming of our Saniour Christ le-Jus: and after his death and afcention, it to continued about 40. yeres.
But then did Titus the Romane, being flirred vp, by God, to be the reuenger of Chriff his death; and to punish the tenes sinful lingratitude, incompasse it with the Romane armie, and became Lord thereof. Hee began the fiege at fuch time as the lewer, from all parts, were come vp to the celebration of the Paffeouer: fo as the Citie was then filled with many hundreds of thou- 10 fands of all forts; and no manner of provision or store for any such multitudes. An extreame famine, with the civile diffension, oppress them within the walles: a forcible enemic affailed them without. The Idumeans alfo, who lay in wait for the destruction of the Iewes Kingdome, thrust themselves into the Citic, of purpose to betray it: who also burnt the Temple, when Nabuchodonofor tooke it. And to be short, there perished of all forts, from the first belieging to the consummation of the vi-

Etorie, eleuen hundred thousand soules: and the Citie was so beaten downe, and demolifhed, as those which came afterward to see the desolation thercof, could hardly beleeve that there had beene any fuch place or habitation. Onely the three Herodian towers (workes most magnificent, and ouertopping the rest) were spared, af- 20 well for lodgings for the Romane garrifons, as that thereby their victorie might bee the more notorious and famous: for by those buildings of strength and State remaining, after-ages might judge what the rest were; and their honour be the greater and more shining that thereouer became victorious.

After this, fuch lewes as were feattered here and there in Judge, and other Proninces, beganne againe to inhabite fome part of the Citie; and by degrees to rebuildit, and firengthen it as they could, being then at peace, and tributaries to the Romane State : but after 65. yeeres, when they againe offered to revolt, and rebell, Alius Adrianus the Emperour flaughtered many thousands of them, and ouerturned those three Herodian Towers, with all the rest, making it good which Christ himselfe had 30 foretold; That there should not stand one stone uppon another, of that vngratefull Citie. Afterward, when his furie was appealed, and the Prophecie accomplished he tooke one part without the wall, wherein stood Mount Caluarie, and the Sepulcher of Christ, and excluding of the rest the greatest portion, hee agains made it a Citic of great capacitie, and called it after his owne name, Elia Capitolia. In the gate toward Bethe!, he caused a Sowe to be cut in marble, and set in the front thereof, which hee did in despight of the Iewes Nation: making an Edict, that they should not from thenceforth euer enter into the Citic, neither should they dare so much as to behold it from any other high place ouertopping it.

In the yeere 1000, it was regained by Godfrey of Buillon, by affault, with an exceeding flaughter of the Saracens, which Godfrey, when hee was elected King thereof, refused to be crowned with a Crowne of gold, because Christ, for whom hee fought, was therein crowned with thornes. After this recouery, it remained under the fuccessours of Godfrey 88. yeeres : till in the yeere 1197, it was regained by Saladine of AEgypt: and lastly, in the yeere 1517. in the time of Selim, the Turkes cast out the AEgyptians, who now hold it, and call it Cuzumobares, or the Holy Citie. 50 Neither was it Ierufalem alone that hath so oftentimes beene beaten downe and made defolate, but all the great Cities of the world have with their inhabitants, in feuerall times and ages, suffered the same shipwracke. impietic of men, by famine, by the fword, by fire, and by flauerie; but hee hath renenged himselfe of the very places they posses, of the wals and buildings, yea of the foyle and the beafts that fedde thereon.

For, euen that land, sometime called holy, hath in effect, lost all her fertilitie, and fruitfulneffe; witneffe the many hundreds of thoulands which it fedde in the dayes of the Kings of Iuda and Ifrael; it being at this time all ouer, in effect, exceeding stony and barraine. It also pleased God, not onely to consume with fire from heauen, the Cities of the Sodomites; but the very soile it selfe hath felt, and doth feele the hand of God to this day. God would not spare the beast that belonged 10 to Amelek, no not any finall number of them to bee facrificed to himselfe, neither was it enough that Achan himselfe was stoned, but that his moucables were also confumed and brought to ashes.

F the original of the Iewes, prophane writers have conceived diverfly and injuriously. Quintilian speakes infamously of them, and of their leader; who (faith he) gathered together a pernitious Nation.

Diodore and Strabo make them AEgyptians. Others affirme that while Is gouerned AEgypt, the people were so increased, as Ierosolymus, and Indas ledde thence a great multitude of that Nation, with whom they planted the neighbour Regions; which might be meant by Mojes and Aaron: for the name of Moses was accidentall, because hee was taken up and saued out of the waters. But Instine, of all other most malitious, doth derine the Lower from the Syrian Kings; of Instin. 1.36. whom, Damaseus, faith hee, was the first: and to him succeeded Abraham, Moses, and Ifrael. He againe supposeth (somewhat contrary to himselfe) that Israel had 30 tenne fonnes, among whom hee divided the land of Inda; focalled of Indas his eldest, who had the greatest portion. The youngest of the sonnes of Israel he calleth Inseph: who being brought up in AEgypt, became learned in magical Arts, and in the interpretations of Dreames, and fignes prodigious, and this tofeph (faith hee) was father to Mofes: who with the rest, by reason of their foule diseases, and lest they should insect others, were banished AEgypt. Further, hee telleth how these men thus banished, when in the Defarts they suffered extreme thirst and famine, and therein found reliefe the seuenth day, for this cause ever after observed the seauenth day, and kept it Holy; making it a Law among themselues, which afterward became a braunch of their Religion. Hee addeth also that they might not marrie 40 out of their owne Tribles, least discouering their vincleannesse, they might also be expelled by other Nations, as they were by the AEgyptians. These and like fables hath Iustine.

Cornelius Tacitus doth as grolly belie them in affirming That in the inmost Oratoric of their Temple, they had the golden head of an Asse, which they adored. But herein Tacitus forgetteth himselfe, hauing in the fift booke of his owne Historie truely confessed of the lemes, that they worshipped one onely God: and thought it most prophane to represent the Deitie by any materiall figure, by the shape of a man, or any other creature; and they had therefore in their Temples, no Image or representation, no not so much as in any Citie by them inhabited. Somewhat like 50 this hath Alexander Polyhistor, in Stephanus; who also makes Iudas with Idumaa, the first parents of the lewes.

Claudius Iolaus drawes them from Indaus, whose parents were Sparton and Thebus, Citedby Stewhence it came that the Spartans or Lacedemonians challenged kindred of the He- phantin lubrewes: but they did it as descended of Abraham, faith Iosephus. Some of these reports seeme to have been gathered out of divine letters; though wrested and peruerted, according to the custom of the Heathen. For so have they obscured and altered the Storic of the Creation, of Paradile, of the Floud; and given new names to the children of Adam in the first age : to Noah and his sonnes, in the second; and so to Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, Moses, and the rest of the fathers, and leaders of the Hebrewes: all which fainings, as touching the Iewes and their originals, Iofephio against ham, who was the fonne of Heber, in the fixt descent. Their ancient names were first changed by the two grand-children of Abram: for after Iacob, otherwise Israel, the chiefe part were called Ifrael, another part after Efau or Edom, Edomites; at length the remnant of Iacob, being most of the Tribe of Inda, honoured the name of Iudas, the sonne of Iacob, and became Iudeans or Iewes: as also for a time in the name of Ephraim the fonne of Iofeph, the chiefe of the Patriarches of the ten Tribes; therest of the tenne Tribes were comprehended: but were first rooted out when the Kingdome of Israel fell. The Indeans continued their names, though they suffered the same servitude not long after, vnder Nabuchodonosor. The government which this Nation vnderwent, was first paternall: which 20

continued till they served the AEgyptians. They were secondly ruled by their Captaines and leaders, Moses and Iosua, by a pollicie Divine. Thirdly, they fubicated themselves to Judges. Fourthly, they defired a King, and had Saul for the first: Of whom and his successours, before wee intreat, wee are first to speake of their Gouernment vnder ludges, after the death of Iolua: with fomewhat of the things of

CHAP. XIII.

Of the memorable thinges that happened in the world, from the death of Iosva to the Warre of Troy: which was about the time of IEPHTHA.

ð. I. of the inter-regnum after I o sv A's death; and of OTHONIEL.

HEN Iosua was now dead, who with the aduise of the 70. Elders, and the high Priest, held bezek prisoner the greatest and cruellest Comauthoritie ouer the people, and ordered that Common-weale: It pleased God to direct the Tribe of Iuda (in whom the Kingdome was afterward established) to vndertake the Warre against the Canamites, ouer whom (with Gods fauour, and the affistance of Simeon) they became victorious. In the first attempt which they made, they not only slew ten thousand, but made Adoni-

mander, both' of the Canaanites and Perizites, This tyrants crucitic as elfe-where hath beene fignified, they returned in the fame 30 kinde vpon his owne head; and so by the tornients which he now felt in his owne person (before no otherwise knowne vnto him but by his malitious imagination) made him confesse and acknowledge Gods iust indgement against himselfe.

The Tribes of Inda and Simeon did also master and possesse during this interregnum (or as somethinke, before the death of Iosua) the Cities of Azotus, Askalon, Ekron, and Hierusalem, which they burnt, and the Jebusites afterward reedified. They tooke also the Cities of Hebron, Debir, or Kiriathsepher, and Zephath, afterwards Horma. And although it be not fet downe in expresse wordes that any one person commanded in chiefe ouer the people, as Moses and Iosua did : yet it seemeth that Caleb was of greatest authoritie among them : and that hee with the aduise of 40 Phinees directed and ordered their warres. For if any thinke that they proceeded without a chiefe, the good fucceffe which followed their undertakings witneffeth. the contrarie. And it was Caleb euen while Iosua gouerned, as appeares Ios. 10:39.

to Othoniel his yonger brother after the conquest: whose behaviour in that service was such, as (next vnto the ordinance of God) it gaue him the greatest reputation among them, and may be effected the fecond cause of his preferment and election for their first Indge soone after. But while those of Inda made warre with their borderers, from whom they only recoursed the mountainous Countries (for they 50 could not drive out the inhabitants of the Valleis, because they had Chariots of gron.) ind 1.191 The rest of the Tribes sought also to inlarge and establish their owne Territories:

that propounded the attempt of Debir, to the rest of the Captaines: for the performance of which enterprise, he promised his Daughter Achsah: which he performed in which warre they laboured with variable successe: for as the house of Infephrecouered Bethel, or Luz, from the Hittites, so did the Amorites recouer from Dan all Ind. 1.252 the plaine Countries: and forst them to saue themselues in the Mountaines. And Ind. 1,3%.

now the Ifraelites vnmindfull of Gods benefits, and how often he had miraculoufly a-fore-time defended them, and made them victorious ouer their enemies (the Elders being also consumed, who better adulted them in the Inter-regnum) did not only ioyne themselues in marriage with the Heathen Nations : but (that which was more detestable) they served the Idolls of Baal, and Asteroth, with other the dead Gods of the Canaanites and Amorites. And therefore did the Lord God whom they had prouoked with their Idolatrie; deliuer them into the handes of the Aramites of Mesopotamia: whom Chushan Rishathaim at that time commanded. But after they had felt the smart of Gods displeasure against them eight yeares, it pleased him to haue compassion on his people, and to raise vp Othoniel to bee their Judge and 10 Leader: who by God affifted, deliuered his bretheren from oppression: and inforst the Aramites to returne into their owne Defarts, and into Mesopotamia adioyning, after which the Ifraelites had peace fortie yeares, during all the time of otheriels gouernment. This Othoniel is thought by Toflatus to have beene the yonger brother of Caleb, for as much as in the booke of Indges he is twice called Othoniel the sonne of Cenaz Calebs yonger brother. Others doe rather interpret those wordes (Calebs yonger brother) as if they fignified the meanest of his kindred. Indeed it is not likely, that Calebs Daughter should marrie with her owne Vncle; yet it followes not therefore that Othoniel should have beene the meanest of the kindred. Wherefore we may better thinke that he was the Nephew of Caleb (as some learned men ex- 20 pound it) and as the very wordes of Scripture seeme to inforce. For Caleb was the fonne of Iephunneth, and Othoniel the fonne of Cenas, Calebs yonger brother; that is, he was not brother to Caleb, but his yonger brothers sonne; to whom it was not only lawfull, but commendable to marrie with his Cosen German Calebs daughter. How long it was from the death of Iofuah to the government of othoniel, it cannot be found: but it feemes to have beene no short time. For many Warres were made in that space against the people of the Land. Lais was then taken (as is thought) by the Danites; and the best writers are of opinion that between the times of Ioluah and Othoniel that civill warre brake out betweene the Beniamites and the rest of Israel, for the forcing to death of the Leuites wife. For it is written that in 30 those daies there was no King in Ifrael, but every man did that which was good in his owne cies. And as Juda led the people against the Canaanites during the Interregnum, so was hee commanded to doc against Beniamin, euen by the Lord God, whose direction they craued, as wanting a Judge to appoint what should be done, which sheweth it to have beene when Iofuah was dead, and before the government of Othoniel, especially considering, that all other times wherein they wanted Gouernours, were spent under such oppression of strangers, as would have given them no leaue to haue attended such a civill Warre, if their power had beene as great, as it was in the menaging of this action, wherein they so weakned the body of their estate, by effusion of bloud, that in many ages they could not bring into the field such 40 numbers as formerly they had mustered against their bordering enemies.

Here lived in this age of Othoniel, Pandion or Pandareus, according to Homer, the fift King of Athens: who beganne to rule in the twentieth yeare of Othoniel, and gouerned fortic yeares. Hee was father to E- 50 rictheus: his Daughters were Progne and Philomela, fo greatly men-

Cadmus also about this time obtained Thebes: of whose Daughter Semele was borne Dienysius or Liber pater : vnder whome Linus the Musitian lived. In his time also the Cities of Melus, Paphus, and Thurfus, were built. Ida and Duitylus flourished in this age, who are faid to haue found out the vse of iron : but Genesis hath taught we the contrarie, and that Tubalcain long before Gen. 4.22. wrought cunningly both in fron and braffe. Not long after this time, Ambhion and Whence came the name of Zethus gouerned Thebes: whom divers hronologers finde in Ehuds time. But S. Au- Vultan by Aenfline making a repetition of those fables, which were denised among the Gracians pharefit of the and other Nations, during the government of the Judges, begins with Triptolemus two first letters of whose parentage there is a little agreement. Wines you the thirteenth Chapter 1,18,113. of S. Augustine de Cuitate Deis, and the eighteenth booke, hath gathered all the opinions of this mans progenie, where hee that delires his pedigree may finde it. La-

Elantius and Eufebius make him native of Artica: and the sonne of Eleusius King of Eleusina: which Eleusius by carefull industric had fed the people of that Territorie in the time of a great famine. This when vpon the like occasion Triptolemus could not performe, fearing the furie of the people, he fled thence by Scain a kinde of Galley or long Boate, which carried in her Proue a grauen or carued Serpent: who because ried by Serpents through the aire Whether the times of the fe Kings which lived together with Othoniel, and after and him with the rest of the Judges and Kings of Ifrael and Inda, be precisely set downe, I cannot anow , for the chronologers, both of the former and latter times, differ in many particulars, to examine all which would require the whole time of a long life; and therefore I delire to be excused if in these comparisons I erre with others of bet ter judgement. For whether Eusebius and all that follow him, or his opposites (who make themselves so conversant with these ancient Kings, and with the very yeare when they beganne to rule) have hit the marke of time of all other the farthest off. and most defaced. Leannot, but greatly doubts First, because the Authors themschool, from whom the ancientest Chronologorshaue borrowed light, had nothing for the warrant of their owne works, but conjecture : Secondly, because their owne 20 disagreement and contention in those elder daies, with that of our owne age among the labourers in times, is such, as no man among the mhath, yet so edified any mans understanding, sauchis owne, but that he is greatly distracted, after what patterne

he made exceeding great speeds to returne and to relieue his people with Corne,

to creech his buildings.

This difagreement is found not only in the raignes of Heathen Kings and Princes; but even in computation of those times which the indisputable authoritie of holy Scripture hath fummed up, as in that of Abrahams birth; and after in the times of the Indges and the oppressions of Ifrael, in the times from the egression to the building of Salomons Temple, in the Persian Empire, the seventie Weekes, and in what not? Where focuer the account of times may fuffer examination, the arguments 40 are opposite, and contentions are such, as for ought that I see, men haue sought by so many wates to vincouer the Sunne, that the daies thereby are made more darke, and the cloudes more condenst than before, I can therefore give no other warrant, than other men have done in these computations; and therefore that such and such Kingsand Kingdomestooke beginning in this or that yeare, I auow it no otherwise than as a borrowed knowledge, or at least as a private opinion : which I submit to better judgments. Fter the death of Othoniel when Ifrael fell back to their former Idolatrie, God incouraged Mont to inuade and suppresse them: to performe which he joyned the forces of Ammon, and Amalee vnto his owne, and to (as all kinde of miserie readily findeth out those whom God hath 10 abandoned, or for a time with-drawne his helpe from, thereby to make them feele the difference betweene his grace and his displeasure) these Heathen neighbouring Nations, had an easie conquest ouer Israel: whom God himselfe exposed to those perills: within which they were so speedily folded vp. In this miferable estate they continued full eighteen yeares under Eglon King of the Monbites. and his confederates. Yet as the mercies of God are infinite, he turned not his eares from their crying repentance : but raised vp Ehud the sonne of Gera to deliuer them: by which weake man though maimed in his right hand, yet confident in the justnesse of his quarrell, and fearing that the Israelites were too few in numbers to contend with the Head of those valiant Nations, he resoluted to attempt upon the per- 10 fon of Eglon, whom if he could but extinguish, he affured himselfe of the following victorie : especially giving his Nation no time to reestablish their government, orto choose a King to command, and direct them in the Warres. According to which resolution, Ehud went on as an Embassador to Eglon, loaden with presents from the Israelites, as to appeale him, and obtaining private accesse vpon the pretence of some secret to be reucaled: he pierst his bodie with a Poniard, made of purpose with a double edge: and shutting the dores of his closet vpon him, escaped.

It may feeme that being confident of his good fuccesse, hee had prepared the strength of Ifrael in readinesse. For sodainly after his returne, he did repasse Jordan, and invading the Territorie of Mont, overthrew their Armie confifting of 10000, 30 able and ftrong men: whereof not any one escaped. After which victorie, and that Samgar his Successor had miraculously paine 600. Philistimes with an Oxe goade: the Land and People of Ifrael lined in peace vnto the end of fourescore yeares from the death of othoniel, which terme expired in the Worlds yeare 2691.

In the daies of Ehud Naomi with Elimeleth her husband, and with her two sonnes, trauailed into Moah, and so the storie of Ruth is to be referred to this time. About the beginning of the fourfcore yeares which are given to Ehud, it was that Oreus King of the Molossians: otherwise Pluto, stale Proferpina, as shee walked to gather flowers in the fields of Hipponium in Sicilia : or (according to Paulanias) by the River Cephilus, which elsewhere he calleth Chemer, if he mean not two distinct Riners. This stealth 40 being made knowne to Pyrithous with whom Hercules and Thefeus ioyned themfelues, they agreed together to recour her : but Plute or Oreus ( whom others call Aidonius) had (as they fay) a very huge Dogge, which fastened on Pyrithous, and tare him in peeces, and had also wearied Theseus, but that Hercules speedily rescued him : and by fireigth tooke and maftered the Dogge Cerberus : whereof grew the fable of Hercules his delivering of Thefens out of Hell. But Zezes, as I take it, hath written this storie somewhat more according to the truth. For Theseus and Pyrithois faith he, attempted to feale Proferpina Daughter to Aidonius, King of the Mologians who had Ceres to Wife, the mother of Proferpina. Proferpina being a generall name allo for all faire women. This purpose of theirs being knowne to Aidonius, Theseus 50 and Pyrithous were both taken, and because Pyrithous was the principall in this conspiracie, and Thefeus drawne on by a kinde of affection or inforcement, the one was giuen for food to Aidonius his great Dogge Cerberus, the other held prisoner til Hereules by the instigation of Euriftheus deliucred him by strong hand. The Atologic which Stephanus writes with a fingle (S) were a people of Epirus inhabiting neare the Mountaines of Pindus: of which Mountaines Octa is one of the most famous, where Hercules burnt himselfe. The River of Acheron (which the Poets describe to be in Hell) rifeth out the same Hills. There is an other Nation of the Molo Rin Theffalie but thefe are neighbours to the Cafiopai, faith Plutarch in his Greek quæstions.

The rape of Orithya the Daughter of Erietheus, King of Athens, taken away by Boreas of Thrace, is referred to the time of Ehud. The Poets ascribe this rape to the North winde, because Thrace is situate North from Athens. In his time also Tereus 10 rauished Philomela, of which the fable was deused of her conversion into a Nightingale. For Tereus having married her fifter Progne, conducting Philomela from Athens to fee her fifter, forft her in the paffage, and withall cut out her tongue that fhee might not complaine; perswading Progne his Wife that Philomela died in the midway: all which her brother in law's mercilesse behauiour towards her, Philomela expressed by her needle vpon cloth, and sent it Progne. In reuenge whereof Progne caused her only Sonne Hys to be cut in peeces, and set before Tereis her husband, so drest as it appeared to be some other ordinarie soode : of which when he had eaten his fill: shee caused his head, handes, and feete, to be presented vnto him: and then fled away with fuch speede towards Athens where her Father Pandion yet lived, as 30 the Poets fained, that thee was turned into a Swallow. The place where it was performed Strabo finds to be Daulis in Phocis: and the Tombe of Tereus, Paufanias 10 hath built neare the Rocks Mergi, in the Territorie of Athens. By which as also by Pau, in Att. the name Daulis, where these thinges are supposed to have been edone (whence also Philomela is called Daulias ales ) it appeares that it is true, which Thucydides notes by Thucydia way of digreffion in his Peloponnefian Warre, That this Tereus was not King in that which is now called Thracia, or in Odryfa, (as the Poets call him Odryfius) but that Phoeis a Countrie in Greece not farre from Attica, a Citie whereof is called Daulia, was in Pandions time inhabited by Thracians: of which this Tereus was King: whence Pandion to have amiltie with his neighbours, made him his fonne in law; as it is good 30 to beleeue, faith Thioydides, that Pandion King of Athens, made that alliance with a neighbour King from whom he might haue fuccour, rather then with any Tereus, that should have held the Kingdome of Odryle, which was greatly distant from thence. The occasion that the Poets chose a Swallow for Progne to be turned into, may feeme to haue beene partly because, as Paulanias saics: Daulide nec nidificant, nec habitant in tota circum regione Hirundines; As if a Swallow remembring the wrong that was there done to her, and to her fifter, did for euer hate that place.

Neare this time Melampus (who is faid to have understood the voices of Birds and Beafts) flourished, being also esteemed for an excellent Phisician. Hee restored to their former health the Daughters of Pratus King of the Argines, who (as the 40 Poets please) were made mad by Iuno: and thinking themselves to be Kine, fled into pout to the woods, fearing to be constrained to the Plough: for in those Countries, where Homer O. off, at the ground was light, they did vie often to plough with Kine.

In the 47 years of Ehud, Tros beganne to raigne in Dardania; and gaue it his owne name, about which time Phemone the chiefe Priest of Apollo in Delphos, deuised the Paul. Heroicall Verfe.

Of the same date was Tantalus; King of Lydia : whom Eusebius makes King of Phrygia: and also of that part of which the people were anciently Maones. Of Tantalus was denised the fable that some Poets have applied to the passion of love : and fome to the couctous that dare not inion his riches. Eufebius calls this Tantalus the Eufeb. prap. And where it was deuised, that he had alwaies Water and Fruit offered to his lips, and yet suffered the torment of hunger and thirst, it was meant thereby, that though he abounded (by reason of his riches) in all delicacie of the world, yet his minde being otherwise and to higher desires transported, he enioyed no pleasure at all by the rest. Of whom ouid:

This punishment, they say, was inflicted upon him, for that he discoursed the fecrets of the Gods: that is, because he taught wisedome and vertue to mortall men: which storic Cornelius Gallus hath elegantly express in Verse. Others expound this fable otherwise and say, That Tantalus, though he excelled in riches, yet being thirflie of more aboundance, was neuer fatisfied. Of whom Horace against coue-

Others conceine where it is fained of Tantalus, that he gaue the Nectar and Ambrossa of the Gods to vaine and vnworthic men, that hee was therefore by them in 30 that fort punished. Of which Natalis out of Pindarus.

Wherefore he commanded silence to his disciples: shatthey should not disclose divine mysteries to the common fort, which are easier learns by meditation than by babling. And therefore did the Agyptians communicate their myfleries among their Priests in certaine Hieroglyphick letters, to the end that their fecrets might be hidden from the Vulgar; and that they might bestow the more time in the contemplation of their couered meanings.

But to proceede with the contemporaries of Aod, or Ehud, with him it is also said, that Tityus lived whom Apollo flew, because he sought to force his Mother Latona. Euphorion hath it thus, that Tityus was the Sonne of Elara, the Daughter of Orcho. menus; which Elara being beloued of Jupiter, to avoid Juno's revenge, he hid Elara in the earth, where shee was deliuered of Tityus: whose Mother dying, and himselfe therein nourished, he was therefore called the sonne of the earth. Pausanias spead king of the graue of this Gyant, affirmes that his bodie occupied the third part of a furlong. But Tebullus hath a louder lie of his stature out of Homer,

Porrectufá, nouem TITYVS per ingera terra Assiduas atro viscere pascit aues:

Nine furlongs stretcht lies Tirvs, who for his wicked deedes The hungrie birds with his renewing liver daily feedes.

This Strabo doth thus expound; that Apollo killing this cruell and wicked Tyrant of Panopea, a Citie in Phocis, it was fained by the Poets to the terrour of others, that he was fill eaten in Hell by birds, and yet fill lined, and had his flesh

Admetus King of Theffalie lived alfo in this Age, whom it is faid that Apollo first 30 serued as a Heard-man, and afterward for his excellent wit was by him advanced; but having flaine Hyacinthus he croft the Hellespont, and fled into Phrygia. where together with Neptune, hee was entertained by Laomedon, and got his bread by working in bricke, for building of the walls of Troy, not by making the brickes leape into their places by playing on his Harpe: according to him in onid which

In these daies also of Ehud, or (as some finde it) in the daies of Deborah, lived Perfeus the sonne of supiter and Danaco, by whose Souldiers (as they sailed out of Peloponnesus to seeke their adventure on Affrica side) Meduja the Daughter and Succeffor of Phoreus, being weakely accompanied as shee hunted, neare the Lake

50 Triton, was surprised and flaine: whose beautie when Perfess beheld, he caused her triton a Lake of head to be imbalmed, and carried into Greece: the beautie whereof was such and Affrica which for much admired, and the beholders so astonished which beheld it, as thereof Palasian. grew the fiction, that all that looked on Medula's head, were turned into Didymin perce. ftones,

Cecrops the second of that name and 7. King of Athens, and Acrifius the 13. or Eules, in Chron, after Eulebrus, the 14. King of the Argines, began also their raignes, as it is said, in the time of this Judge: of which the first ruled 40 yeares, and the second 31 yeares. Also Bellerophon lived in this age, being the sonne of Glaucus, the sonne of Silyphus: who inticed by Antea or Sthenobia the wife of Pratus of the Argues, to accompanie her, but refuling it, shee accused him to her husband that he offered to force her: wherupon Pratus fent Bellerophon into Lycia, about some affaires of weight, between him and his Sonne in law tobates : giving fecret order to Tobates to dispatch him : but Iobates thinking it dishonorable to lay violent handes on him : imployed him against Chimera, a Monster, vomiting or breathing fire. Now the Gods (as the report is) 10 pittying his innocencie, fent him the winged Horse Pegafus, sprung vp of the bloud of Medufa, formerly flaine by the Souldiers of Perfeu in Affrica, to transport him, a horse that none other could master or bridle but Minerua : vpon which beast Bellerophon ouer-came Chimura: and performed the other feruices given him in charge: which done, as he returned toward Lycia, the Lycians lay in ambush to have slaine him: but being victorious also ouer all those, he arrived to lobates in safetie: whom Tobates for his eminent vertues honoured, first with one of his Daughters : and afterward with his Kingdome: after which he grew fo infolent, as he attempted to flie vp to heauen voon his Pegafiu: whose pride Iupiter disdaining, caused one of his stinging flies to to vexe Pegalus, as he cast off Bellerophon from his back, into the Valley of 20 Cilicia, where he died blinde: of which burthen Pegalus being discharged (as the fable goeth) flew back to heaven: and being fed in Impiters owne stable, Aurora bee'd him of Iupiter to ride on before the Sunne. This tale is diverfly expounded, as first by some, That it pleaseth God to relieue men in their innocent and vndeserued aduersitie, and to cast downe those which are too high minded : according to that which is faid of Bellerophon: that when he was exposed to extreame hazard, or rather certaine death, he found both deliuerance and honor: but waxing ouer-prowd and presumptuous in his glorious fortunes, he was againe throwne downe into the extremitie of forrow, and euer-during miserie. Secondly by others, That under the name of Chimera, was meant a cruell Pyrate of the Lycians, whose ship had in her 30 prowe a Lyon, a Goate in the mid-ship, and a Dragon in the stearne, of which three beafts this Monster Chimara was said to be compounded, whom Bellerophon pursued with a kinde of Galley of fuch fwiftnesse that it was called the flying Horse: to whom the inuention of failes (the wings of a ship) are also attributed. Many other expositions are made of this tale by other Authors : but it is not vnlikely, that Chimara was the name of a ship, for so virgil calleth one of the greatest ships of Ion also from whom the Athenians (being ignorant of the antiquitie of their pa-Homer in hymno rent Iauan) deriue their name of Iones, is faid to have beene about Ehuds time: Homer calls them Iaones, which hath a neare resemblance to the word Ianan. The inualion of India by Liber Pater, is by some reported as done in this age: but S. Augustine makes him farre more ancient: placing him between the comming out of Egypt, and the death of Iofua.

as Plentie and Peace are the patents of idle fecuritie; so is fecuritie as fruitfull in be-10 getting and bringing forth both danger and subversion : of which all estates in the world have talted by interchange of times. Therefore when their finnes were againe ripe for punishment, Iabin. King of Hazor, after the death of Ehud, inuaded the Territorie of Ifrael, and having in his service 900, yron Chariots, besides the rest of his forces, he held them in subjection twentie yeares, till it pleased God to raise vp Deborah, the Prophetesse, who incouraged Birac to leuie a force out of Auphtalin, and Zabulon, to incounter the Canaanites. That the men of Nepthalim were more forward than the rest in this action, it may seem to have proceeded partly from the authoritie that Barac had among them, being of the same Tribe; and partly from their feeling of the common grienance, which in them was more fentible, than in o-20 thers, because Hazor and Harofeth the chiefe holds of labin, were in Arothalim. So in the daies of leptha the Gileadites tooke the greatest care, because the Ammonites with whom the Warre was, pressed most vpon them; as being their borderers. Now as it pleased God by the left hand of Ebudto deliner I frael from the Moabite; and by the counsaile and courage of a woman; to free them from the yoke of Canaan, and to kill the valiant Sifera by Jachthe Kenites wife, to was it his will at other times ; to worke the like great thinges by the weakest melines. For the mightie Assyrian Nabuchadonofor, who was a King off Kings, and relitbeffe, he ouerthrew by his owne imaginations, the causers of his brutish melancholy : and changed his matchlesse pride into the base humilitie of a Beast. And to approve that he is the Lord of all 30 power, he sometime punisheth by inuisible strength, as when he slaughtered the Armie of Senacherib by his Angell; or as he did the Agyptians in Ofofes time: fomtime by dead bodies, as when he drowned Pharas by the waites of the Sea : and the Canaanites by haile-stones in the time of Iofua: sometimes by the ministeric of men, as when he ouerthrew the foure Kings of the East, Chedorlaomer, and his companions, by the houshold servants of Abraham. He caused the Mabites and Ammonites to fet vpon their owne confederate the Armie of the Idumites; and having flaine them to kill one an other in the fight of tehofaphat: and of the like to the fe a volume chron. 1.10. of examples may be gathered. And to this effect did Deborah the Prophetesse speake vnto Barae in the le wordes: But this journey that thou takeft, hall not be for thine honour, Judas. 40 for the Lord shall sell Siser a into the handes of a Woman. From the beginning of Iddins oppression to the end of that peace, which Deborath and Barac purchased vinto Israel, there passed 400 yeares. In which time the King- 10 dome of Args, which had continued 5,44, yeares was translated to Assemble. The translation of this Kingdome Piurs our of Paulantae written to this effect. 1ud.c.6. - 7.

Then the Lord by his Angell stirred vp Gideon the sonne of Ioash, afterward called Ierubbaal: whose feare and vnwillingnesse, and how it pleased God to hearten him in his enterprize, it is both largely and precifely fet down in the holy Scriptures: as also how it pleased God by a few select persons, namely 300. out of 32000 men, to make them know that he only was the Lord of Hefts, Each of thele 300. by Gideons appointment carried a trumpet, and light in a pitcher, instruments of more terrour than force, with which he gaue the great Armie of their enemies an alarum: who hearing foloude a noise, and seeing (at the crack of so many pitchers broken) so many lights about them, esteemed the Armie of Israel to be infinite, and strucken with a fodaine feare, they all fled without a stroke stricken : and were slaughtered in 10 great numbers : two of their Princes being made prisoners and slaine. In his returne the Ephramites began to quarrell with Gideon because hee made warre without their affiltance, being then greedie of glorie, the victorie being gotten : who (if Gideon had failed and fallen in the enterprise) would no doubt haue held themselues happie by being neglected. But Gideon appealing them with a mild answere followed after the enemie, in which pursuit being tired with trauaile, and wearie euen with the flaughtering of his enemies, he defired reliefe from the inhabitants of Succoth, to the end that (his men being refreshed) he might ouer-take the other two Kings of the Midianites: which had faued themselues by flight. For they were soure Princes of the Nations which had inuaded and wasted Ifrael: to wit, Oreb and Seeb, which 20 were taken already, and Zebah and Salmunna which fled.

Gideon being denied by them of Succoth fought the like reliefe from the inhabitants of Pennel, who in like fort refused to succour him. To both of these places he threatned therefore the reuenge, which in his returne from the profequation of the other two Princes he performed: to wit, that hee would teare the flesh of those of Succoth with Thornes and Briars, and destroy the Inhabitants and Citie of Pennel: Now why the people of these two Cities should refuse reliefe to their bretheren the I/raelites, especially after so great a victorie: I may presume to make coniecture; it feemes likely, first that those Cities set ouer Iordan, and in the way of all inualions to be made by the Moabites, and Ammonites, and Midianites, into Ifrael, had either 30 made their owne peace with those Nations, and were not spoiled by them: or else they knowing that Zeba and Salmunna were escaped with a great part of their armie, might feare their reuenge in the future. Secondly, it may be laid to the condition and dispositions of these men : as it is not rare to finde of the like humour in all ages. For there are multitudes of men, especially of those which follow the warre, that both ennic and maligne others, if they performe any praise worthy actions, for the honour and safetie of their owne Countrie, though themselves may bee affured to beare a part of the finart of contrarie successe. And such malitious hearts can rather be contented that their Prince and Countrie should suffer hazzard, and want, than that fuch men as they millike should be the Authors or actors of any glorie or good 40

Now Gideon, how or wherefoeuer it were that hee refreshed himselfe and his wearie and hungrie Souldiers, yet he followed the opportunitie, and purfued his A place in Ba- former victorie to the vttermost : and finding Zebah and Salmunna in Karkor (suspeeting no further attempt vpon them) he agains surprised them, & slaughtered those 15000, remaining having put to the fword in the former attempt 120000, and withall he tooke Zebah and Salmunna priloners: whom because themselves had exequuted Gideons bretheren before at Tabor, he caused them both to be flame or (as it is written) at their owne request slew them with his owne hands: his Son whom he first commanded to doe it, refuling it; and in his returne from the consummation 50' of this meruallous victorie, he tooke reuenge of the Elders of Succeth, and of the Citizens of Penuel, forguing no offence committed against him: either by strangers or by his bretheren the Araelies. But such mercy as he shewed to others, his own children found foon after his death, according to that which hath been faid before. The debts of crueltic and mercie are neuer left vnsatisfied: for as he slew the 70. Elders of Succeth with great and vnufuall torments, fo were his owne 70. sonnes al, but one; murthered by his owne bastard Abimilee. The like Analogie is observed by the Rabbines, in the greatest of the plagues which God brought vpon the AEgyptians, who having caused the male children of the Hebrewes to bee slaine, others of them to be cast into the river and drowned: God rewarded them even with the like measure, destroying their owne first borne by his Angell, and drowning Pharaoh and his armic in the redde sea. And hereof a world of examples might bee given, both out of the Scriptures and other Histories.

10. In the end so much did the people reverence Gideon in the present for this victorie, and their owne deliuerance, as they offered him the Soucraigntie ouer them; Ind 8.23, and to establish him in the Gouernment; which hee refused, answering; Intil not reigne ouer you, neither shall my childe reigne ouer you, but the Lord shall coc. But he defired the people that they would bellow on him the golden ea-rings, which every man had gotten. For the Ismaelites) neighbors, and mixt with the Midianits vsed to weare them: the waight of all which was a thousand and seuen hundred. Shekels of gold, which makes of ours. 2380. liif we follow the account of the Shekle vulgar: And because he converted that gold into an Ephod, a garment of gold, blew sike, purples Carlet, and fine linnen belonging to the High Priest onely, and set up the same in Lucy 8.22. 20 his owne Citie of Ophra or Ephra, which drew Ifrae! to Idolatrie, the same was the destruction of Gideon and his house.

There was another kinde of Ephod besides this of the High Priests which the Leuitesvsed, and so did David when he daunced before the Arke: and Samuel while he was yet young, which was made of linnen onely.

Now if any man demaund how it was possible for Gideon with 300. men to destroy 120000. of their enemies and afterward 1500c. which remained, wee may remember that although Gideon with 3 0 0 gave the first alarme, and put the Midianites in rout and disorder: yet all the rest of the armie came into the slaughter, and pursuite, for it is written ; That the men of Ifrael being gathered together out sade just. 30 of Nephtalie, and out of Afher and out of Manaffe, purfited after the Midianits : for this armie Gideon left in the tents behind him, when hee went downe to view the armie of his enemies, who with the noyle of his 300. trumpets came after him to

There lived with Gideon AEgeus the sonne of Pandion, who reigned in Athens: Euristhesis King of Mycena: Atress and Thyestes the sonnes of Pelops, who bare dominion ouer a great part of Peloponnefus, and after the death of Euriftheus; the Kingdome of Mycena fell into the hand of Atreus. This is that Atreus who holding his brother in lealousse as an attempter both of his wife and crowne; flew the children of Thyester, and causing their slesh to be drest did therewith feast their fa-40 ther. But this crueltie was not inteuenged." For both Atrew and his forme Agamemnon were flaine by a base sonne of Thyestes, year the grandchildren, and all the linage of Atreus died by the same sword.

In Gideons time also those things were supposed to have beene done which are written of Dedalas and Icarus. Dedalas they lay, having flaine his Nephew Attalus; fled to Minos King of Crete for fuccour, where for his excellent workerminshippe he was greatly effeemed, having made for wines a Labyrinth like vinto that of AEgypt. Afterward he was faid to have framed an artificiall Cowe for Peliphie the Queene, that The, being in loue with a faire Bull, might by patting her felfe into the Cow satisfie her lust, a thing no leffe vnnatural than incredible; had not that shame-50 leffe Emperour Domitian exhibited the like beaftly spectacle openly before the people of Rome in his Amphitheater 3 of purpole as may feeme to verifie the olde fible. For foir appeares by those verses of Martial, wherein the flattering Poet magnificth the abhominabe frew as a goodly Pageant in those vitious times.

But concerning that which is reported of Pasiphae, Sernius makes a leffe vnhonest construction of it, thinking that Dadalus was of her counsell, and her Pandar for the enticing of a Secretarie of Minos called Taurus, which fignifieth a Bull, who begat her with child, and that she being deliucred of two sonnes, the one resembling Taurus, the other her husband Minos, it was fained that she was deliuered of the Mon- 10 ster Minotaur, halfe a Man and halfe a Bull. But this practife being discouered, and Dedalus appointed, to be flaine, he fled out of Crete to Cocalus King of Sicil: in which passage he made such expedition, as it was fained that he fashioned wings for himselfe and his sonne to transport them. For whereas Minos pursued him with boats which had oares onely, Dadalus framed failes both for his owne boate, and for his fonnes, by which he outwent those that had him in chase. Vpon which new inuention Icarus bearing himselfe ouerbold was ouerborne and drowned.

It is also written of Dadalus that he made Images that could move themselves, and goe, because he carued them with legs, armes and hands, whereas those that preceded him could onely present the bodie and head of those men whom they 20 cared to counterfait, and yet the workmanshippe was esteemed very rare. But Plutarke who had seene some of those that were called the Images of Dadalus found

With Gideon also florished Linus the Theban, the sonn of Apolla, & Terpsichore who instructed Thamaris, Orpheus, and Hercules. Againe, in this age those things spoken of Sphinx and Oedipus are thought to have beene performed. This Sphinx being a great robber by sea and land, was by the Corinthian Armie ledde by Oedipus ouercome. But that which was written of her 30 propounding of riddles to those whom shee mastered, was meant by the rockie and vnaccessible mountaine neere Thebes which she defended, and by Oedipus dissoluing her probleme, his victorie ouer her. She was painted with wings, because exceeding swift, and with the bodie of a Lyon for her crueltie. But that which Palaphatus reports of Sphinx were more probable did not the time disproue it, for he cals her an Amazonite and the wife of Cadmus: who when by her help he had cast Draco out of Thebes (neglecting her) he married the fifter of Drace, which sphine taking in despightfull part, with her owne troope she held the mountaine by Thebes, from whence she continued a sharpe warre vpon the Thebans till by Oedipus ouerthrown. About this time did Mines thrust his brother out of Crete, and held sharpe warre 40 with the Megarians, and Athenians, because his sonne Androgeus was slaine by them. He possest himselfe of Megara by the treason of Seylla, daughter of Wisus the King. He was long Master of the sea, and brought the Athenians to the tribute of delinering him enery yeere seuen of their sonnes: which tribute Theseus released as shall bee shewed when I come to the time of the next Judge Thala. In the end hee was flaine at Camerinus or Camicus in Sicilia by Cocalus the King, while he purfued Dadalus: and was esteemed by some to be the first law-giver to those Hands. To this time are referred many deeds of Hercules, as the killing of Anteus the gy-ant, who was faid to have 60. and odde cubites of length, which though Plutarke doth confirme, reporting that there was such a bodie found by Sertorius the Roman 50 in Lybia, where Hercules flew Anteus: yet for my felfe I thinke it but a lowd lie. That Anteus was of great firength, and a cunning wreftler, Eufebius affirmeth: and because he cast so many men to the ground, hee was sained to bee the sonne of the Earth. Plinie faith that he inhabited neere the gardens Hesperides in Mauritania. S.

Of the expedition of the Argonauts,

Pelias the former of the contract of the cont Bout the eleuenth yeere of Gideon, was that famous expedition of the Argonauts: of which many fabulous discourses have beene written,

Pelias the sonne of Neptune, brother by the mothers side to Eson, who was Iasons father, reigning in Ioleus a towne of Thessalie, was warned by the Oracle of Apollo to take heede of him that ware but one shoe. This Pelias afterward facrificing to Neptune, inuited Iason to him, who comming hastily, lost one shoe in passing ouer a brooke: whereupon Pelias demanded of him what course he would take (supposing he were able) against one of whom an Oracle should aduise him to take heede to which question when Iason had briefly answered, that he would fend him to Colchos, to fetch the golden flecce, Pelias immediatly commaunded him to vndertake that feruice. Therefore Iason prepared for the voyage having a shippe built by Argus, the sonne of Phryxus, by the Counsell of Pallas: wherein hee procured all the brauest men of Greece to faile with him : as Typhis the Master of the shippe, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the sonnes of Tyndarus, Telamon and Pelius, sonnes of Aacus, and fathers of Aiax and Achilles, Hercules, Thesius, Zetes and Calais the two winged fonnes of Boreas, Amphiaraus the great South faver. Meleager of Calidon that flew the great wilde boare : Ascalaphus and Ialmenus or Almenus the sonnes of Mars, who were afterwards at the last warre of Troy, Laertes the father of Vlyffes, Atalanta a warlike virgine, Idias and Lynceus the fonnes of Abhareus, who afterwards in fight with Castor and Pollux slew Castor, and wounded Pollux, but were flaine themselves : Lynceds by Pollux, Idas by Jupiter with 30 lightning.

These and many other went with Isson in the ship Argo: in whose prowe was a table of the beech of Dodona, which could speake. They arrived first at Lemnos; the women of which Iland, having flaine all the males, purposing to lead an Amazonian life, were neuerthelesse contented to take their pleasure of the Argonauts. Hence they came to the Country about Cyzicus: where dwelt a people called Doliones: ouer whom then reigned one Cyzicus: who entertained them friendly: but it so fell out, that loosing thence by night they were driven by contrary winds back into his port, neither knowing that it was the same Hauen, nor being knowne by the Doliones, to be the same men: but rather taken for some of their bordering ene-40 mies: by which meanes they fell to blowes, infomuch that the Argonautes flew the most part of the Doliones together with their King Cyzieus: which when by daylight they perceived, with many teares they folemnized his funerall. Then departed they againe and arrived shortly in Mysia, where they left Hercules and Polyphemus the sonne of Elates, who went to seeke Hylas the darling of Hercules, that was rauifhed by the Nymphes.

Poliphemus built a towne in Mysia, called Cios, wherein he reigned. Hercules returned to Argos. From Mysia the Argonautes sailed into Bythima, which then was peopled by the Bebryces, the auncient inhabitants of the Country, ouer whom Amicus the sonne of Neptune was then King. He beeing a strong man, compelled all stran-50 gers to fight with him, at whorlebattes, in which kinde of fight hee had flaine many, and was now himselfe slaine by Pollux. The Bebryces in reuenge of his death flew all vpon Pollux, but his companions rescued him, with great slaughter of the people. They failed from hence to Salmydessus, a towne in Thrace (perhaps of Thracia Adriatica) wherein Phineus a Soothfayer dwelt, who was blinde and vexed with the Harpyes. The Harpyes were faid to be a kinde of birds, which had the faces of women and foule long clawes, very filthy creatures, which when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and denouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest, that they could not be endured. When therefore the Argonautes craued his aduife, and direction for their voyage : you shall doe well (quoth he) first of all to deliuer me from the Harpyes, and then afterwards to aske my Counfaile. Whereupon they caused the table to be coursed, and meat set on; which was no fooner fet downe, then that presently in came the Harpyes, and played their accustomed prancks: when Zetes and Calais the winged young men faw this, they drew their swords, and pursued them through the ayre; some say to that both the Harpyes and the young men died of wearinesse in the flight, and purfuit. But Apollonius faith that the Harpyes did couenant with the youthes, to doe no more harme to Phineus, and were thereupon difmiffed : for this good turne Phineus gaue them informations of the way, and aductifed them withal of the daungerous rockes, called Symplegades, which by force of windes running together, did shut vp the passage: wherefore he willed them to put a pigeon before them into the pass fage: and if that passed safe, then to aduenture after her: if not, then by no meanes to hazard themselues in vaine. They did so, and perceiving that the pigeon had only lost a piece of her taile, they observed the next opening of the rockes and then rowing with all their might, passed through safe, onely the end of the poope was 20 bruised.

From thence forward, (as the tale goeth) the Symplegades have flood fill: for the Gods, fay they, had decreed that after the paffage of a fhippe, they flould be fixed. Thence the Arganautes came to the Mariandyni, a people inhabiting about the mouth of the river Parthenius, where Lyeus the King entertained them courteoully. Here Idmon a Soothfayer of their company was flaine by a wild boare; also here Typhis cice: and Anexus vndertooke to fleare the shippe. So they passed by the river Thermodon, and mount Causasius, and came to the river Passis, which runnes through the land of Colebos; when they were entred the hauen, Isson went to Lees the King of Colebos, and told him the Commanusement of Pessas, and cause of 30 his comming, defiring him to deliver the golden Fleece, which Lees to the Fable goeth, promised to doe, if he alone would yoake together two brazen hooft bulles, and plowing the ground with them, sowe dragons teeth, which Minerua had given to him, being part of those which Cachus did Gow at Thebes. These bulles were great and fierce, and breathed out fier: Vulcan had given them to AELES.

Whilest Infon was in agreat perplexitie about this taske, Medea the daughter of AEtes, fell into a most vehement loue of him, so farre foorth, that being excellent in Magique, she came privily to him, promising her helpe, if he would assure her of his marriage. To this Infon agreed, and confirmed his promise by oath. Then gaue she to him a medicine wherewith she bad him to annoint both his bodie and his ar- 40 mour, which would preserve him from their violence: further she told him, that armed men would arise out from the ground, from the teeth which hee should fowe, and fet vpon him. To remedie which inconvenience, shee bad him throw ftones among ft them as soone as they came vp thicke, whereupon they would fall together to blowes, in such wise that he might easily slay them. Infon followed her counsaile; whereto when the euent had answered, hee againe demannded the Fleece. But AEetes was so farre from approuing such his desire, that hee deuised how to destroy the Argonautes, and burne their shippe, which Medas perceiuing, went to Ison, and brought him by night to the Fleece, which hung vpvon an oake in the groue of Mars, where they fay it was kept by a Dragon, that neuer flept. This Dragon was by the Magique of Medea cast into a sleepe: so taking away the golden Fleece, the went with Islan into the thippe Argo; having with her, her brother Absyrtus.

AEtes vnderstanding the practises of Medsa, provided to pursue the ship, whom when

when Medea perceived to be at hand, she slew her brother, & cutting him in pieces she scattered his limbes in diverse places, of which AEetes sinding some, was faine to seeke out the rest, and suffer his daughter to passe the parts of his sonne hee buried in place which thereupon he called Tomi; the Greeke word signifiest Division. Afterwards he sent many of his subjectes to seeke the shippe Argo, threatning that if they brought not backe Medea they should suffer in her stead. In the meane while the Argonaust were driven about the Seas, and were come to the River Eridanus, which is Po in Italie.

Impiter offended with the flaughter of Abstrus, vexed them with a great tem10 peft, and carried them they knew not whither; when they came to the Isands AbSpritdes, there the shippe Argo (that there might want no incredible thing in this Fable) spake to them, and said that the anger of Impiter should not cease, till they came to Ausonia, and were clensed by Circe, from the murther of Assistant palling through the sea of Sardinia and along the coast of Isanda said salia, and palling through the sea of Sardinia and along the coast of Isanda said salia, and palling through the sea of Sardinia and along the coast of Isanda said the the sea, wherein Circe dwelt, who cleansed them. Thence they sayled by the coast of the Syrens, who sang to allure them into danger: but Orpheus on the other side sang so welthat he stayed them. Only Butes swamme out vnto them, whom Yenus rauished, and caried to Lyshbaum in Sicilie to dwell.

Hauing past the Syrens, they came betweene Seylla and Charybdia, and the strag-

ling rockes which seemed to cast out great store of slames and smoke. But Thetis and the Nereides, conneyed them safe through at the appointment of Juno. So they coasted Sicilie where the beenes of the Sunne were, and touched at Coreyra the Iland of the Phaces, where King Aleinous reigned. Meane while the men of Colchos that had beene sent by AEetes in quest of the shippe Argo, hearing no newes of it, and fearing his anger if they fulfilled not his will, betooke themselues to new habitations: some of them dwelt in the mountaines of Corcyra, others in the Ilands Abfyrtides, and some comming to the Pheaces, there found the shippe Argo, and demanded Medea of A'cinous: whereto Alcinous made answere, that if shee were not Iasons 20 wife they should have her, but if shee were alreadic married he would not take her from her husband. Arete the wife of Alcinous hearing this, married them : wherefore they of Colchos not daring to returne home, stayed with the Pheaces; so the Argonautes departed thence, and after a while came to Crete. In this Iland Minos reigned, who had a man of braffe given to him (as some of the Fablers say) by Vulcan. This man had one veine in his bodie reaching from the necke to the heele, the end whereof was closed vp with a brazen naile, his name was Talus: his custome wasto runne thrice a day about the Iland for the defence of it. When hee faw the shippe Argo passe by, he threw stones at it, but Medaa with her Magique destroyed him. Some fay that the flew him by potions, which made him madde; others that 40 promising to make him immortall, she drew out the naile that stopt his veine, by which meanes all his blood ranne out, and he died; others there are that fay he was flaine by Pean, who wounded him with an arrow in the heele. From hence the Argonautes failed to AEgina where they were faine to fight for fresh water. And lastly from AEgina they failed by Eubaa and Locris home to Iolcos, where they arriued, having spent foure whole moneths in the expedition.

Some there are that by this iourney of Isson, understand the mysterie of the Philosophers Stone, called the golden Fleece, to which also other superfine Chymists, draw the twelve labours of Hercules. Suidas thinkes that by the golden Fleece, was ment a booke of Parcement, which is of sheepeskinne, and therefore called golden, 50 because it was taught therein how other mettals might be transmuted. Others would signific by Isson wisdome, and moderation, which ouercommeth all perils: but that which is most probable is the opinion of Dercilus, that the Storie of such a passage was true, and that Isson with the rest went indeed to robbe Colchos, to which they might arriue by boate. For not farre from Caucasus there are certaine steepe falling torrents which walh downe many graines of gold, as in many other parts of the world, and the people there inhabiting vse to set many fleeces of wooll in those descents of waters, in which the graines of gold remaine, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witneffeth to be true The many rockes, straites, fands, and Currents, in the passage betweene Greece and the bottome of Pontus, are Poetically converted into those herie bulles, the armed men rising out of the ground, the Dragon cast asleepe, and the like. The man of brasse, the Syrens, Scylla and Charybdis, were other hazards and aduentures which they fell into in the Mediterran sea, difguised, as the rest, by Orpheus, under poeticall morrals : all which Homer afterward vsed (the man of brasse excepted) in the description of Vlysses his trauailes on the 10 fame Inland-feas.

Of Abimelech, Tholah, and Iair, and of the Lapytha, and of Theseus, Hyppolytus &c.

Fter the death of Gedeon, Abimelech his base sonne begotten on a Concubine of the Sechemites, remembring what offers had bene made to his father by the people, who defired to make him and his their 20 perpetuall Princes; and as it feemeth, supposing (notwithstanding his fathers religious modestie) that some of his brethren might take on them the Soueraigntie, practifed with the inhabitants of Sechem (of which his mother was natiue) to make election of himselfe, who being easily moved with the glorie, to haue a King of their owne, redily condescended and the better to inable Abimelech, they borrowed 70 pieces of filuer of their Idoll Baalberith, with which treasure he hyred a company of loose and desperate vagabonds, to assist his first detestable enterprise, to wit, the flaughter of his 70. brethren the sonnes of Gideon, begotten on his wives, of which he had many, of all which none escaped but lotham the youngest, who hid himselse from his present furie : all which hee executed on 30 one stone, a crueltie exceeding all that bath beene written of in any age. Such is humane ambition, a monster that neither feareth God (though all-powerfull, and whose reuenges are without date and for euerlasting) neither bath it respect to nature, which laboureth the preservation of every being : but it rageth also against her, though garnished with beautie which neuer dieth, and with soue that hath no end. All other passions and affections by which the squiles of men are tormented, are by their contraries oftentimes relifted or qualified. But ambition, which begetteth euery vice, and is it selfe the childe and darling of Satan, looketh only towards the ends by it selfe set downe, forgetting nothing (how fearefull and inhumane soeuer) which may ferue it: remembring nothing, what soeuer iustice, pietie, right or 40 religion can offer and alleadge on the contrary. It ascribeth the lamentable effectes of like attempts, to the errour or weakenesse of the vndertakers, and rather praiseth the aduenture than feareth the like successe. It was the first sinne that the world had, and beganne in Angels: for which thy were cast into hell, without hope of redemption. It was more auncient than man, and therefore no part of his naturall corruption. The punishment also preceeded his creation, yet hath the Diuell which felt the smart thereof, taught him to forget the one as out of date, and to practife the other, as befitting euery age, and mans condition.

In the youngest of Gideons sonnes having escaped the present perill, sought by his best persuasions to alienate the Sechemites, from the affilting of this mercilesse 10 tyrant, letting them know, that those which were vertuous, and whom reason and religion had taught the safe and happie estate of moderate subjection, had refufed to receive as vnlawfull, what others had not power to gine, without direction from the King of Kings: who from the beginning (as to his owne peculiar people) had appointed them by whome and how to be gouerned. This hee taught them by the Oliue, which contented it felfe with it's fatnesse, the Figge tree with sweet nesse, and the Vine with the good juyce it had; the Bramble onely, who was most base, cut downcall the rest, and accepted the Soucraigntic. He also foretold them by a Propheticall spirit, what should befall them in the end, and how a fire should come out of the Bramble, and confume the Cedars of Libanon.

Now (as it is an easie matter to call those men backe whom rage without right leddeon) Gaal the sonne of Ebed withdrew the Citizens of Sechem, from the service of Abimelech : who therefore after some affaults entred the place, and maistred it; to and in conclusion fired the towne, wherein their Idoll Baalberith was worthipped; and put all the people of all forts to the flaughter. Lastly, in the affault of the Castle or Tower of Teber, himselfe was wounded in the head with a stone throwne ouer the wall by a woman, and finding himselfe mortally brused, he commaunded his owne page to pierce his bodie; thereby to avoid the diffionour of being flaine by

While Abmelech vsurped the Gouernment, the Lapitha and Centaures made warre against the Thebanes. These Nations were descended of Apollo and were the first in those parts that denised to mannage horses, to bridle and to sit them: in somuch as when they first came downe from the mountaines of Pindus; into the much as when they mit came downe from the modern thought them creatures palephanel, to compounded of men and horses; so did the Mexicans when Ferdinando Cortes the de weredo, Spaniard first inuaded that Empire.

After the death of Abimelech, Thola of Isfachar governed Israel 23, yeeres, and after him Jair the Gileadite 22. yeeres, who feemeth to bee descended of Jair the sonne of Manasse, who in Moses time conquered a great part of Gilead, and calfonne of Manalle, who in Mojestime conquered a great part of Gilead, and called the same after his owne name, Haboth Jair. For to this Jair there remained thir, Name 14.4. tie of those Cities, which his auncester had recourred from the Amerites. Of these ludges, because there is nothing else written, it is an argument that during all ludges. /: their times, Ifrael lived without disturbance and in peace.

30 When Jair indged Ifrael, Priamus beganne to reigne in Troy, who at fuch time as Hereules facked Ilium, was carried away captine with his lifter Hesione into Greece, and being afterward redeemed for ransome, hee rebuilt and greatly strengthened, and adorned Troy; and so farre inlarged his Dominions, as hee became the supreme Lord in effect of all Asia the leffe. He married Hecuba the daughter of Coffeus King in Tuft, of Thrace, and had in all (faith Cieero) fiftie fonnes, whereof feauenteene by Heta. ba, of whom Paris was one; who attempting to recouer his aunt Hestoric tooke Helena the wife of Menelaus the cause of the warre which followed. Theseus the tenth King of Athens began likewise to reight in the beginning of List: fome writers call him the sonne of Neptune and Ashra: but Platark in the 40 Storie of his life findes him begotten by Egens, of whom the Gretim feet betweene it and Asia the leffe tooke name. For when Minos had maistered the A= thenians, so furre as hee forst them to pay him seauen of their sonnes every yeere for tribute, whom hee inclosed within a Labyrinth, to bee denoured by the monfter Minotaur : because belike the sonnes of Taurus, which hee begat on Passiphae the Queene, had the charge of them: Among these seauen Thesens thrust himselfe, not doubting by his valour to deliuer the rest, and to free his Countrie of that slanerie occasioned for the death of Androgeus, Minos his sonne.

And having possest himselfe of Ariadnes affection, who was Ainos daughter, hee receiued from her a bottome of thred, by which hee conducted himfelfe 50 through all the crooked and inextricable turnings of the Labyrinth, made in all like that of the Citie of Crocodiles in Egypt; by meane whereof having flaine Minotaur, hee found a readie way to returne. But whereas his father seguis had giuen order, that if hee came backe with victorie and in fafetie; hee flould vie a white faile in figue thereof, and not that mournfull blacke faile, under which they left the port of Athens. This instruction being either forgotten or neglected, Ageus descrying the shippe of Thejeus with a blacke saile cast himselfe o. uer the rockes into the sea, afterward called of his name Ageum.

One of the first famous actes of Thefeus, was the killing of Seyron, who kept a pasfage betweene Megara and the Peloponnesian Isthmos, and threw all whom hee maftered into the sea, from the high rockes. Afterward hee did the like to Cerevon. by wrestling, who ysed by that Arte to kill others. Hee also ridde the Country of Procrustes, who yied to bend downe the strong limbes of two trees, and fastned by cordes such as hee tooke, part of them to one and part to the other bough, and by their springing backe tare them asunder. So did hee roote out Periphetes and other 19 mischieuous theeues and murtherers. Hee ouerthrew the armie of the Amazons. who after many victories and valtations, entred the Territorie of Athens. The. feus hauing taken their Queene Hyppolita prisoner, begat on her Hippolytus; with whom afterward his mother in law Phadra, falling in loue, and hee refuling to abuse his fathers bed, Phadra perswaded Theseus that his sonne offered to force here after which it is fained that Thefeus befought Neptune to revenge this wrong of his sonnes, by some violent death. Neptune taking a time of advantage sent out his Sea-Calues, as Hippolytus passed by the sea shore, and so affrighted his horses, as casting the Coach ouer, hee was (by being intangled therein) torne in pieces. Which milerable and vndeserued destinie, when Phadra had heard of, shee strangled 20 herselfe. After which it is fained, that Diana entreated Asculapius to set Hippolytus his pieces togither, and to restore him to life : which done, because hee was chaste, shee ledde him with her into Italie, to accompanie her in her hunting, and field sports.

It is probable that Hyppolytus, when his father fought his life, thinking to escape by Sea, was affronted thereat, and received many woundes in forcing his passage and escape; which woundes Asculapius, to wit, some skilfull Phisician, or Chirurgion healed againe, after which hee past into Italy, where hee lived with Diana, that is the life of a hunter, in which hee most delighted. But of these auncient prophane Stories, Plutarch saith well, that as Cosmographers in 30 their descriptions of the world, where they finde many vast places whereof they know nothing, fill the same with strange beastes, birdes, and fishes, and with Ma-* thematicall lines, so doe the Gracian Historians and Poets, imbroder and intermixe the tales of auncient times, with a world of fictions and fabulous difcourfes. True it is, that Theseus did many great things in imitation of Hercules, whom hee made his patterne, and was the first that gathered the Athenians, from being difperst in thinne and ragged villages: in recompence whereof, and for denifing them lawes to liue vnder, and in order, hee was by the beggerly, mutable, and vngratefull multitude, in the end banished. Some say per Ostracismum, by the Lawe of Lottes, or names written on shelles, which was a device of his 40

Hee stole Helen (as they say) when she was 50. yeeres olde, from Aphidna, which Citie Castor and Pollux ouerturned, when they followed after Theseus to recouer their lifter. Erasistratus and Pausanias write that Theseus begat her with child at Argos, where shee erected a Temple to Lucina: but her age makes that tale vnlikely to bee true, and so doth Ouid, Nontamenex facto fructum tulit ille petitum &c. The rape Eufebius findes in the first of Jair, who governed Ifrael 22. yeeres, to whome fucceeded Iephta or Iepte fixe yeeres, to whom Ibzan who ruled seauen yeeres, and then Habdon eight yeere : in whose time was the fall of Troy. So as, if Thesens had a childe by her in the first of Lair, (at which time wee must count her no lesse 50 than fifteene yeere olde, for the women did not commonly beginne so young as they doe now) shee was then at least two and fiftie yeere olde at the destruction of Troy: and when shee was stollen by Paris eight and thirtie: but herein the Chronologers doe not agree. Yet Eusebius and Bunting with Halicarnasseus doe in effect consent, that the Citie was entred, and burnt in the first yeere of Demophoon King of Athens, the successour of Afrestheus, the successour of Theseus, feauenteene dayes before the Summer Tropique, and that about the eleventh of September following, the Troians croft the Helleffont into Thrace, & wintred there, and in the next spring that they nauigated into Sialia, where wintring the second yere, the Punt Chron. Fig. next summer they arrived at Laurentum, and builded Lauinium. But S. zingustine hath it otherwise, that when Polyphides governed Sieyon, Mnellheus Athens, Tautanes Affria, Habdon Ifraell, then Aneas arrived in Italie, transporting with him in twentie shippes the remainder of the Troians: but the difference is not great: and hereof 1816.19. 10 more at large in the storie of Troy at hand.

In Sicyonia Phastus the two and twentieth King, reigned eight yeeres, beginning by the common account in the time of Thola. His fuccessours, Adrasus who reigned foure yeeres, and Polyphides who reigned thirteene, are accounted to the time of Lair, sois also Mnestheus King of Athens, and Atreus, who held a great part of Peloponnesus. In Assyria, during the gouernment of these two peaceable Judges, Mitreus and after him Tautanes reigned. In Ægypt Amenophis, the sonne of Ramses, and afterwards Annemenes.

). VII.

Of the warre of Thebes which was in this age.

N this age was the warte of Thebes, the most auncient that euer Greeke Poet or Historian wrote of. Wherefore the Romane Poet Lucretius, affirming (as the Epicures in this point held truely against the Peripateticks) that the world had a beginning, vrgeth them with this –Si nulla fuit genitalis origo Rerumque & mundi, semperque aterna fuere, Cur supra bellum Thebanum, & funera Troia, Non alias aly quoque res cecinere pocta?

If all this world had no originall, But things have over beene as now they are: Before the liege of Thebes or Troyes last fall, Why did no Poet fing some elder warre?

It is true that in these times Greece was very saluage, the inhabitants being often 40 chaced from place to place, by the captaines of greater Tribes: and no man thinking the ground whercon hee dwelt his owne longer than hee could hold it by strong hand. Wherefore merchandize and other intercourse they vsed little, neither did they plant many trees, or fow more corne than was necessarie for their suftenance. Money they had little or none, for it is thought that the name of money was n ot heard in Greece, when Homer did write, who measures the valew of gold and brasse by the worth in cattel; saying that the golden armour of Glaucus, was worth 100. becues, and the copper armour of Diomedes worth nine.

Robberies by land and sea were common and without shame, and to steale horses or kine was the viuall exercise of their great men. Their townes were not 50 many, whereof those that were walled were very few, and not great. For Mycense the principal Citie in Peloponnefus was a very little thing, and it may wel be thought that the rest were proportionable : briefly, Greece was then in her infancie, and though in some small townes of that halfe Ile of Peloponnesus, the inhabitants might have enjoyed quietnesse within their narrow bounds; as likewise did the Athenians because their Country was so barren, that none did care to take it from them: yet that the land in general was very rude it will easily appeare to such as consider, what Thuc, Males the greates for their Historians hath written to this effect, in the præsace to his Historie. Wherefore, as in the selatter times, side Chnomiders vse when they want good matter, to fill whole bookes with reports of great frostes, or dry summers, and other such things which no man cares to reade, so did they who spake of Greece in her beginnings, remember onely the great shoods which were in the times of Gyzes, and Deucalian: or else rehearse fables of men changed into birds, of strange monsters, of adulteric committed by their Gods, and the mightie men which they begar, without writing ought that sauou- to red of humanitie before the time of the warre of Thebes: the briefe whereof is this.

OEdipus the sonne of Laius King of Thebes, having beene cast foorth when hee was an infant, because an Oracle forctolde what cuill should come to passe by him. did afterwards in a narrow paffage contending for the way, flay his owne father, not knowing either then or long after, who hee was. Afterward hee became King of Thebes, by marriage of the Queene locasta, called by Homer Epicaste: on whom, not knowing her to bee his mother, hee begat two fonnes, Eteocles and Polynices. But when in processe of time, finding out by good circumstances, who were his parents, hee viderstood the grieuous murther and incest hee had committed, he 20 tore out his owne eyes for gricfe, and left the Citie. His wife and mother did hang her selfe. Some say, that OEdipus having his eyes pulled out, was expelled Thebes, bitterly curling his sonnes, because they suffered their father to bee cast out of the Towne, and ayded him not. Howfoeuer it were, his two Sonnes made this agreement, that the one of them should reigne one yeere, and the other another yeere; and so by course rule interchangeably: but this appointment was ill observed. For when Polynices had after a yeeres Gouernment resigned the Kingdome to his brother: or (according to others) when Eteocles had reigned the first yeere, hee refused to give over the rule to Polynices. Hercupon Polynices fled vnto Argos, where Adrastus the sonne of Talaus then reigned, vnto whose pal-30 lace comming by night, hee was driven to feeke lodging in an out-house, on the backfide.

There hee met with Tydeus the sonne of OEneus, who was fledde from Calydon: with whom striuing about their lodging, hee fell to blowes. Adrastus hearing the noyse, came foorth and tooke vp the quarrell. At which time perceiuing in the shield of Tydeus a Bore, in that of Polynices a Lyon, hee remembred an olde Oracle, by which hee was aduifed to give his two daughters in marriage, to a Lyon and a Bore : and accordingly hee did bestowe his daughter Argia vpon Tydeus, and Deipyle vpon Polynices, promiling to restore them both to their Countries. To this purpose leuying an armie, and assembling as many valiant Captaines as he could draw 40 to follow him, hee was desirous among others to carrie Amphiaraus the sonne of Oicleus a great Soothfayer, and a valiant man, along with him. But Apphiaraus, who is faid to have foreseene all things, knowing well that none of the Captaines should escape, saue onely Adrastus, did both vtterly resuse to bee one in that expedition, and perswaded others to stay at home. Polynices therefore dealt with Eriphyle the wife of Amphiaraus, offering vnto her avery faire bracelet, vpon condition that shee should cause her husband to affist him. The Soothsayer knowing what should worke his destinie, forbad his wife to take any gift of Polynices. But the bracelet was in her eye so precious a iewell, that shee could not refuse it. Therfore whereas a great controuerfie, betweene Amphyaraus and Adrastus, was by way 50 of compromise put vnto the decision of Eryphile, either of them being bound by folemne oath to stand to her appointment : shee ordered the matter so, as a woman should, that loued a bracelet better than her husband. Hee now finding that it was more case to foresee than avoide destinie, sought such comfort as reuenge might affoord, giuing in charge to his sonnes, that when they came to full age, they should kill their mother and make strong warre vpon the Thebanes.

Now had Adrastus affembled all his forces, of which, the seauen chiefe leaders were, himselfe, Amphiaraus, Capaneus, and Hippomedon (in steade of whom some name Mecisteus) all Argines, with Polynices the Theban, Tydeus the AEcolian, and Parthenopaus the Arcadian sonne of Meleager and Atalanta. When the armie came to the Nemean wood, they met a woman whom they defired to helpe them to some water, she having a child in her armes, laid it downe, and led the Argines to a 10 fpring: but ere shee returned, a Serpent had slaine the childe. This woman was Hypsipyle the daughter of Thoss the Lemnian, whom shee would have saved when the women of the Isle slew al the males by conspiracie, intending to lead an Amazonian life. For fuch her pietie, the Lemnian wives did fell her to Pyrates, and the Pyrates to Lycurgus Lord of the Country about Nemea, whose young sonne Opheltes or Archemorus, she did nurse, and lost as is shewed before. When you the childs death shee hid herselfe for seare of her maister, Amphiaraus told her sonnes where they should finde her and the Argines did both kill the Scrpent which had slaine the childe, and in memorie of the chaunce, did institute solemne sunerall games called Nemean, wherein Adrastus wanne the prize with his swift horse Arion, Tydeus 20 with whorlebats, Amphiaraus at running and quoiting, Polynices at wrestling, Parthenopaus at shooting, and one Laodocus in dacting. This was the first institution of the Neman games, which continued after famous in Greece for very many ages. There are, who thinke that they were ordained in honour of one Opheltus, a Lacedamonian. Some fay by Hercules, when hee had flaine the Nemaan Lyon: but the common opinion agrees with that which is here fet downe.

From Nemaa the Argines marching onwards, arrived at Citheron, whence Tydens was by them fent Embassadour to Thebes, to require of Escosles the performance of Couenants between him and Polynices. This message was nothing agreeable to Escosles, who was throughly resoluted to holde what hee had, 'as long as hee could:

30 which Tydeus perceiuing and intending partly to get honour, partly to try what mettle was in the Thebaus, hee made many challenged, and obtained victorie in all of them, not without much enuie and malice of the people, who laide fittie men in ambulh to intercept him at his returnet to the armie, of which fiftie hee flewe all but one, whome hee fent backe to the Citie as a reporter and wittefle of his valour. When the Argiues understood how resolved Eteodes was, they presented themselves before the Citie, and incamped round about it. Thebasis said to have had at that time seaven gates, which beliek Roode not farre assunder, seing that the Argiues (who asterward when they were very farre stronger, could scarce muster vp more thousandes then Thebas had gates) did compasse the towne. Adrassus

40 quartered before the gate Homoloides, Capaneus before the Ogggian, Tydeus before Crenis, Amphiarsus at Pročisis, Hippomedon at Anchais, Parthenopeus at Electra, and Polynices at Hypfifa. In the meane feason, Eteoeles having armed his men; and appointed Commaunders vnto them, tooke adulke of Tirefus the Sooth layer; who promifed victorie to the Thebans, if Menacius the sonne of Creon a principall man of the Citie, would vowe himselfe to be estaine in honour of Mass the God of warre. So full of malice and pride is the Diuell, and so envious at his Creators glogie, that hee not onely challengeth honours due to God alone, as oblations and facrifice with all Diuine worthippe, but commaundeth vs to offer our selves, and our children vnto him, when hee hath sufficiently clowded mens wnderstanding, 30 and bewitched their wils with ignorance and blinde devotion. And such abhominable facrifice of men, maides, and children hath hee exacted of the Sprians; Carthaginians, Gelles, Germanes, Cyprians, Sprians, and of many other, if not of all Nations, when through ignorance or feare they were most filled with superfittion. But as they grewe more wise, so did he waxe lesse impudent in cunning, though not leffe malitious in defiring the continuance of fuch barbarous inhumanitie. For King Diphilus in Cypres without aduise of any Oracle, made the Idoll of that Country rest contented with an Oxe in stead of a man. Tiberius forbad humane sacrifices in Affrick: and crucified the Priestes in the groues where they had practifed them. Hercules taught the Italians to drowne men of have in stead of the liuing . yet among the saluages in the West Indies these cruell offerings have been practised of late ages: which as it is a fufficient argument that Satans malice is onely covered and hidden by this subtiltie among civil people: so may it serve as a probable Coniecture of the barbarismes then reigning in Greece. For Menecius as soone as bee vnderstood that his death might purchase victorie to his people, bestowed himselfe (as 10 hee thought) vpon Mars, killing himselse before the gates of the Citie. Then was a battell fought, wherein the Argines prenailed so farre at the first, that Capanews aduauncing ladders to the walles, got vp vpon the rampart: whence, when hee fell or was cast downe, or (as writers haue it ) was stricken downe by Impiter with a thunderbolt, the Argines fled. Many on each part were flaine in this battell, which caused both sides to defire that Eteocles and Polynices might tric out the quarrell in fingle fight : whereto the two brethren according, flewe each other.

Another battell was fought after their death, wherein the sonnes of Assaus behaued themselues very valiantly: Ilmarus one of the sonnes slewe Hippomedon 20 which was one of the feuen Princes: Parthenopaus being another of the feauen (who was said to have beene so faire that none would hurt him when his face was bare) was flaine by Amphidicus, or as some say, by Periclymenus the sonne of Neptune: and the valiant Tydeus by Menalippus : yet ere Tydeus died, the head of Menalippus was brought vnto him by Amphiaraus, which hee cruelly tore open and swallowed up the braines. Vpon which fact, it is faid, that Pallas who had brought from Inpiter fuch remedie for his wound, as should have made him immortalil, refused to beflow it vpon him: whereby perhaps was meant that his honour which might have continued immortall did perish through the beaftly rage, that hee shewed at his

The hoaft of the Argines being wholly discomfitted, Adrastus and Amphiaraus fledde; of whom Amphiaraus is faid to have been swallowed quicke into the earth, neere to the river Ismenus, togither with his Chariot, and so lost out of mens fight, being peraduenture ouerwhelmed with dead carcases or drowned in the river; and his bodie neuer found nor greatly fought for. Adrastus escaped on his good horse Arion, and came to Athens; where fitting at an Altar called the Altar of Mercie, hee made supplication for their aide to recouer their bodies . For Creen having obtained the Gouernment of Thebes, after the death of Eteocles, would not fuffer the bodies of the Argines to bee buried : but caused Antigone, the only daughter then liuing of OEdipus, to bee buried quicke, because shee had sought out and 40 buried the bodie of her brother Polynices, contrary to Creons Edict. The Athenians condescending to the request of Adrastus, did send foorth an armie under the Conduct of Thefeus, which tooke Thebes, and restored the bodies of the Argines to Sepulture: at which time Euadnethe wife of Capaneus, threw herselfe into the funerall fier, and was burnt willingly with her husband. But it little contented the sonnes of those Captaines which were slaine at Thebes, that any leffer euenge should bee taken of their fathers death, than the ruine of the Citie: wherefore tenne yeeres after having levied forces AEgialeus the sonne of Adrastus, Diomedes of Tydeus, Promachus of Parthenopaus, Sthenelus of Capaneus, Ther Sander of Polynices, and Euripylus of Mecisteus, marched thither under the conduct of Alemaon the sonne of Amphiaraus: 50 with whom also went his brother Amphiloctus. Apollo promised victorie if Alemaon were their Captaine, whom afterward by another Oracle hee commaunded to kill his owne mother.

When they came to the citie, they were incountred by Landamas the son of Eteocles then King of the Thebanes, (for Creon was only Tutor to Laodamas) who though he did valiantly in the battaile, and flew Agialeus, yet was he put to the worst, and driuen to flie, or (according to Apollodorus Illaine by Alemaon, After this disafter the citizens began to desire composition; but in the meane time they conuaied themselves with their wines and children away from thence by night, and so began to wander vp and downe, till at length they built the Towne called Estica. The Argines when they perceived that their enemies had quitted the Towne, entring into it, sacked it, threw downe the walls, and laid it wast; howbeit it is reported by some that the Towne was faued by Ther fander, the sonne of Polynices, who causing the Citizens to 10 returne, did there raigne ouer them. That hee faued the Citie from vtter destruction, it is very likely, for he raigned there, and led the Thebanes to the Warre of Troy, which very shortly after ensued.

Of IEPHTA, and how the three hundred yeares which he speaketh of, IVD. 11. V.28. are to be reconciled with the places ACT. 13.20. I.R EG. 6.1. together with some other thinges touching Chronologie about theje times.

Fter the death of Iair (neare about whose times these thinges happened in Greece, and during whose gouernment, and that of Thosa, Ifrael lived in peace and in order) they revolted agains from the law, and feruice of God, and became more wicked and Idolatrous than euer. For whereas in the former times they worshipped Baal and Afteroth, they now became followers of all the Heathen Nations adioyning, and imbraced the fdolls of the Aramites, of the Zidonians, Moabites, and Ammonites : with those of the Indite. Philistims. And as before it pleased God to correct them by the Aramites, by the Amalekites, and Midianites: To now hee scourged them by the Ammonites, and after- Thepenequa-20 ward by the Philistims.

Now among the Ifraelites, those of Gilead being most oppress, because they bor 18, years and dered upon the Ammonites, they were inforst to seeke lephia, whom they had for sended in the merly despised and cast from them, because he was base borne; but he (notwith-

And when he had disputed with Ammon for the Land, disproued Ammons right, and fortified the title of Ifrael by many arguments, the same prevailing nothing, he beganne the warre; and being ftrengthened by God, ouer-threw them; and did not only beate 40 them out of the plaines, but forft them over the mountaines of Arabia, even to Min. wait, 18. nuth, and Abel of the vineyards, Cities express heretofore in the description of the holy Land. After which victorie it is faid, that he performed the vaine vow, which hee made, to facrificathe first living creature hee incountred, comming out of his house to meet him; which happened to be his owne daughter, and only child, who with all patience submitted her selfe, and only desired two Moneths time to bewaile her Virginitie on the mountaines of Gilead; because in her the issues of her Father ended : but the other opinion that shee was not offered, is more probable, which But in Borrhaus and others proue fufficiently.

After these thinges the children of Israel, of the Tribe of Ephraim, either envious 30 of lephta's victoric, or otherwise making way to their future calamitie, and to the most grienous slauerie that ever Ifrael suffered, quarrelled with Iephra, that they were not called to the Warre, as before time they had contested with Gideon. had an easie conquest of them all not long after: Iephta after he had judged Israel fix yeares died : to whom succeeded Ibzan, who ruled seuen yeares : after him Elon was their Iudge, ten yeares : in all which time Israel had peace. Eusebius finds not Elon, whom he calleth Adon, for in the Septuagint, approved in his time, this Judge was omitted. Now before I goe on with the rest, it shall bee necessarie vpon the occasion of the East side of Iordan 300. yeares) to speake somewhat of the times of the Indges, and of the differing opinions among the Diuines and Chronologers: there being found three places of Scriptures touching this point seeming repugnant, or disagree- 10

Iephta's account of the times Iud. 11.28. ( where he faies that Ifrael had then poffet

ing: the first is in this dispute betweene Iephta and Ammon, for the right and posses, fion of Gilead: the second is that of S. Paul Act. 13. the third that which is in the first of Kings. Iephta here challengeth the possession of Gilead for 200. yeares: Saint Paul giveth to the Iudges, as it seemes, from the end of Iosua, to the last of Heli, 450. yeares. In the first of Kings it is taught, that from the departing of Ifrael out of Egypt, to the foundation of Salomons Temple, there were confumed 480. yeares. To the first Beroaldus findeth Iephta's 200. yeares to be but 266. yeares, to wit, 18. of Iofus, 40. of Othoniel, 80. of Aod and Samgar, 40. of Debora, 40. of Gideon, 3. of Abimilech, 22. of Thola, and 22. of Jair : But Jephta (faith Beroaldus) putteth or propo-Id facit nume- seth a certaine number, for an vncertaine: Sie vt dieat annum agt propè trecente simum, 20 ex quo nullus litem ea dere mouerit Ifraeli; So he speaketh (saith he) as meaning, that then it was about or wel-nigh the three hundreth yere, fince Ifrael possessed those Contries, no man making question of their right. Codoman on the contrarie finds more yeares than lephta named by 65. to wit, 365. whereof 71. were spent in Israels captivitie, at severall

yeares, the Ifraelites were in captinitie and vaffalls to their neighbour Princes, and therefore knowing that to name 300. yeares it was enough for prescription, hee omitted the reft.

To instifie this account of 365. yeares, besides the 71. yeares of captinitie or af-30 fliction, to be added to Beroaldus his 266. he addeth also 28. yeares more, and so maketh vp the summe of 365. These 28. yeares hee findeth out thus: 20. yeares hee giues to the Seniors betweene Io/ua and Othoniel: and where Beroaldus alloweth but 18. yeares to Io/ua his gouernment, Codoman accounts that his rule lasted 26. according to Iofephus; whereas S. Augustine and Eusebius give him 27. Melanchton 32. The truth is that this addition of 28. yeares is farre more doubtfull than the other of 71. But though we admit not of this addition, yet by accounting of some part of the yeares of affliction (to wit, 34. yeares of the 71.) if wee adde them to the 266. yeares of Beroaldus, which reckoneth none of thefe, we have the just number of 300. yeares. Neither is it strange that Iephta should leave out more than halfe 40 of these yeares of affliction : secing as it is already said the Ammontes might except against these 71. yeares, and say that during these yeares, or at least a good part of them, the Ifraclites had no quiet possession of the Countries in question. Martin Luther is the Author of a third opinion making those 300. yeares remembred by Iephta, to be 306. which odde yeares, saith he, Iephta omitteth. But because the yeares of enery Iudge as they raigned, cannot make up this number of 306. but doe only compound 266. therefore doth Luther adde to this number, the whole time which Moses spent in the Desarts of Arabia Petran; which fortie yeares of Moses added to the number which Beroaldus findeth of 266. make indeede 306.

But I see nothing in the text to warrant Luthers indgement herein: for in the di- 50 spute betweene Jephta and Ammon for the Land of Gilead, it is written in the person of Ammon in these wordes. Because Israel tooke my Land, when they came up from A gypt from Arnon unto Iaboc, &c now therefore restore those Landes quietly or in peace. So by this place it is plaine that the time is not to bee accounted from Mofes departure out of Ægypt: but from the time that the Land was possess. For it is said, Quià cepit Israel terram meam; Because Israel tooke my Land: and therefore the beginning of this account is to be referred to the time of the taking : which Iephtas answere also confirmeth in these wordes. When Ifrael dwelt in Heshbon, and in her Townes, and in Aroer and in her Townes, and in all the Cities that are by the coast of Arnon 300. yeares: why did yee not then recover them in that space? so as this place speakes it directly, that Israel had inhabited and dwelt in the Cities of Gilead 300. yeares : and therefore to account the times from the hopes or intents, that Ifrael had to possesse it, it seemeth somewhat strained to me; for wee doe not vse to reckon the time of our conquests 10 in France, from our Princes intents or purposes, but from their victories and pos-

Iunius neuerthelesse likes the opinion of Luther, and saies that this time of 200. veares hath reference, and is to take beginning from the first of Iephtas narration: when he makes a briefe repetition of Moses whole journey : to wit, at the sixteenth Verse of the eleventh Chapter of Indges in our translation in these wordes. But when Ifraelcame up from Ægypt, &c. and therefore Moles his 40. yeares (as he thinks) tunins in the 11 are to be accounted, which make the number of 305. yeares : and not only the time of ind. not. in which Ifrael possess Gilead, according to the Text and Iephtas owne wordes: of which I leave the judgement to others; to whom also I leave to judge, whether we 20 may not beginne the 480. yeares, from the deliuerance out of Egypt to the Temple, even from the first departure out of Agypt, and yet finde a more probable reconciliation of S. Pauls and Iephtas account with this reckoning, than any of those that as yet have beene fignified. For first, touching tephtas 300. yeares of possession of the East side of Iordan, it is to be remembred that for a good while before the Israelites possessed it, Sehon and Og had dispossessed Moab and Ammon thereof: so that when the Ifraelites had conquered Sehon and Og, the right of possession, which they possession of the two Kings Sehon and Og, whose right the Israelites had by the law 30 of conquest.

The second place disputed is this of S. Paul Act. 12. that from the end of Issua to Readthe 24 of the beginning of Samuel, there past 450. yeares. And this place Luther understan- 10/112, and the deth also besides the letter, (as I finde his opinion cited by Functius Krent semius, and Funct, coron. fol. Beza, for I have not read his Commentaries. For he accounteth from the death of 4. Beza in his Moses, to the last yeare of Heli, but 357. yeares : and this hee doth the better to ap- Annotations proue the times from the egreffion out of Agypt to the building of the Temple, of the Affix is which in the first King. 6. is said to be 480. yeares.

Now for as much as S. Paul (as it seemes) finds 450. yeares from the death of Io-

had, passed to Israel; and so lephta might say that they had possessed those Countries

200. yeares, reckoning 266. yeares of their owne possession, and the rest of the fua, to the last of Heli, and leaves but 30. yeares for Saul and Samuel, who governed 40 40. for David who ruled 40. and for Salomon who ware the Crowne three whole yeares ere the foundation of the Temple was laid; therefore Luther takes it, that there was errour in the Scribe, who wrate out this peece of Scripture of S. Paul : to wit, Then afterward he gaue unto them Indges about 450. yeares, unto the time of S A- 48,13.20. MVEL the Prophet: the wordes then afterward, being clearly referred to the death or after the death of Iosua, as shall be hereafter proued. But where S. Luke rehearling the wordes of S. Paul wrate 350. yeares (faith Luther) the Scribe in the transcription being deceived by the affinitie of those two Greeke wordes, whereof the one lignifieth 300. and the other 400. wrate Tetracosiois for Triacosiois 400. yeares, for 300. yeares, and 450. for 350. This hee feeketh to strengthen by many arguments: to 30 which opinion Beza in his great Annotations adhereth. A contrarie judgement to this hath Codoman: where Luther and Beza beginne at Moses death, he takes his account from the death of Iv/ua; and from thence to the beginning of Samuel he makes 430 yeares to wit, of the Indges (not reckoning Sampsons yeares) 319 and of yeares of seruitude and affliction under strangers 1 11. The reason why he doth not reckon

Iud.13. Iud.15.11.

Sampsons 20. yeares, is because he thinkes that they were part of the 40. yeares, in which the Philistims are faid to have oppressed Israel. For it is plaine that during all Samplons time they were Lords over Ifrael. So then of the Inages, belides the 111. yeares of seruitude, Codoman reckoneth (as I haue said) 319. yeares, which two fummes put together make 430. yeares, and whereas S. Paul nameth 450. yeares, he finds 20. yeares to make vp S. Pauls number, to have beene spent after the death of losus by the Seniors, before the captivitie of Chushan, or the election of Othoniel: which 27. yeares added to 430. make 450. according to S. Paul. To approve this time of the Elders, he citeth two places of Scriptures, namely the 24. of 10 fua, and the fecond of Inages, in each of which places it is written, that Ifrael ferued the Lord 10 all the daies of Iosva, and all the daies of the Elders that over-lived Iosva, foasto these times of the Elders, Codoman giveth 20 yeares, which make as before 450.according to S. Paul. Neither would it breede any great difficultie in this opinion, if here also the 20 yeares of the Seniors, betweene Tofua and Othoniel, should be denied. For they which denie these yeares and make Othoniels 4c. to beginne presently upon the death of losus, as in the beginning of this reckoning they have 20. yeares lesse than Co.loman, so toward the end of it (when they reckon the yeares of afflictionapart from the yeares of the Iudges) in the number of Sampfons yeares, and of the 40. yeares of the Philistims oppressing the Israelites, they have 20. yeares more than Codoman. For they reckon these 40. yeares of oppression all of them a-part from 20 Sampsons 20. but Codoman as is said makes Sampsons 20. to be the one halfe of the 40. of the Philistims oppressions; so that if the 20. yeares of the Seniors, be not allowed to Codoman, then he may reckon (as the letter of the Text seemes to inforce) that the Philistims in an Inter-regnum, before Sampson judged Ifrael, vexed the Ifraelites 40. yeares besides the 20 while Sampson was their Indge, and so the reckoning will come to 450. yeares betweene the end of Iofina, and the beginning of Samuel, though wee admit not of any Inter-regnum of the Seniors, betweene Iofua and Othoniel: For if the times of their affliction be fummed, they make 111. yeares, to which if we adde the yeares of the Ineges, which are 239, we have the just summe of 450. And this computation either one way or other, may seeme to bee much more probable, than 30 theirs that correct the Text, although we should admit of their correction thereof, and reade with them 350. for 450. For whereas they conceine that this time of 350. yeares, is to beginne immediatly, or soone after the death of Moles: certainly the place of S. Paul doth enidently teach the contrarie, though it bee received for true that there was vitium feriptoris in the rest. For these be S.P. suls wordes: And about the time of 40. yeares, God suffered their manners in the wildernesse: And he destroid seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them by lot. Then afterward he gaue unto them judges about 450. yeares, unto the time of SAMVEL the Prophet. So as first in the eighteenth verse he speaketh of Moses and of his yeares spent in the wildernesse, then in the nincteenth verse he commeth to the acts of Iosua; which 40 were that he destroied seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them by lot. In the twentieth verse it followeth: Then afterward hee gaue them Judges about 450. yeares, & and therefore to reckon from the death of Moles, is wide of S. Pauls meaning, so farre as my weake understanding can pierce it. The only inconvenience of any waight in opinion of Codoman touching this place, in the Acts is that it seemes irreconciliable with the account 1. Reg. 6.11. For if indeede there were fpent 450. yeares betweene the end of Iosua and the beginning of Samuel, certainly there must needes be much more than 480. yeares betweene the beginning of the Israelites iournying from Agypt, and the foundation of the Temple by Salomon. To this difficultie Codoman answereth, that these 480. yeares 1. Reg. 6. 1. must begirne to be reckoned, not in the beginning, but in the ending of their journying from Agypt, which he makes to be 25. yeares after the beginning of Othoniel's gouernment; from whence if we cast the yeares of the Indees, with the yeares of seruitude (which summes according to his account, of which we have already spoken, make 397. yeares) and so to these yeares adde the 40. of Samuel, and Saul, and the 40. of Dauid, and the 3. of Salomon, wee shall have the inst summe of 480. yeares. Neither is it hard (saith he) that the annus egressionis 1. Reg. 6.1. should be undershood egressionis non incipients sed sinite, the yeare of their comming out of £gypt, (too so it is in the originall) or the yeare after they came out of £gypt, may well be understood for the yeare after they were come out thence, that is, after they had ended their wandring from thence. For so wee finde that thinges which were done 40. yeares after they had set foot out of £gypt, are faid to have beene done in their going out of £gypt, as Psal. 114. When Israeleame out of £gypt, lordan was driven back, 10 and Deut. 4.45. These are the tessimonies which M os is spake when they same out of £gypt. And thus sarre it seemes we may very well agree with Codoman, for the interpretation of the word ab exitu, to be as much as guium eximissen, or ab exitu sinite. For pretation of the word ab exitu, to be as much as quium exiuissen, or ab exitu sinito: for if sunius Deut, 4,45. doe well reade quum exiuissen, for in exitu, as it seemes that herein he doth well, why may not we also, to ausside contradiction in the Scripture, exepound ab exitu to be, possigned mexiussen; the contradiction in the Scripture, exepound ab exitu to be cleared is how their iournying should bee said not to have had end vntill the 25. yeare after the victorie of Othoniel. To this Codoman answereth that then it had no end till when all the Tribes had obtained their portions, which happened not vntill this time: at which time the Danites at length feated themselues, as it is declared Ind. 18. For doubtlesse to this time the expedition may most conveniently be referred. And thus without any great inconvenience to him appearing doth Codoman reconcile the account of Iephta, and S. Paul, with that in the first of Kings c.6. Now whereas it is said that the expedition of the Danites was when Ind. 18.16 there was no King in Ifrael: to this Codoman answereth, that it is not necessarie that we should suppose that Othoniel lived all those 40, yeares of rest, of which Iud. 3.11 fo that by the 25. yeare after his victorie, either he might have been dead, or at least as Gideon did, he might have refused all soueraigntie, and so either way it might truly befaid that at this time (to wit, the 25. yeare after Othoniels victoric) there was no King in Israel. This opinion of Codoman, if it were as consonant to other Chro-30 nologers grounding their opinions on the plaine Text, where it is indisputable, as it is in it selferound enough and coherent, might perhaps be received as good : especially confidering that the speeches of S. Paul, have not otherwise found any interpretation, maintaining them as abfolutely true, in fuch manner as they found, and are fet downe. But seeing that he wanteth all helpe of authoritie, we may justly suspect the supposition whereupon his opinion is grounded; it being such as the confent of many Authors would hardly suffice to make very probable. For who hath told Codoman that the conquest of Laish, by the Tribe of Dan, was performed in the fine and twentieth yeare of Othoniel? Or what other probabilitic hath he than his owne conjecture, to show that Othoniel did so renounce the office of a Judge after 40 flue and twentie yeares, that it might then be truly faid there was no King in Ifrael, but every man did that which was good in his owne eies.

Now concerning the rehearfall of the law by Mofes, and the stopping of Iordan, they might indeed be properly said to haue beene, when Ifrael came out of Egypt, like as we say that King Edward the first was crowned when he came out of the holy Land, for so all iournies with their accidents commonly take name from the place either whence or whither they tend. But I thinke he can finde no such phrase of speech in Scripture as limiteth a iourney by an accident, or saith by connerting the proposition, when Iordan was turning back, Ifrael came out of Egypt. Indeed most vnproper it were to give date vnto actions commenced long after, from an expedition sinished long before, namely to say that King Edward at his arrivall out of Palessina, did winne Seatland, or died at Carlie. How may we then beleeve that enterprize performed so many yeares after the division of the Land (which followed the conquest at the time of the deparations).

account of time, feruing as the only guide for certaine ages in facred Chrenologic, lhould not take name and beginning, from that illustrious deliuerance out of Agpr, rehearded often by God himfelfe among the principall of his benefits to Ifrael, where of the very day and moneth are recorded in Scripture (as likewife are the year eard moneth wherein it expired) and the forme of the year ypon that occasion changed; but should have reference to the surprizing of a 1 owne by Soo. men, that robbed a Chappell by the way, and stole from thence Idolls to be their guides, as not going to worke in Gods name? For this accident whereupon Codoman buildeth hath either no time guent to it, or a time farre different from that which he supposeth, and is indeede rather by him placed in such a yeare, because it best stood with his interestical pretation so to have it, than for any certainty or likelihood of the thing it selie.

Wherefore we may best agree with such as affirme that the Apostele S. Paul did not herein labour to fet downe the course of time exactly (a thing no way concerning his purpose) but only to shew that God, who had chosen Israel to be his people, delinered them out of bondage, and ruled them by Indges, and Prophets, voto the time of Saul: did raise vp our Lord lesis Christ out of the seede of Danid the King, in whose succession the Crowne was established, and promise made of a Kingdome that should have no end. Now in rehearing briefly thus much which tended as a Preface to the declaration following (wherein he sheweth Christ to have beene the true (Messas) the Apostle was so farre from labouring to make an exact calculation 20 of times (the Historie being so well knowne and beleeued of the Ierres to whom he preached) that he spake as it were at large of the 40. yeares consumed in the wildernesse, whereof no man doubted, saying that God suffered their manners in the wildernesse about 40. yeares. In like manner he proceeded saying that from the divifion of the Land vnto the daies of Samuel the Prophet, in whose time they required to have a King, there passed about 450. yeares. Neither did he stand to tell them, that an hundred and cleuen yeares of bondage mentioned in this middle while, were by exact computation to be included within the 339, yeares of the Judges: for this had beene an impertment digression from the argument which hee had in hand. Wherefore it is a worke not so needfull as laborious, to search out of this place that 30 which the Apostle did not here intend to teach, when the summe of 480, yeares is so expressly and purposely set downe.

Now that the wordes of S.P.:ul (if there be no fault in the Copie through errour of some Scribe) are not so curiously to be examined in matter of Chronologie, but must be taken as having reference to the memorie and apprehension of the vulgar, it is euident by his ascribing in the same place 40. yeares to the raigne of Saul: whereas it is manifest that those yeares were divided betweene Saul and Samuel, yeathat farr the greater part of them were spent under the government of the Prophet, how focuer they are here included in the raigne of the King. As for those that with so much cunning for fake the generall opinion when it fauoureth not fuch exposition 40 as they bring out of a good minde to helpe where the neede is not ouer-great; I had rather commend their diligence, than follow their example. The wordes of S. Paul were sufficiently instified by Beroaldus, as having reference to a common opinion among the Scribes in those daies, that the 111. yeares of seruitude were to be reckoned a part from the 339 yeares ascribed to the Indges; which accompt the Apostle would not in this place stand to contradict, but rather chose to speake as the vulgar, qualifying it with a quali, where he faith qualiquadringent is & quinquaginta annis; As it were four ehundred and fiftie yeares. But Codoman being not thus contented would needes haue it to be so indeede; and therefore dissoynes the members to make the accompt euen. In so doing he dasheth himselfe against a notable Text, whereupon 50all Anthors have builded (as well they might and ought) that purposely and precifely doth cast up the yeares from the departure out of Egypt, unto the building of Salomons Temple, not omitting the very Moneth it selfe.

faith to his owne interpretation of S. Paul, he thinketh it more needfull to find fome new exposition for that which is off it felle most plaine; than to examine his owne coniecture ypon a place that is full of controuers. Thus by expounding, after a strange methode, that which is manifest by that which is obscure, he loosest himfelle in those wates whereis before him needs had was closely if one should vrge him to give reason of these woo opinions; he must need answere, That Othoniel could not governe above 25, yeares, because then was the taking of Lauly, at which time there was no King in Israel; That the Danites must need shave taken Laish at that time, because else we could not reckon backwards from the soundation of the soundation of the country of the strain of the str

The Historie of the ancient Kings of Trey is vncertaine, in regard both of their originall, and of their continuance. It is commonly held that Teucer and Dardanus were the two founders of that Kingdome: This is the opinion of Virgil: which if he (as Reineceius thinkes) tooke from Berofus, it is the more probable : if Annius borrowed it from him, then it refts vpon the authoritie of Virgil; who futh thus.

Some old Auruncans, I remember well (Though time have made the fame obscure) would tell Of DARDANYS, how borne in Italie; From hence he into Phrygia did flie. And leaving Tuscaine (where he earst had place) With Corytus did faile to Samothrace, But now inthronized he fits on high, In golden Palace of the starrie skie.

But contrarie to this, and to fo many Authors, approuing and confirming it, Reineccius thinkes that these names, Troes, Teucri, and Thraces, are derived from Tiras 40 or Thir as the sonne of laphet: and that the Dardanians, Mysians, and Ascanians, mixt with the Troians, were Germane Nations, descended from Ashkenaz, the sonne of Gomer: of whom the Countrie, Lake, and River of Ascanius in Asia tooke name. That Ashkenaz gaue name to those places and people it is not vnlikely: neither is it vnlikely that the Ascany, Dardani, and many others, did in after-times passe into Europe: that the name of Teucer came of Tiras, the coniccture is somewhat hard. Concerning Teucer, whereas Halicarnasseus makes him an Athenian, I finde none that follow him in the same opinion. Virgil (as is before shewed) reporteth him to be of Crete, whose authoritie is the more to be regarded, because he had good meanes to finde the truth, which it is probable that he carefully fought, and in this did follow: seeing it no way concerned Augustus (whom other-whiles he did flatter) whether Teucer were of Crete or no. Reinescius doth rather embrace the opinion of Diodorus and others, that thinke him a Phrygian, by which report he was the Sonne of Scamander and Ida, Lord of the Countrie, not founder of the Citie; and his Daughter or Neece Batia was the second wife of Dardanus, founder of Troy. Reineccius further thinkes that Atlus raigned in Samothracia, and gauch is Daughter Electra to Corytus, or Coritus: and that these were Parents to Chryse, first wise to Dardanus. Virgil holds otherwise, and the common Tradition of Poets makes Dardanus the some of Electra by Inpiter, which Electra was the Daughter of Allas, and wise to Coritus King of Hetruria, to whom shee bare Insign. The obscuritie of the hissorie; gives leave to Annius of saying what he list. I that some not to vse such liber 10 tie, will forbeare to determine any thing herein. But if Dardanus were the Sonne of Inpiter, it must have beene of some clear Insighter than the Father of those that lived about the Warre of Troy. So is it likewise probable that Atlus the Father of Electra was rather an Insighar than an African, which also is the opinion of Boccac. For (as hath of the beene slid) there were many Insighters, and many of sillings are such as the same of such properties.

was rather an Italian than an African, which allo is the opinion of Boccace. For (as hath often beene faid) there were many Iupiters, and many of allmost leavery name of the Gods, but it was the custome to aferibe to some one the afts of the rest, with all belonging to them. Therefore I will not greatly trouble my selfe with making any narrow search into the seabulous antiquities, but set downe the Pedigree according to the generall same; allowing to Tenter such Parents as Diodorus gives, because others give him none, and carrying the line of Dardanus in manner following.

Concerning the beginning and continuance of the Troian Kingdome, with the length of euery Kings raigne, I have chosen good Authors to bee my guides, that in a Historie, whereon depends the most ancient computation of times among the Greekes, I might not follow incertainties, ill cohering with the consent of Writers, and generall passage of thinges elsewhere done. And first for the destruction of Troy, which was of greater note than any accident befalling that Citie whilest it stood, it is reckoned by Dioderus to be 780. yeares more ancient than the beginning of the 94th. Olympiad. Whereas therefore 372, did passe betweene the beginning of the olympiads, and the first yeare of the 94th. it is manifest that the remainder of 780. yeares, that is, 408. yeares went betweene the destruction 19 of Troy, and the first institution of those games by Iphitus, if the authoritie of Diodorus be good proofe, who elsewhere tells vs, that the returne of the Heratlide, which was 80. yeares after the fall of Troy, was 328. yeares before the first Hereunto agrees the authoritie of Dionisius Halicarnasseus, who placing the foundation of Rome in the first of the seventh Olympiad, that is foure and twentie yeares after the beginning of those games, accounts it 432 later than the fall of Troy. Solin Polibifica Solinus in expresse wordes makes the institution of the Olympiads by Iphitus, whom he calleth Iphidus, 408. yeares later than the destruction of Troy. The summe is easily collected by necessarie inference out of divers other places in the same 20 Eufeb deprep. booke. Hereunto doth Eufebius reckoning exclusively agree : and Eratolihenes Enanglio. 23. (as hee is cited by Clemens Alexandrinus) makes vp out of many particulars, the fame totall fumme, wanting but one yeare, as reckoning likewife exclu-

> The other collections of divers Writers that are cited by Clemens in the same place, doe neither cohere any way nor depend vpon any collaterall Historie, by which they may be verified.

The destruction of Troy being in the yeare before the Olympiads foure hundred and eight: wee must seeke the continuance of that from the beginning to the end out of Eulebius, who leades vs from Dardanus on-wards through the raignes of 30 foure Kings, by the space of two hundred and fine and twentie yeares, and after of Priamus, with whom also at length it ended. As for the time which paffed vnder Laomedon, wee are faine to doe, as others have done before vs, and take it vpon trust from Annus his Authors; beleeuing Manetho fo much the rather, for that in his accompt of the former Kings raignes and of Priamus, he is found to agree with Eusebius, which may give vs leave to thinke that Annius hath not herein corrupted him. But in this point we neede not to be very scrupulous : for seeing that no Hiftorie or accompt of time depends upon the raigne of the former Kings, but only vpon the rune of the Citie vnder Priamus, it may suffice that wee are carefull to place that memorable accident in the due yeare.

True it is that some objections app aring waightie, may be alleadged in maintenance of different computations, which with the answeres I purposely omit, as not willing to dispute of those yeares, wherein the Greekes knew no good forme of a yeare; but rather to make narration of the actions which were memorable, and acknowledged by all Writers, whereof this destruction of Trey was one of the most renowned.

The first enterprise that was vnder-taken by generall consent of all Greece was the last Warre of Troy, which hath beene famous even to this day, for the numbers of Princes and valiant Commanders there affembled: the great battailes fought with variable successe: the long indurance of the siege; the 50 destruction of the great Citie; and the many Colonies planted in fundry Countries, as well by the remainder of the Troians, as by the victorious Greekes after their vnfortunate returne. All which thinges with innumerable circumflances of especiall note, haue beene deliuered vnto posteritie, by the excellent wits of many writers, especially by the Foems of that great Homer, whose verses have giuen immortalitieto the Nation, which might else perhaps have bene buried in obliuion, among other worthy deedes done both before and fince that time. For it is true which Horace faith :

> Vixere fortes ante AGAMEMNONA Multi, sed omnes illachrimabiles Vrgentur, ignotique longa Nocte: carent quià vate sacro.

Many by valour haue deferu'd renowne Ere AGAMEMNON: yet lycall opprest Vnder long night, vnwept for and vnknowne: For with no facred Poet were they bleft.

Yet so it is, that whilest these writers have with strange fables, or ( to speake the best of them) with Allegories farre strained, gone about to inlarge the commendations of those noble vndertakers: they have both drawne into suspition that great vertue which they fought to adorne, and filled after-ages with almost as much ignorance of the Historic, as admiration of the persons. Wherefore it is expedient that wee seeke for the knowledge of such actions, in Histories; learning their qualities who did menage them of Poets, in whose works are both profit & delight: yet fmall profit to those which are delighted ouermuch; but such as can either interpret their fables, or separate them from the naked trueth, shall finde matter in Poems, not vnworthy to bee regarded of Historians. For those thinges excepted which are gathered out of Homer, there is very little, and not without much difagreement of Authours, written of this great warre. All writers confent with Homer, that the rape of Helen by Paris the sonne of Priamus, was the cause of taking armes: but how he was hereunto emboldened it is doubtfull.

ð. I I. Of the Rape of HELEN: and strength of both sides for the warre.

Erodotus fetcheth the cause of this rape from very farre; saying, That whereas the Phanicians had rauished to, and carried her into Erret. the Greekes to bee reuenged on the Barbarians, did first raugh Europa whom they brought out of Phanicia into Creta; and afterward Medes, whom they fetcht from Co'chos, denying torestore her to her father, till fuch time as they might be fatisfied for the rape of 10. By these deedes of the Greekes, Paris (as the same Herodotus affirmes) was imboldened to doe the like; not fearing such reuenge as insued. But all this narration seemes friuolous, For what had the King of Colchos to doe with the injurie of the Phanicians ? or how could the Greekes, as in reuenge of 10, plead any quarrell against him, that neuer had heard the name of Phanicians? Thucydides a writer of vnquestionable sinceritie maketh it plaine, that the name of Barbarians was not vsed at all in Homers time, which was long after the warre of Troy; and that the Greekes themselves were not then called all by one name Hellenes, as afterwards. So that it were vnreafonable to think, that they should have fought revenge vpon all Nations as barbarous, for the iniu-30 rie receiued by one : or that all people else thould have esteemed of the Greekes, as of a people opposed to all the world; and that even then when as the Greekes had not yet one common name among themselves. Others with more probabilitie say, that the rape of Helen was to procure the redelinery of Helione, King Priamus his fister, taken formerly by Hercules, and given to Telamon. This may have been etrue.

for Telamon (as it seemes) was a cruell man, seeing his owne sonne Teucer durst not come in his fight, after the warre of Troy, but fled into Cypres, onely because his bro. ther Aiax (which Teucer could not remedie) had flaine himfelfe. Yet, were it fo that Hesione was ill intreated by Telamon, it was not therfore likely, that Priamus her brother would feeke to take her from her husband, with whom the had lived about thirtie yeeres, and to whom she had borne children which were to succeede in his Dominion. Whereupon I thinke that Paris had no regard, either to the rape of Europa, Medaa, or Hesione: but was meerely incited by Venus, that is by his lust, to do that which in those dayes was very common. For not onely Greekes from Barbarians, and Barbarians from Greekes, as Herodotus discourseth, but all people were ac- 10 customed to steale women and cattell, if they could by strong hand or power get them; and having stollen them, either to sell them away in some farre Country, or keepe them to their owne vie. So did Thefeus and Pirythous attempt Proferpina; and fo did Thefeus (long before Paris) rauish Helen. And these practises, as it appeares in Thucydides were so common, that none durst inhabite necre vnto the sea, for searcof pyracie, which was accounted a trade of life no leffe lawfull than merchandife: wherefore Tyndareus the father of Helen, considering the beautie of his daughter, and the rape which Thefeus had made, caused all her wooers who were most of the principall men in Greece, to binde themselues by solemne oath, that if shee were taken from her husband, they should with all their might helpe to recouct her. This 20 done, hee gaue free choyce of a husband to his daughter, who chose Menelaus brother to Agamemnon. So the cause which drew the Greekes vnto Troy in reuenge of Helens rape, was partly the oath which so many Princes had made vnto her father Tyndareus. Hereunto the great power of Agamemnon was not a little helping; for Agamemnon besides his great Dominions in Peloponnesus, was Lord of many I. lands: he was also rich in money, and therefore the Areadians were well contented to follow his pay, whom he imbarqued for Troy in his owne ships, which were more than any other of the Greeke Princes brought to that expedition. Thus did all Greece, either as bound by oath, or ledde by the reputation and power of the two brethren, Agamemnon and Menelaus; or desirous to partake of 20 the profit and honour in that great enterprise; take armes against the Trojans. The Greekes Fleet was (by Homers account) 1200. fayle or thereabouts: but the veffels were not great: for it was not then the manner to build shippes with deckes, onely they vsed (as Thucydides saith) small shippes, meete for robbing on the Sea; the least of which carried fiftie men, the greatest 120. euery man(except the Captaines) being both a Marriner and a Souldier. By this proportion it appeares that the Gracian armie confifted of 100000 men or thereabout. This was the greatest armie that cuer was raifed out of Greece: and the greatnesse of this amie, doth well declare the strength and power of Troy, which tenne whole yeeres did stand out against such forces: yet were the Troians which inhabited the Citie not the tenth part of this 40 number, as Agamemnon faid in the second of Homers Iliades; but their followers and aydes were very many and strong. For all Phrygia, Lycia, Mijsia, and the greatest part of Asa the lesse, tooke part with the Troians. The Amazones also brought them fuccour. And Rhe [us out of Thrace, and Memnon out of Allyria (though some thinke out of Ethiopia) came to their defence.

ð. III.

Of the Gracians tourney, and Embassage to Troy, and of Helenaes being detained in Ægypt; and of the Sacrificing of Iphigenia of Iphigenia

Herefore the Greekes vnwilling to come to tryall of armes, if things might bee compounded by treatic, sent Menelaus and Vlisses Embassa-dours to Troy; who demainded Helen and the goods were taken with her out of Menelau his house. What answere the Troins made hereunto it is wecertain. Herodous from the report of the Expytian Priests makes it very probable that Helen was taken from Paris before his returne to Troy.

makes it very probable that Helen was taken from Paris before his returne to Troy.

The fumme of his discourse is this.

Ægypt, was accused for the rape of Helen by some bondmen of his, that had taken

Sanctuarie. Proteus then King of Agypt, finding the accusation true by examination, detained Helen, and the goods taken with her, till her husband should require them: dismissing Paris without further punishment, because hee was a stranger. When therefore the Greekes demaunding Helen had answere, that she was in Egypt: they thought themselves deluded, and thereupon made the warre, which ended with the ruine of Troy. But when after the Citie taken, they perceived indeed she had not been there, they returned home, sending Menelaus to aske his wife of Proteus. Homer and the whole Nation of Poets (except Eurypides) vary from this Hiftorie, thinking it a matter more magnificent and more gracefull to their Poems, for the retaining of a faire Ladie, than that they endured all by force, because it lay not in their power to redeliuer her. Yet in the fourth of his Odysses, Homer speakes of Menelaus his being in Agypt, before he returned home to Sparte; which voyage it were not easily beleeved, that he made for pleasure : and if he were driven thither by contrary windes, much more may we thinke that Paris was likely to have beene an driven thither by foule weather. For Paris immediatly vpon the rape committed, was enforced to fly, taking fuch windes as hee could get, and rather enduring any storme, than to commit himselfe to any Hauen in the Greeke scas; whereas Menelaus might have put into any port in Greece, and there have remained with good entertainment, vntill such time as the winde had come about, and served for his Na-

One great argument Herodotus brings to confirme the faying of the Agyptian Priests, which is, that if Helen had beene at Troy, it had beene vtter madnesse for Priamus to fee fo many miferies befall him, during the warre, and fo many of his sonnes slaine for the pleasure of one, who neither was heire to the Kingdome (for 40 Hecfor was elder) nor equall in vertue to many of the rest. Besides, it may seeme that Lucian spake not more pleasantly than truely, when he said that Helen, at the warre of Troy, was almost as old as Queene Hecuba, considering that she had beene ranished by Thefeus the companion of Hereules, who tooke Troy when Priamus was very young; and confidering further, that the was fifter to Caffer and Pollux (the and Pollux being faid by some to have beene twinnes) who failed with the Argonautes, having Telamon the father of Aiax in their companie before the time that Hesione was taken; on whom Telamon begat Aiax, that was a principall commander in the Troian warre. But whether it were fo, that the Troians could not, or would not reftore Helen, so it was that the Embassadours returned ill contented, and not very 50 well intreated; for there wanted not some that admised to have them slaine. The Greekes hereupon incensed, made all haste towards Troy: at which time Calchas (whom some say to have beene a runnagate Trojan, though no such thing be found in Homer) filled the Captaines and all the Hoste with many troublesome answeres and diminations. For he would have Agamemnons daughter facrificed to appeale

Снар.14.5.4.

Diana, whose anger he said withstood their passage. Whether the young Lady were facrificed, or whether (as some write) the Goddesse was contented with a hinde, it is not needfull heere to be disputed of. Sure it is that the malice of the deuill which awaits for al opportunities, is neuer more importunate than where mensignorance is most. Calchas also told the Greekes, that the taking of Troy was impossible till some fatall impediments were remoued and that till tenne yeeres were past, the towne should hold out against them. All which notwithstanding the Greekes proceeded in their enterprise; vnder the commaund of Agamemnen, who was accompanied with his brother Menelaus; Achilles the most valiant of all the Greekes, his friend Patreelus, and his Tutor Phanix; Aiax and Tencer the sonnes of Telamon; Idomeneus, 10 and his companion Meriones; Nestor, and his sonnes Antilochus, and Thrasymedes; Viffes, Mnestheus the sonne of Petreus, captaine of the Athenians: Diomedes the sonne of Tydeus, a man of fingular courage; the wife and learned Palamedes; Mcalaphus, and lalmenis, the sonnes of Mars, who had failed with the Argonauts; Philottetes also the sonne of Pasan, who had the arrowes of Hercules, without which Calchas said that the Citie could not be taken; Aiax the sonne of Oileus, Peneleus, Thoas, Eumelus, Tifandrus, Eurypilus, Athamas, Sthenelus, Tlepolemus the sonne of Hercules; Podalyrius, and Machson, the sonnes of Asculapius: Epeus who is said to have made the woodden horse, by which the towne was taken; and Protesiaus, who first leapt on shore, neglecting the Oracle that threatned death to him that landed first.

of the Actes of the Gracians at the fiege.

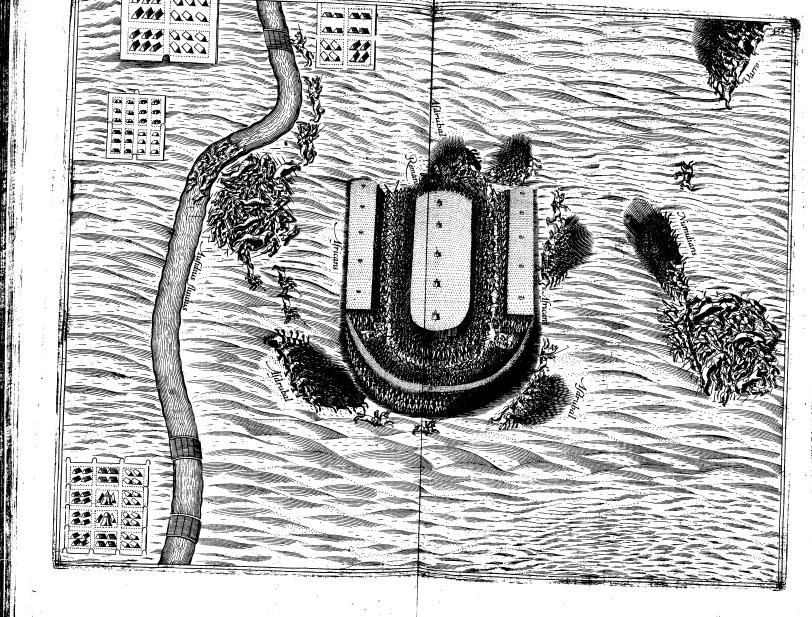

Hele and many other of leffe note, arriving at Troy, found fuch sharpe entertainment, as might easily perswade them to thinke that the war would bee more than one yeeres worke. For in the first encounter they lost Protestlaus, whom Hetter slew, and many other, without any great harme done to the Trojans: sauc onely that by their numbers 30 of men, they wonne ground enough to incampe themselues in, as appeareth in Thueydides. The principall impediment which the Greekes found, was want of victuals, which grew vpon them by reason of their multitude, and the smallnesse of their vessels, wherein they could not carry necessaries for such an armic. Hereupon they were compelled to fend some part of their men, to labour the ground in Cherronesse: others to robbe vpon the sea for the reliefe of the Campe. Thus was the warre protracted nine whole yeeres, and either nothing done, or if any skirmilhes were, yetcould the towne receive little losse by them, having equal numbers to maintaine the field against such Greekes as continued the siege, and a more saferetrait, if the enemie got the better.

Wherefore Ouid faith, that from the first yeare till the tenth, there was no fighting at all : and Heraelides commends as very credible the report of Heraelicus; That the Greekes did not lye before Troy the first nine yeeres: but onely did beate vp and downe the feas, exercifing their men, and inriching themselues, and so by wasting the enemies Country, did blocke up the towne, unto which they returned not untill the fatall time drew neere, when it should be subuerted.

This is confirmed by the enquirie which Priamus made, when the Greeke Princes came into the field, the tenth yeere, for he knew none of them, and therefore fitting vpon an high tower (as Homer tels) he learned their names of Helen: which though it is like to be a fiction, yet could it not at all have beene supposed that hee should so beeignorant of them, if they had shewed themselves before the towne so many yeerestogether. Betweenethese relations of Thucydides and Herodicus, the disference is not much, the one faying that a few of the Greekes remained in the Campe before Troy, whilest the reft made purueyance by land and sea : the other that the whole armie did spend the time in wasting the sta-coastes. Neither doe the Poets greatly distagree from these authours: for they make report of many townes and I-lands wasted, and the people carried into Captinitie; in which actions Achilles was imployed, whom the arme could not well, nor would have spared, if any service of importance had been to bee performed before the Citie. Howsocuer it was, this is agreed by generall consent, that in the beginning of that summer, in which Troy was taken, great booties were brought into the Campe; and a great pestilence arose among the Greekes: which Homer saith that Apollo sent in reurage of his Prickes daughter, whom Agamemnen had resused to let goe, for any rainsome but to theratikes interpreting the place, saith that by Apollo was meant the Sunne: who raised pestilent sogges, by which the armie was infected, being lodged in a moorish peece of ground. And it might well bee that the campe was over-pestered with those, who had been eabroide, and now were lodged all close together: having also grounded their shippes within the for tifications.

About the fame time arose much contention betweene Agamemnon and Abbillerabout the bootie, whereof Agamemnon, as Generall, having first chosen for his part a aptive woman, and Abbiller in the second place chosen for himselfe an other, then Ains, Viyser, and so the rest of the Chieftaines in order: While the Sooth saver and the Abbiller abbi

The Troids were now relieved with great faccours, all the neighbour Countries haufng fent them ayde: pairtly drawnero that warre by their Communicates 30 who affifted related for morey, wherewith be abounded when the warte beganne (as appeares by his words in Homer) or for lotte of firm Cife and his formes, or hope of marriage with some of his many and faire daughters, partly also (as we may well gueffe) incited by the wrongs received of the dreeks, when they walked the count tryes adioyning with Trop. So that when Hellor Mued out of the towne ; thee was little inferiour to his enemies in frambers of men, or qualitie of their Leaders. The principall Captaines in the Trotal aprile, were Hetter, Parts, Derphobia, Helenis and theother formes of Primar ( Engle; Ameno, and his tonnes, relydether, Supple don, Glancus, Afine, and the formes of Painthus, befores Rhofes, who will finde the first night of his arrivall, Menman; Queene Penthestier, and offices whereanie to 40 wards the end of the warre. Betweene there and the overthe were many batters fought: the greatest of which wire; that at the combeofking the vion the plante! and an other at the very trenches of the Campe, wherein the Brake through the fortifications of the Greeker, and began to fire their thips; at which winter the fonne of Telemon with his brother Tener, were in that mer the whely men of hore that remaining vinwounded, made head again the work which the nate of the order was almost desperate and an arrangement of the contract of the

Another battell(for so airtiquitie cals it) of bather the satist persewed, with sought by sarockus, who hadding obtained feare, drew forth Arbiter froops releasing the wearie Greekes with affelh supply. Agamemnon, Diomedes, Poffer, satist affects of the Princes, though fore wounded, yet were driven to put on armour, and with help of Patrockus, tepelled the Trains very hardly. For in that sight Patrockus was lost, and his body, with much contention recovered by his friends, was brought backe into, the Campe: the armour of Achilles which he had put on, being torne from him by Hector. It was the manner of those warres, having stained aman, to strippe him and hale away his bodie, not reftoring it without ransome, if he were one of marke. Of the vulgar little reckoning was made: for they fought allon foote, flightly armed, and commonly followed the fuccesse of their captaines; who rode not vpon horses, but in Chariots, drawne by two or three horses, which were guided by fome truitie followers of theirs, which draue vp and downe the field, as they were directed by the Captaines, who by the swiftnesse of their horses presenting them-felues where neede required, threw first their lauelins, and then alighting fought on foote, with fwords and battel-axes, retiring into the rankes of the footmen, or elle returning to their Charlots when they found cause, and so began againe with a new dart as they could get it, if their old were loft, or broken. Their armes defensine to were helmets, breft-plates, bootes of braffe or other mettall, & shields commonly of leather, plated ouer. The offentiue were fwords and battel-axes at hand; and ftones, arrowes or darts when they fought at any distance. The vse of their Chariots (befides the fwiftnesse) was to keepe them from wearinesse, whereto the leaders were much subject, because of their armour, which the strongest and stoutest warre hea-nicft : also that from them they might throw their Jauelins downewardes, with the more violence. Of which weapon I finde not that any carried more than one or two into the field: wherefore they were often driven to returne to their Tents for a new one, when the old was gone. Likewise of armours they had little change any pecce were loft or broken, he was driven to repaire it with the like if he had any fitting, taken from fome Captaine whom hee had flaine, and stripped : or else to borrow of them that had by such meanes gotten some to spare. Whereas therefore Achilles had loft his armour which Hector (as is faid before) had taken from the body of Paireslus, he was faine to awaite the making of new, ere he could enter the fight: whereof he became very defirous, that he might reuenge the death of Patro.

his concubine Brileis; but giving him very great gifts, and exculing former matters not onely put the Traises to the worst, but also slew the valiant Hector, whom (if Homer may herein be believed) hee chaced three times about the walles of Troy.

But great question may bee made of Homers truth in this narration. For it is not likely that Hector would stay alone without the Citic (as Homer doth report of him)

when all the Trojans were fled into it a nor that he could leave ouer the rivers of Xan-

thus and Simois, as he must have done in that flight : nor that the Troians perceiving

Hector in such an extremitie, would have forborne to open some of their gates and let him in, But this is reported only to grace Achilles, who having (by what meanes focuer) flaine the noble Hector, did not only carry away his dead bodie, as the cu-

them; tyed him to his Chariot; and dragged him shamefully about the field, selling the dead bodie to his father Priamus for a very great ransome. But his crueltic and conetousnesse were not long vnreuenged; for he was shortly after slaine with an arrow by Paris, as Homer layes in the Scean gate, or as others in the Temple of Apollo, whither he came to have married Polyxena the daughter of Priamus, with whom he was too farre in loue, hauing flaine so many of her brethren, and his body was ranfomed (as Lycophran faith) at the felfe fame rate that Hectors was by him fold for.

Not long after this, Penthefiles Queene of the Amazons arrived at Troy; who after

Of the taking of Troy, the wodden Horse, the Booke of DARES and DYCTIS, the Colonies of the reliques of Troy.

Inally after the death of many worthy persons, on each side, the Cities was taken by night, as all writers agree: but whether by the treasons of the many and antenor; or by a wodden Horse, as the Poets, and common same (which followed the Poets) have delivered, it is vectoratine. Some write that you one of the gates of Troy called Seas, was the image of a horse, and that the Greekes entring by that gate, gaue occasion to the report, that the Citie was taken by an artificiall horse. It may well bee that with some wodden engine, which they called an Horse, they either did batter the wals, as the Romans in after-times yied to doe with the Ramme: or scaled the wals vponthe sudden and so tooke the Citie. As for the hiding of men in the hollow bodie of a wodden horse, it had beene a desperate aduenture, and seruing to no purpose. For either the Trojans might have perceived the deceit, and slaine all those Princes of Greece, that were inclosed in it (which also by such as maintaine this re-20 port they are faid to have thought vpon) or they might have left it a fewe dayes without the Citie (for it was valikely, that they should the very first day both conclude vpon the bringing it into the towne, and breake downe their walles vpon the fuddaine to doe it ) by which meanes they who were shut into it, must have perished for hunger, if they had not by iffuing forth vnscasonably discoursed the inuention. Whereas further it is faid, that this horse was built so high and great, that it could not bee brought into the towne through any of the gates, and that therefore the Troians were faine to pull downe a part of their wall, to make way for it, through which breach the Greekes did afterwards enter: it is hereby manifest that the inclosing of so many principall men was altogether needlesse, considering that 30 without their helpe there was way fufficient for the armie, so that the surpriling of any gate by them was now to no purpose.

Ion Baptiffa Gramay in his Historic of Asia, discoursing of this war, shith that the Greekes did both batter the wall with a wodden engine, and were also let into the Citie by Antenor, at the Seean gate: the townsmen sleeping and drinking without feare or care, because the fleete of the Grecians had housted faile, and was gone the day before to the Ile of Tenedos, thereby to bring the Troians into fecuritie. That the Citie was betrayed the bookes of Dares and Lielys must proue, which whicher we now have the same that were by them written, it may be suspected; for surely they who have made mention of these writers in auncient times, would not, as they 40 did, have followed the reports of Homer and others quite contradictorie in most points to these two authors, without once taking notice of the opposition, which they having ferued in that warre made against the Common report had it not been that either those bookes were euen in those times thought friuolous; or else contained no such repugnancie to the other authours as now is found in them.

Also concerning the number of men slaine in this warre which Dares and Dystis fay to have been about 600000. on the Troian lide, and more than 800000. of the Greekes, it is a report meerely fabulous; for a fmuch as the whole fleete of the Greekes was reckoned by Homer, who extolled their armie and deedes as much as hee could, to bee somewhat lesse than 1200. soile, and the armye therein transpor-30 ted over the Greeke leas, not much about 100000 men according to the rate formerly mentioned. But it is the common fashion of men to extol the deeds of their Auncients: for which cause both Homer magnified the Captains of the Greekes, that forned in the war; and Firzul with others were as diligent in commending & extolling the Troi. ns and their Citie, from which the Romanes descended. long after in the warre which Xernes the Persian King made against all Greece, did not forbcare to vaunt of the great cunning which Mnefleus the sonne of Peteus had shewed, in marshalling the Grecien army before Troy: whereupon, as if it had beene a matter of much consequence, they were so proud, that they refused to yeeld vnto Gelon King of almost all Sielly, the Admiraltie of their Seas, notwithstanding that hee promised to bring 200. good fighting ships, and 30000 men for their defence.

The like vanitie possessed many other Cities of Greece, and many Nations in these parts of the world, which have striven to bring their descent from some of the Princes, that warred at Troy: all difficulties or vnlikelihoods in fuch their Pedigree notwithstanding. But those Nations which indeed, or in most probabilitie came of 10 the Troians, were the Albanes in Italy; and from them the Romanes, brought into that Countrey by Aneas : the Venetians first seated in Padira; and the Countrie adioyning by Antenor: the Chaonians planted in Epirus by Helenus, the sonne of King Priamus. To which Hellanicus addeth that the posteritie of Hestor did resemble such of the Trojans as were left, and raigned over them about Troy.

0. VI.

Of the distresses and dispersions of the Greekes returning from Troy.

Oncerning the Greekes, they tasted as much miserie as they had brought upon the Trojans. For Thucidides notes that by reason of their long abode at the fiege, they found many alterations when they returned fothat many were driven by their borderers from their auncient seats: many were expelled their Countries by faction: some were flaine anone after their arrivall: others were debarred from the Soucraigntie among their people, by such as had stayed at home. The cause of all which may feeme to have beene the dispersion of the armie, which weakened much by the salamities of that long warre, was of little force to repell injuries, being divided into 30 fo many peeces under seuerall Commaunders, not very well agreeing. For (besides other quarrels ariling vpon the dinision of the bootie, and the like occasions) at the time when they should have set faile, Agamemnon and his brother fell out, the one being desirous to depart immediatly, the other to stay and performe some sacrifices to Minerus. Hereupon they fell to hot wordes, halfe the fleet remaining with Agsmemnon, the rest of them sailing to the Ile of Tenedos; where when they arrived, they could not agree among themselves, but some returned back to Agamemnon; others were dispersed, each holding his owne course. But the whole Fleet was fore vexed with tempelts: for Pallas ( as Homer faith) would not bee perswaded in

They who returned fafe were Neftor, and Pyrrhus, whom Orefles afterward flew: alfo Idomeneus, and Philocetetes, who neuertheleffe, as Vingilltels, were driven soone after to seeke new scats: Idomeneus among the Salentines, and Philostetes at Petiliain Italie. Agamemnon likewise returned home, but was forthwith slaine by his wife and by the adulterer Ægysthus, who for a while after vsurped his Kingdome. Menelaus wandring long vpon the Seas, came into Agypt, either with Helen, or (as may rather seeme) to setch her. Visses, after ten yeeres, having lost all his company, got home in poore cstate, with much adoe recouring the mastershippe of his owne house. All the rest either perished by the way, or were driven into exile, and sime to feeke out new habitations.

Ains the sonne of Oileus was drowned; Teucer fled into Cyprus; Diomedes to King Daunus, who was Lord of the lapyges in Apulia; some of the Locrians were driven into Affricke, others into Italie, all the East part whereof was called Magna Gracia, by reason of so many townes which the Greekes were driven to erect to etect upon that coast. Finally it appeares in Homer that the Greetan Ladies, whose husbands had beeneat the warre of Trey, were wont to call it; The place where the Greekes suffered miserie, and the valuekie Citie not to be mentioned. And thus much for Troy and those that warred there: the ouerthrow of which Citie, as hath beene faid, happened in the time of Habdon Judge of Ifrael, whom Samfon after a variance or Interregnum for certaine yeeres succeeded.

CHAP. XV.

Of SAMSON, ELI, and SAMVEL.

Of SAMSON.

HE birth and actes of Samson are written at large in 2970. the 13.14.15. and 16. of Indges; and therefore I shall not need to make a repetition therof. But these things I gather out of that Storie. First that the Angell of God forbad the wife of Manoah the mother of Samfon, to drinke wine or ftrong drinke, or to cate any unclean meate, after the was conceined with childe, because those strong liquors hinder the strength, and us it were wither and thrinke the child in the mothers wombes Though this were even the counsell of Godhimselfe, and deliuered by his Angell, yet it feemeth that many women of this age have not read, or at least will not believe this precept: the most part for bearing nor drincks, 20 nor meats, how ilrong or vncleane focuer, filling themselues with all forts of wines, and with artificiall drincks farre more forcible: by reason whereof, so many wretched feeble bodies are borne into the world, and the races of the able and strong men

Secondly it is to be noted, that the Angell of God refused the facrifice which Manosh would have offered him, commaunding him to present it vnto the Lord : and therefore those that professe diuination by the helpe of Angels, to whom also they facrifice, may affuredly know that they are Deuils who accept therof, and not good Angels, who receive no worthip that is proper to God.

Thirdly, this Samfon was twice betrayed by his wines, to wit, by their impor-40 tunitie and deceitfull teares: by the first he lost but a part of his goods: by the second his life. Quem nullavis superare potvit, voluptas euertit; il'hom no force could ouermafter, Voluptuousnelle ouerturned.

Fourthly we may note, that he did not in all deliuer Ifrael from the oppression of the Philistims; though in some fort he reuenged, and defended them : for notwithstanding that he had slaine 30, of them in his first attempt, burnt their Corne in haruest time, and given them a great overthrow instantly vponit: yet so much did Israel feare the Philissims, as they assembled 3 000 men out of inda, to besiege Samfon in the rocke or mountaine of Etam, vling these wordes. Knowest not thou that the Philiflims are Rulers over vs? &c. After which they bound him, and delive-50 red him vnto the Philistims, for feare of their reuenge; though he was no sooner loofened, but he gaue them another ouerthrow and flew 1000. with the lawbone of

Lastly, being made blinde, and a prisoner by the treason of his wise, hee was content to end his owne life, to be auenged of his enemies, when he pulled downe the pillars of the house at the feast wherto they sent for Samson, to deride him, till which time he bare his affliction with patience: but it was truely faid of Seneca; Patientia Capelala vertitur in furorem, Patience often wounded is converted into furie : neither is it at any time so much wounded by paine and losse, as by derision and contumelie.

Of Eliand of the Arketaken, and of DAGONS fall, and the fending backe of the Arke.

his house, for the wickednesse of his sonnes, which he suppressed not, neither did he punish them according to their deserts: whose sinnes were horrible, both in abusing the Sacrifice, and prophaning and polluting the holy places: though Leui Ben Gerson to extenuate this filthie offence of forcing the women by the fonnes of Eli, hath a contrarie opinion. In this time therefore it pleased God to cast the Israelites vnder the swords of the Philistims; of whom there perished in the first incounter 4000, and in the second battell 30000, footmen; among whom the fonnes of Eli being flaine, their 20 father (hearing the lamentable fuccesse) by falling from his chaire, brake his necke, Hee was the first that obtained the High-Priesthood of the stocke of Ithamar the fonne of Auron, before whose time it continued successively in the race of Elegzar the eldest brother of Ithamar: for A.ron was the first, Eleazar the second, Phinees the fonne of Eleazar the third, Abifue the fonne of Phinees the fourth, his fonne Bocci the fift, Ozs the some of Bocci the fixt, and then Eli, as Iosephus and Lyranis out of divers 1. Chres. 6. ed after Eli to the time of Salomon who cast out Abiathar, and established Sadock and Achimaas and their successors. The Arke of God which Israel brought into the field, was in this battell taken by the Philistims. For as David witnesseth. God 30

Now as it pleased Godat this time, that the Arke whereby himselfe was represented, should fall into the hands of the Heathen, for the offences of the Priests and people: so did he permitthe Chaldeans to destroy the Temple built by Salomon; the Romanes to ouerthrow the second Temple; and the Turkes to ouerthrow the Christian Churches in Asia and Europe. And had not the Israelites put more confidence in the facrament, or representation which was the Arke, then in God himfelfe, they would have observed his Lawes, and served him onely : which when so uer they did, they were then victorious. For after the captiuitie they had no Arke 40 at all, nor in the times of the Machalees: and yet for their pietie it pleased God to make that familie as victorious, as any that garded themselues by the signe in stead of the substance. And that the Arke was not made to the end to be carried into the field as an enligne; David witnessed when he fled from Absalon. For when the Priests would have carried the Arke with him; he forbad it, and caused it to be returned into the Citie, vling these words. If I shall finde tauour in the eyes of the Lord, hee will bring mee againe: if not, let him doe to me as feemeth good in his eyes.
